Serious reports concerning the German Emperor's condition are again in circulation. His despondency, which has been increased by the change from the blue sky of San Remo to the severe frost and deep snow of Berlin, causes great anxiety.

The whole northern and eastern portion of Germany has been visited by a very severe snow storm. There is so much ice that communication with Sweden has been suspended for ten days and with Denmark for six days. The Swedish envoys, appointed to attend the funeral of Emperor William could not reach Berlin. Disastrous floods are reported throughout Hungary. Thirty villages have been ruined and the town of Szathmar Nemeth has been partly destroyed. The towns of Bekes and Csaba are menaced, and the inhabitants are struggling for their lives against the overflow of the river Koros. Many houses have fallen.

A pamphlet condemning in moderate terms Russia's reactionary policy and predicting internal disasters, is being circulated in the highest circles of St. Petersburg. The pamphlet is remarkable for the elegance of its language. The police have so far failed to discover the authors of the work.

The anniversary of the insurrection in Paris was celebrated by the communists with the usual banquets. A notable feature of the gatherings was the denunciation of General Boulanger in which the speakers indulged. The royalist papers and papers representing nearly every shade of opinion are dead against him.

LODGE NOTES.

The forty-first anniversary of the establishment of the Harugari order was celebrated by five South Side lodges in Chicago. This is a German relief and aid lodge.

The Supreme Council Royal Arcanum filed a bill of interpleader in the Superior Court in this city to decide who is entitled to a $3,000 policy on the life of a member of lodge No. 450.

Thirty-five resident members of the Sigma Chi College secret society banqueted at the Richelieu last night. What they did besides dine is one of the mysteries which no member will divulge.—Inter Ocean.

Henry K. Wheeler of Philadelphia, Supreme President of the Order of Tonti, came to Chicago last week to hold a district convention. Mayor John A. Roche was called out to make an address and a banquet closed the affair.

A meeting of the Washington members of the Chi Psi Fraternity organized a Washington Alumni Association, electing Senator Palmer of Michigan president and General F. D. Sewall, vice-president. Don M. Dickinson, Postmaster General, member of the Chi Psi Chapter of the University of Michigan, was present at the meeting.

The Household of Ruth, No. 44, Grand United Order of Odd fellows (colored), held its thirteenth anniversary entertainment lately in this city. Rev. Jordon Chavis made a few remarks, in which he scored the members for their desire to dance on such occasions, and hoped they would be able to get through the evening without tacking a ball on the end of the entertainment.

A few days since a prominent Indiana Democrat, Dr. J. W. Stone, was arrested on a charge of murder. It is claimed that he killed a Union soldier named Pollard during the war at the bidding of the Knights of the Golden Circle. According to the confession of Quackenbush, he and Stone were detailed by the lodge to murder Pollard to prevent his serving draft papers on Anderson, another member of the lodge. A plot was also laid to murder all officers serving draft papers.

Some months ago John E. Gill and several officers of the Shoemakers Assembly of Knights of Labor were held in bail on complaint of Ogden Hart. The charge against them was conspiracy. It was alleged that they drove Hart out of New York and kept their promise to prevent him from getting work anywhere. The prisoners obtained a writ of habeas corpus, and Judge Barrett, before whom the matter was tried, wrote a scathing opinion and submitted the papers in the case to the District Attorney, suggesting that they be given to the grand jury. He dismissed the writ of habeas corpus. The knights appealed, and the General Term of the Supreme Court has just affirmed Judge Barrett. Judge Brady, who wrote the opinion, deprecates strikes, and says that the evidence makes out a prima facie case of conspiracy.

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. This remedy cures by its mild, soothing, cleansing, and healing properties. Only 50 cents, by druggists.

AN EXCELLENT INVESTMENT.

The majority of men in middle life remember when Illinois or Wisconsin lands were thought dear at $2 50 per acre. Present value, $25 00 to $50.00 per acre. Careful examination of the records has discovered a number of scattered pieces of the very choicest land in Minnesota included in original land grant lying near railroads recently built, and adjacent to market. These will be sold cheap, and in five or ten years will unquestionably be worth several times present price. A profitable investment. For further particulars, state quantity desired and address J. BOOKWALTER, Land Comr., St. P., M. & M. Ry., St. Paul, Minn.

NEW BOOK.

THE STORIES OF THE GODS is not only a new book, but a unique one. It embodies Mr. I. R. B. Arnold's lecture on the lodge given in connection with his sun pictures. Whoever has heard Mr. Arnold will enjoy this story of the gods of different times and nations. It places the god of the secret lodge in the right catalogue. The price is only ten cents postpaid. 32 pages. Illustrated.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TRAINING CHILDREN.

The time is past when it is considered fashionable for a young lady to be unskilled in domestic duties, and the declaration on her part of entire ignorance no longer surrounds her with angelic glamour. While each child is being taught little lessons in housekeeping by its mother, it is being taught those higher lessons in life, lessons which will ever be useful to it. The girl should not only learn industry and thriftiness, but the nutritive and chemical value of principles of cooking. She should learn the relation of acids and alkalis, the laws of fermentation, the effect of putting meat into hot or cold water, the time and ease of digestion of the articles prepared for the table, and, most of all, the laws of health and the prevention of disease. The boy will find, in his little duties about the home, how many discouragements a mother often meets with, and how, with his helping hand, he can lighten her labors, and at the same time learn how much pluck, cheerfulness, self-reliance and infinite patience a woman must possess to be a successful housekeeper.

MEDICINAL USE OF VEGETABLES.—The large, sweet onion is very rich in those alkaline elements which counteract the poison of rheumatic gout, says the Medical Record. If slowly stewed in weak broth, and eaten with a little pepper, it will be found to be an admirable article of diet for patients of studious and sedentary habits. The stalks of the cauliflower have the same value, only too often the stalk of a cauliflower is so ill-boiled and unpalatable that few persons would thank you for proposing to them to make part of their diet consist of so uninviting an article. Turnips, in the same way, are often thought to be indigestible, and better suited for cows and sheep than for delicate people, but here the fault lies with the cook quite as much as the root. The cook boils the turnip badly, and then pours some butter over it, and the eater of such a dish is sure to be the worse for it. Try a better way. What shall be said of our lettuces? The plant has a slight narcotic action, of which a French old woman, like a French doctor, well knows the value, and when properly cooked it is really very easy of digestion.

We would remark, in addition, that the serving up of turnips unmashed is a practice fit only for savages. Moreover, half the turnips (or more likely three-fourths of them) sent to market are, from their color and strong flavor, fit only for cattle. Turnips for the table should be as white as snow, and as delicate in flavor as vegetable marrow. The finest turnips we ever tasted were in Belgium, where the perfect irrigation of the country by canals and cross-ditches affords the turnip all the moisture which, more than any other vegetable except radishes, it requires. Belgian butter, too, is faultless when got at first hand in the country. Pure white turnips should be much more cultivated than they are; we get them occasionally, but far too rarely, in Halifax. Many housekeepers would far sooner pay a higher price for them, than a lower one for the coarse-flavored yellow root one sees everywhere.

We go even further than the Medical Journal with regard to the stalks of the cauliflower. We actually prefer them, we mean also the thick part of the outer leaves, when not tough and stringy, to the white head itself, but we are doubtless in a conspicuous minority in the peculiarity of our individual taste.—[Ed. Critic.]

A famous doctor says: "Eat a good bowl of mush and milk for your breakfast, and you will not need any medicine. Indian corn contains a large amount of nitrogen, has qualities anti-constipating and is easily assimilated. It is cheap and has great nutritive properties. A course of Indian meal in the shape of johnny-cake, hoecake, corn or ponebread and mush, relieved by copious draughts of pure cow's milk, to which, if inclined to dyspepsia, a little lime water may be added, will make a life now a burden well worth the living, and you need no other treatment to correct your nervousness, brighten your vision, and give you sweet and peaceful sleep."

A WOMAN'S CHARMS

soon leave her, when she becomes a victim to any one of the various disorders and peculiar "weaknesses" that are peculiar to the fair sex. The condition of tens of thousands of women to day is pitiable in the extreme; they are weak, bloodless creatures, a prey to mental anguish and bodily pain; in a word, "broken-down," from any one of numerous causes. To this unhappy multitude we strongly urge the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, an infallible, world-famed remedy, for all "female" irregularities and "weaknesses," and which restores the worst sufferer to vigorous health, and reinvests her with all the charms of figure, face and complexion, that receive such willing homage from man.

EXCURSIONS.

Business men and settlers looking for new locations or investments can reach all principal points in Minnesota and Dakota at a cost of one fare for the round trip, by availing themselves of the excursions announced via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry, from St. Paul, Minn. MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS.

Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

KNOWLEDGE FOR THE MILLIONS.

The fourth volume of Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia contains 122 illustrations, and extends from Baptism to Bilberry—637 pages, large type, handsome cloth binding, for 50 cts., or in neat half Morocco binding for 65 cts.! Postage 10c. Is not that, truly, bringing knowledge within the reach of the millions?

The great merit of the Cyclopedia is its adaptation to practical use, giving under each proper head the information most likely to be needed, and in concise, easily available form. Careful examination impresses one with its accuracy, as well as the remarkable fullness of its information. For actual use it abundantly answers the needs of all save those whose pursuits require exhaustive study of certain subjects. The combination of Unabridged Dictionary and Cyclopedia is a very great convenience. Each volume, as it comes to the reader's hands, invariably renews the surprise felt that a book so well got up can be afforded for a price so low. Whoever wants a Cyclopedia—and who does not?—would do well to order at least a specimen volume, which may be returned if not wanted. Reduced prices are offered to early subscribers for complete sets, which are to consist of 30 or more volumes, the volumes being issued at intervals of about a month. The work is not sold either by agents or booksellers, but only by the publisher direct, which in some measure accounts for the wonderfully low prices. Specimen pages, also 84-page descriptive catalogue of choice books, sent free. John B. Alden, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York, or 218 Clark St., Chicago.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal ly tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation, as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the InITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

News of The Week.

WASHINGTON.

A bill to provide a method for the settlement by arbitration of controversies between interstate railroads and their employes, was introduced by Senator Blair Friday. It is the bill passed by the last Congress, but which failed to receive the signature of the President. A new section is added which makes it unlawful for employes to strike until after the railroad has failed for five days to comply with a request for arbitration.

THE GREAT STORM.

The heaviest snowstorm for many years prevailed at New Nork last week Monday, large drifts forming which caused a suspension of traffic. Butting collisions occurred on the Third Avenue Elevated and on the Brooklyn Elevated roads, in the former case the engineer being killed and a number of passengers injured. The blizzard increased toward night, when all trains, street cars and ferries were stopped The hotels were filled with people from the suburbs, who were unable to get home; and of the fifty mail trains due, but two arrived. The blockade was only partly raised on Tuesday. No wires were working, the wind blew furiously, and not a train reached the depots during the day. Elevated trains ran at intervals, but street car travel was blocked, and on account of the heavy ice the ferryboats made few trips. Many persons crossed East River on the ice from Brooklyn to New York. Fire in a Forty third street tenement drove out several families, many escaping scantily dressed. A great number of trains were reported stalled between stations on the Hudson River and Harlem roads. Business was generally suspended, and many suffered because the usual supplies of provisions of some kinds failed. Hundreds were frost-bitten and many perished. Roscoe Conkling was among the number who narrowly escaped death, while walking from Wall street to 24th. The storm prevailed from Washington to Massachusetts and seemed to be heaviest in New Jersey, where along some lines of railway drifts ten feet deep and a mile long were encountered. Telegraph lines were all down the poles impeding the trains and street travel in cities.

Owing to the stoppage of trains caused by the snowstorms, all collieries in the Lackawanna and Wyoming Valleys suspended operations Wednesday. Portions of the tracks of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western road are covered to a depth of twenty-five feet, and no trains were run to New York before the end of the week.

Eighteen New York pilot boats which were out during the storm were not heard from for days, while nine were wrecked, the crews being rescued and landed at Sandy Hook.

It is believed that twenty persons perished in Essex county, New Jersey, during the recent storm. At New Haven, Conn., seven persons perished; and there were over twenty deaths in towns adjacent to New Haven, while hundreds of people suffered from frost-bites.

John Henrinan of Milltown, N. J., perished in the blizzard. His children were found starving, while his wife lay dead in bed.

It is estimated that the financial loss to New York city by the storm will be $7.000.000, and that the loss to the States involved will reach $20,000.

A number of vessels were sunk by the storm at Delaware Breakwater, and it is reported that twenty-five persons perished.

In clearing the roads of snow there were numerous fatal railway accidents, five being reported in one day.

A Delaware, Lackawanna and Western passenger train tumbled down a thirty-foot embankment at Tracy's Bridge, near Binghamton, N. Y., at 2:15 Friday morning. The cars caught fire and were consumed. A man perished in the flames; a half-dozen passengers are probably fatally hurt, and many others were wounded.

COUNTRY.

The Indiana Prohibition State Convention at Indianapolis, Thursday, nominated the Rev. J. S. Hughes for governor and adopted a platform demanding strict prohibition and woman suffrage. Electors-at-large and delegates-at-large were chosen, and four members of the W. C. T. U. were added to the State Central Committee.

The New York Irish societies having arranged to raise an Irish flag above the City Hall on St. Patrick's Day, Mayor Hewitt issued an order that the flags of the United States and of the State and city of New York and no other be displayed on that day.

At New Orleans, La., Friday, the United States Grand Jury brought indictments against officers of the Illinois Central for discrimination against New Orleans in favor of Lowell, Mass., in transportation of cotton from Holly Springs and Canton, Miss.

The channel of the Ohio River five miles above Steubenville is said to be completely blocked with sunken coal-barges. Over 400,000 bushels of coal are being scoured by the muddy waters.

Farmers at Winchester, Ohio, Wednesday night, tarred and feathered two Mormon elders, and then chased them to the Ohio River, which the fugitives safely crossed.

At Woodland Mills, Tenn., Thursday morning, Eli Daire, a Negro under arrest for burning a barn, and being taken by rail to the Hickman jail, was taken from the car by masked men and hanged to a tree.

Henry Bergh, founder and President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, died at New York Monday morning, aged 65.

H. C. Leavitt, one of the men implicated in the murder of the Rev. Haddock at Sioux City, Iowa, is under sentence to hang, April 30, for the murder of a cowboy over a game of cards at Dodge City, Kansas, to which place he went after leaving Sioux City.

Investigation into the abuses of convict miners at Coal Hill, Ark., show that convicts have been beaten and flogged to death; that Warden Gafford has made a practice of making the men fight; and that in one case he caused a desperado to kick a fellow convict to death. The people are greatly excited, and threaten to lynch Gafford.

Mormon elders have been discovered working in the remote rural districts of the Bototourt county, Va. They have made many converts, among them an intelligent farmer, Mr. Ferguson, and it is expected that a large number will emigrate to Utah. Many threats have been made against the elders in the county, and they have been notified to leave or they will be dealt with by Judge Lynch.

Seventh day Adventists at Battle Creek, Mich., are agitating the establishment of denominational schools for their children to attend in preference to the public schools.

A terrible accident, causing the death of twenty-two persons and the serious injury of about forty more, happened on the Savannah, Florida & Great Western railroad at Blackshear Saturday morning. The vestibule fast mail, called the "Cuban" train, which runs through from New York to Tampa, Fla, went through the trestle at Hurricane River and plunged forty feet to the ground beneath. The wreck was a fearful one, every car except the private coach of E. B. Wilbur, president of the Lehigh Valley road, being crushed to splinters. The accident, it is supposed, was caused by the baggage car getting off the track.

FOREIGN.

The autograph letter from the Pope to Emperor Frederick expresses the deep sorrow at the death of a monarch who, it says, was animated by the friendliest feelings toward the Catholic church. The Pope thanks Emperor Frederick for cherishing sentiments which give assurance that the relations between Prussia and the Vatican shall become more and more friendly.

A snowstorm Thursday greatly interfered with railway traffic in the north of England and Scotland. Several trains have been buried in snowdrifts. The passengers on a stalled train between Sunderland and Hartlepool were compelled to spend the night in the cars.

Seventeen thousand copies of a circular purporting to have been issued by the Governor of Saratoff, were distributed throughout that province March 18, stating during the tour of inspection in

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?
Get this little work and use it for God an home and country. Forty pages.

The Commissioners of the Cincinnati Centennial Exposition have resolved that it shall be closed on the Lord's day. It is reported that the reasons given are in brief that "it would not pay," and some criticise the Board for so ignobly regarding the Sabbath. But the words have a double meaning, and will meet the objections of the beer-drinking Germans who fill a considerable quarter of the city, while every one who loves and honors the day knows that its desecration is spiritual bankruptcy. At the same time such an expression is demoralizing. This exposition, taking in as it does the "Ordinance of 1787," should have some positive religious features, also fitly commemorating that great act of our early Congress.

The Undergraduate of Middlebury College, Vermont, says that Prof. Knowlton, a Middlebury graduate of 1884, and now connected with the National Museum in Washington, has been appointed to make a collection of college fraternity badges for the Museum. Now if the management of that great and expensive institution which the people are heavily taxed to sustain, have the wisdom of owls they will go on with this lodge collection. Some day they will be able to show the admiring people the hoodwinks, slippers, dirty drawers, cable-tows, setting mauls, skeletons, skulls, coffins, chains, rubber spikes, and the whole disgusting paraphernalia of lodgery well preserved in glass cases for the profit and instruction of the dear people. But really if the National Museum has no better business than this, won't some one please dump it into some mudhole to fill up the street.

The Labor party of Alabama is among the first to begin spring work. At a State convention at Montgomery, last week, the representatives of this party called upon all who "seek the emancipation of labor" to join them; and then proceeded to vote down a resolution in favor of prohibition! Such a party will not emancipate labor till the workingmen are all dead. There are other parts of their platform built with rotten or warped timber. Men must not be compelled to pay "for the use of God's free gifts." Our laboring men cannot succeed with the exploded theories of Henry George, or the vagaries of Terence Powderly, who demands that the coal mines of Pennsylvania be siezed and managed by the State. The platform demands "complete ownership and control" of railroads and telegraph lines, which is another theory of communism fast fading out. A good many people in Chicago are ready to believe that a private corporation would manage even their postoffice better than the government; and we all can see that government regulation for railroads is a more satisfactory solution of the railway question than government ownership. The great mass of American laborers are unorganized; that is, are not sworn into secret lodges—they cannot stand on such a platform.

The Pittsburgh papers print lists of applicants for license to sell liquor, by the page, with the announcement that the applications will be considered on a certain day in court. For several days last week this interesting business proceeded in the license court. The Law and Order Society and the W. C. T. U. were ready, and the applicants were severally put upon the rack, before the court passed upon them. It may be questioned whether this is the best way to bring liquor dealers into court. It makes bad blood without cutting the throat of the saloon business. When the dealer is brought before a judge let it be to finish up his business. We hope for the day when the lodges will be brought to time for selling fraudulent secrets in the same way.

Since the letters of Mr. Blaine and Robert Lincoln withdrawing their names from the Presidential canvass, Senator Allison of Iowa, and Judge Gresham, of the United States District Court in this city, have become centers of interest. Iowa is rallying around her favorite son, as Ohio stands by Sherman's flag, and New York by DePew's. To Judge Gresham's aid comes a very unexpected ally—the Knights of Labor. Maguire, leader of that order in New York, declares that of all persons named by either party the Judge is most acceptable to the K. of L. They say that he is not bound by the corporations in the late decision on the Burlington strike, and he is strong with labor organizations everywhere. That decision gave no hope to the engineer's brotherhood, and could not be interpreted as for or against corporations. We doubt not the Knights of Labor as an order would be a most unwelcome ally, if Judge Gresham really has Presidential intentions.

The sudden death of Chief Justice Waite last Friday morning causes many misgivings for the future. If Mr Cleveland's first choice for the Supreme Bench was Mr. Lamar, what will be his second? It is justly a cause of alarm that the names of Vilas and Dickinson, of the Cabinet, are among the first mentioned for the vacant place. Judge Waite's death was unexpected, even by his family, none of whom were with him when he died. He attended a reception on the Saturday night previous and took cold, but was in court Monday. The family physician was not called until Wednesday, and a fatal termination of the disease was not apprehended. Judge Waite was a lawyer of fine education and wide experience, both in his profession and in public life. He became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court by appointment of President Grant in 1874. While he was not a great jurist, as was Marshall, yet he had not Marshall's opportunities, nor had he such important issues to decide as Mr. Chase. But it must be remembered of him with gratitude that he was among the three who dissented from the decision of last Monday against the Northwestern railway, in a suit to compel that road to take beer into Iowa as freight. The company refused because of the State law, and the lower court sustained them. The Supreme Court says a State law cannot regulate inter-state traffic. The general government thus becomes an agent to break down State prohibition. The demand for national legislation against the traffic will now have a new force.

APPEAL OF CHRISTIAN WOMEN, AND ANSWER BY REV. V. H. LICENSE, D. D.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Church of the living God, help to save
Our drowning boys from a drunkard's grave.
Men and brethren, hear ye not
Despair's wild cry from the drowning throat,
Out where the thundering surf of the shore
Beats on the cold, cruel rocks, that gore
With their lances of flint? And the souls of men
Call dying to you, but are calling in vain.

Men in the life-boat, what will ye do
For the souls that are perishing full in your view?
Will ye pray to our God who is mighty to save
With your idle oars in the mountain wave;
While the life-boat moves like a thing adrift
For the winds to shake and the waves to lift—
And hope gives out, and the light of day,
From souls not a cable's length away?

REPLY OF REV. V. H. LICENSE, D. D.

Dear ladies, have patience, great movements, you know,
On this nether world have always been slow;
This earth for a long six thousand years
Has been reaping a harvest of sorrow and tears;
With the wines of the past and the drinks of our time
Has Satan been paving the ages with crime,
And how can we hope in our own little day
To drive such a deep-rooted evil away?

But listen, dear ladies, this much we will do,
While keeping the end of the journey in view;
We'll vote for restriction. Five hundred at least
The foe of religion, the devil's high priest,
Shall give for the right which we vote at the polls
To build up an altar and sacrifice souls.

Then none but the rich shall for license apply,
And all the small dealers must perish and die;
While the gleam of the gas jet and light of the moon
Shall gild with their glory the palace saloon;
And then, noble sisters, your boys shall go
To hell, if they must, with a first-class show.
But time presses hard, let us watch and pray
And work for the Master. Dear ladies, good day.

SPIRITUAL ENLARGEMENT.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

Are we always to move in the same groove which our fathers have made and expect no new thing under the sun? A strange question to ask to-day, in view of what has been wrought in this nineteenth century! Yes, I know wonderful things have come to pass in these latter days, and one wonders where it will end, as they consider the uses of steam, of electricity, of natural gas, of the wonderful labor-saving machinery which has wrought a revolution in all the world of mechanical activity.

But this is only material enlargement, the perfecting of that which was already begun; and at this the world marvels—as well it may. Surely Franklin would wonder; and Fulton would marvel; and Stephenson stand amazed at the expansion of which their thoughts were capable, of the wonderful fruitage from the seeds which they scattered. But these seed thoughts, which these men were enabled to scatter, were not their own; they had their origin in the Divine. The thoughts were the thoughts of God, and he only knows their limits, or when he will say, "Hitherto shalt thou go, but no farther." And while we rejoice and are glad at the display of human genius, we do not forget that it is only indirectly that these things lay hold upon eternal things; and that degenerate human nature is wont to pervert that which is good, and to turn it to the profit of Anti-Christ, so that the progress which might hasten the coming of the "Kingdom," is made an obstacle.

I have watched the coming of a railway train at night, and as it rushed forward with its blazing eye and its angry breath, as if chafing under the restraint that forces a pause, it has seemed to me as if it might be a messenger of destruction from the "bottomless pit," and as if he, "who hath his name Apollyon," was looking with his evil eye through the round window, glaring defiance at the world. Of course, this was idle fancy; the engine was only an iron horse, which if harnessed and driven by the servants of Christ might help on his work, while doing the appointed work for which it was made.

But is it? Who looks through the round window with a sardonic grin on every excursion train run in defiance of the laws of God and man on the Lord's day; knowing well that it is only a question of time till the men whom he has seduced to steal God's holy day, will commit the lesser sin of stealing from those that employ them, and so he works the ruin of both? To each he promises material good, and so they worship him, and to each he is equally false. Is not this Anti-Christ, of whom we have heard that he should come? Already there are many Anti-Christs.

And how is it in the realm of thought? Ah! how glad the day,

"When Guttenberg made thought cosmopolite,
And stretched electric threads from mind to mind."

God's people rejoiced in the hastening of the coming kingdom; God's holy Word could now be multiplied, and scattered far and wide till all the earth should learn the glad tidings. No wonder that faith looked up expectant before the printing press. But Anti-Christ saw in it a new element of power. His servants, too, could learn to print, and so they did. And who controls the daily press to-day, if it be not Anti-Christ? What power else would dump at the street door of Christian homes such garbage, raked from the slums of our cities, to be used as mental food for our sons and daughters? Who else but he could glory in the ruin wrought by the poison thus set free to taint the moral atmosphere until it becomes so vitiated, and the moral sense of Christian people is so benumbed that they do not call a scavenger, but instead read as if they relished disgusting details of the crimes committed in the vilest dens and filthiest corners, which should only be spoken of in whispers in the ear of those who are clothed with authority to bring the perpetrators to justice? Yes, who but Anti-Christ could gloat over such a state of things? Is the picture overdrawn? Ah! we know it is not.

True, Christian people support, in a way, denominational papers, which are clean and wholesome, appearing weekly. But these are lights in the upper windows while the cellars and the streets wreak with odors of the pit. And what is the remedy? The Scripture must be fulfilled, and Anti-Christ is here. Yes, the Scripture must be fulfilled, that thus it should be. But should the elect be deceived, instead of trying the spirits? If the enemy comes in like a flood, where are the people of God through whom the Spirit of the Lord should lift up a standard against him? The churches of Jesus Christ must become more aggressive. Instead of resting satisfied with adorning their barracks and building monuments to their own honor and glory, they must use their money to buy and use a controlling interest in publishing companies. They must get possession of the daily press. They must stop competing with the world in its follies, in its games and its pleasures, knowing that "the friendship of the world is enmity with God."

God's people must be satisfied to be a "peculiar people," to come out from the world and be separate; to make no compromises with the enemy, but to march by their own standard, steady and true, being clad in the armor which alone is proof against the wiles of the enemy. "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places; and the weapons of our warfare are not carnal [the church should remember this], but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." When the church shall realize her high calling, and that she is in the world as Christ was in the world, to save the world, she will rise from the dust and put on her beautiful garments. Then will come enlargement such as the world has never seen. Then will the kingdom speed toward the blessed consummation when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; when he shall take to himself his great power and shall reign forever and ever."

The purposes of God shall stand; and he can raise up agencies to do his will. But he has ordained that certain things shall be accomplished through the agency of his people, and having chosen his instruments no others are needed. How wonderful the privilege, and how solemn the message that comes to every one that has enlisted in his service: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." That is, wherever you are, preach by word and deed until he come. There is a center of influence wherever a Christian is found. When the command was given to the disciples at the first, Jerusalem was the center from which the world was to be reached with the glad tidings; but the time has come when neither in Samaria, nor yet in Jerusalem, do we seek the center of Gospel influence; but wherever a group of Christians is found who worship the Father in spirit and in truth there is light which may flash its rays to the ends of the earth. God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, are working in and through and by his people, so far and so fast as they are ready and willing for the service.

"Thy Kingdom come."

ROMANISM AND MASONRY.

BY AN OLD LAWYER AND EX-MASON.

Is it not clear to the Protestant mind that through such principles as were promulgated through the late German Catholic Convention in Chicago, a foundation is being laid that will result in the greatest, most bloody and terrible revolution this continent has ever seen, and purely the result of usurpation and tyranny under the dogmas taught by the church of Rome in her religion? Unless the rights of the people under the Constitution are guarded and protected, the dominion of popery would be worse than the rule of anarchism; for nothing but the dogmas of the Romish church would be tolerated within our borders. The press would be bridled and a gag thrust into the mouth of every person who would dare take issue with the pope or the church on a question of polity, either civil or religious. There would be something more terrible throughout the land than imprisoning itinerant preachers like Rev. William F. Davis of Boston Common notoriety. No one would be permitted to preach any where on any day without first having taken holy orders from his holiness the pope, nor would one be permitted to hold devotional exercises in his own house, or with his own family, without a crucifix before him, with other addenda of popish trumpery.

Indeed, liberty and freedom of speech are now greatly declining, as we have just witnessed in Chicago during the first and second weeks of March, 1888, in preventing, by intimidation, Rev. Dr. Justin D. Fulton from speaking against Romanism. Especially will this be the case wherever preaching or speaking runs counter to Freemasonry and Roman Catholicism. Although these bodies are, to a certain extent, at swords' points with each other, the Romish church claiming the sole right to wear the miter and other insignia of her episcopacy, while the Masonic body claims to be the owner of the miter and all the other paraphernalia of the order, by divine right; yet, because they plough in the same furrow, sow the same seeds of idolatry, and harrow them in with the same "bulls," they are necessarily tending to one end in respect to our institutions. The Mason goes to heaven on his good works, while the Roman Catholic gets there for a consideration, by special order of the pope.

Hear what Rome said a few years ago on this point: "We declare, affirm, define, and pronounce it necessary to salvation, for every human creature TO BE SUBJECT TO THE ROMAN PONTIFF." (Cardinal Manning.) Again, hear how she would throttle and damn every one who, without her permit, would dare teach perishing souls to "search the Scriptures;" that "they are they which testify of Christ" (John 5: 39); and that "the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son,"—and not to the pope—and, "He that heareth Christ's word and believeth on him that sent him, hath everlasting life, shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death unto life," without any order, edict or decree of the pope, notwithstanding his pronounced anathama—"accursed be those very crafty and deceitful societies, which thrust the Bible into the hands of the inexperienced youth," said Pope Pius IX.

The right to teach, use or hold the Bible, Rome claims that exclusively for her priests, saying, "No Bible shall be held or read except by priests. No Bible shall be sold without a license, except upon the pains and penalties of that mortal sin that is neither to be forgiven in this world nor in the next." —Council of Trent. And, again, hear her restrictions under former decretals, reiterated in substance at the late convention in Chicago: "Moreover, we confirm and renew the decrees delivered in former times by apostolic authority, against the publication, distribution, reading and possession of books of the Holy Scriptures translated into the vulgar tongue." —Pope Gregory XVI. Hear, again, what a bishop has to swear to against all who dare differ with the doctrines of Rome.

The New York Tablet, a strong Catholic organ, gives us one good reason why the Catholic parish schools prosper so well in America. It says, "that Father Walker would as soon administer the sacrament to a dog as to Catholics who send their children to the public schools." And this the Tablet heartily endorses; and further says that this "is only what has been said over and over again by the bishops in their pastorals all over the world." Papacy don't want the simple way of salvation to be known. The pope dare not say to sinners as John says: "If we confess our sins he [Christ] is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1: 9.

Anything that disturbs the equilibrium of Rome affects Masonry, to a greater or less extent—neither will dare to look at itself in the mirror of truth, nor say with Paul, that "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God,"—"and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God." Acts 20: 24, 27. This is "the foundation the apostles and prophets" built, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone," and not a pope. Eph. 2: 20. Not so with Masonry; its true basis is laid in mythology; and Romanism also robes herself in some of the old cast-off robes of paganism, places a miter on her head and calls herself "the church of God" (2 Cor. 1: 1), and her pope the infallible vice-gerent of God.

The difference between the Mason and the Roman Catholic comes about as near the definition given by the Scotch ploughman, a Highlander named Muckle Donald, on being asked by his master, who was standing at the cheek of the bothy fire having a religious discussion with his ploughmen one winter's evening,—"Donald, what do you think is the difference between purgatory and hell?"

"Hough, mon," says Donald, "a' the difference between purgatory and hell is a paper wall, an' whan the priest lean'd his back to't he fell through't."

Masonry makes its brag that it stands behind the throne, and Catholicism declares she is the only church, and none outside of her can get to heaven. The unconverted Jew and Gentile can sit lovingly in the same Masonic lodge, the religion of which they consider good enough without Christ to get them into heaven at last.

SHOULD CHRISTIAN WOMEN BELONG TO SECRET SOCIETIES?

PAPER BY MISS GROSS OF NEW ORLEANS BEFORE THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

This is a question of importance equal to any now before the public. I will give my personal experience of secret societies. In 1879 I joined a secret society known as Tabernacle, No. 6, and I indeed became very prominent in this society, and learned much of its customs. I thought no other organizations excelled secret societies. In fact I thought them real Divine institutions, until a careful study of God's Word and much prayer convinced me that these orders were one of Satan's chief instruments to pervert the use of the Bible and tempt Christians into error.

God says, "Let us make man in our image." Gen. 1: 26. Now if God made man in his own image, he meant that man should serve him in truth. God told Adam not to eat the forbidden fruit, but Satan tempted him by saying, It's no harm. Well might we trace the first secret society back to Eden, and it was organized by Satan, with one candidate, Eve. He initiated Eve into the dark mysteries of sin; and her promised knowledge turned to be banishment from that beautiful garden to grope her way in darkness (sin). Secret societies promise to initiate women into the mysteries of hidden light, but lo! when she reaches the ante-room, she is hoodwinked, deceived and placed in a position to keep secrets from the husband of her heart, and child of her bosom.

I ask again, friends, should Christian women—should we join secret societies, and forever hail and never reveal we know not what? Jesus said, "I spake openly, and in secret have I said nothing." John 18: 20. Again he said, "God made them male and female, for this cause shall man leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife, and they shall be one flesh. So then they are no more twain but one flesh: what, therefore, God hath joined together let no man put asunder." Mark 10: 6–9. Now secret societies seek to put wife and husband asunder by pledging the wife to conceal from her husband.

Again, dear Christians, should women join secret societies? God said, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness." 2 Cor. 6: 14.

But secret societies compel the Christian to call the lewd, brother and sister. God said, "It is a shame even to speak of what things they do in secret." Eph. 5: 12. Now, indeed, when we read God's Word and pray over it, and then study the character of secret "institutions," it seems to me to be a shame for women to join secret orders. May God help the Christians to cry aloud, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

MANY PARTNERS IN A BAD BUSINESS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Jews were required to build battlements to their houses, and any casualties occurring through the neglect of this, were chargeable to the owner. Prohibition is the battlement God requires the state to build, and until this is done, the government is accountable for the destruction of life and property by the liquor traffic. Indeed, as it stands, our government is a party in this wrong. Every gallon of whisky sells for $1.10. On this the government collects 90 cents revenue. That is, the government is nine-elevenths partner. Every officer from the President down to the justice of the peace, and every voter, all have gone into the liquor business, nine-elevenths partner. This iniquitous policy should be abandoned and the divine law of prohibition adopted.

1. As the guardian of public rights the state should prohibit. The old Roman proverb was, "the public safety is supreme law." The government prohibits the carrying of concealed weapons on the ground that the public safety is endangered thereby. The erection of noisome vitriol works or powder magazines is forbidden within the city limits for the same reason. On the same principle the liquor traffic should be prohibited. "Rulers are not a terror to good works but to the evil. He is the minister of God to thee for good, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."

2. As the guardian of the nation's resources the state should prohibit. The liquor traffic destroys annually 40,000,000 bushels of nutritious grain, enough to make 600,000,000 four-pound loaves, 79 for every family in the United States. It costs our nation directly $900,000,000 a year. It employs over 500,000 men in manufacturing and selling intoxicants, and they are withdrawn from useful occupations. It creates 600,000 drunkards, and they are withdrawn from useful occupations. These 1,100,000 men employed at $1.50 per day would earn $450,000,000 a year. That is an addition to our drink bill. Then the maintenance of the paupers and criminals created by it costs $200,000,000 more. Our nation's drink bill is over $1,500,000,000 annually. Nero fired the city of Rome and played the fiddle while the destruction went on. Our government has turned loose the liquor traffic upon this nation and then plays the fiddle to the tune of $95,000,000 revenue a year. This is betraying a public trust. God will surely visit the iniquity.

3. As the guardian of the lives of the people the state should prohibit. The city quarantines against contagious diseases. Drunkenness is the worst kind of a disease. The liquor traffic creates it. Quarantine against it. The state prohibits murder. The drink system murders more than 60,000 of our citizens every year. Kill a man with gunpowder and you hang. Kill 60,000 with alcohol and it's a business. This wholesale murder should be prohibited. The sea-devil is the terror of fishermen. It comes up under their boat and throws its arms over its sides and carries all down. The only remedy is to take the hatchet and chop off the arms, and this must be done instantly. The liquor traffic is the sea-devil in the waters of human society. The saloons are the arms. They are upon the ship of state. The only remedy is to take the hatchet of the law and cut them off.

4. As the divinely appointed agent for punishing crime the state should prohibit. The testimony of judges from Sir Mathew Hale down is to the effect that the liquor traffic causes from four-fifths to nine-tenths of all criminal and other offenses. The report of the Temperance Union for 1838 says: "Intemperance cuts down youth in its strength and old age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachments, and blights parental hopes. It creates weakness, not strength; disease, not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends, and all paupers. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence, and embraces consumption. It covers the land with ignorance, idleness and crime. It engenders strifes, fosters quarrels, and nourishes riots. It is the blood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman, and the support of the midnight incendiary. It fills your penitentiaries and furnishes victims for the gallows. It countenances the liar, respects the thief and esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligations, reverences fraud and honors infamy."

5. As the guardian of the family the state should prohibit. The Greeks fought twenty years before Troy in the interests of the home. Rome fell because she did not guard the home. The liquor traffic is coiling around the home like the serpents of Laocoon and crushing out the life. It must be destroyed. It is a crime to manufacture and sell intoxicating drinks as a beverage. Our brewers, distillers and saloonkeepers are criminals. Lord Chesterfield, that cool-headed statesman, calls them "artists in human slaughter." When Mohammed returned to Mecca, six years after the hegira, he saw 360 idols in the streets, and pointing to them with his sword he said, "Truth has come, let iniquity go down." So the government should point to the 248,992 saloons in this land and say, "Truth has come, let these abominations go down."

CATHERINE BOOTH ON GOD'S CHARITY AND DEVIL'S CHARITY.

The devil's charity is the very antipode of God's. It does not care much about righteousness. Quietness is its beau ideal of all that is lovely and excellent. It says "Let us be quiet; you must not disturb the peace of the church." It cries, Peace! Peace! when there is no peace. It says, "We cannot help these evils. Every man must look after himself; we are not responsible for our neighbor." It knows very often that there are continents of dirt underneath "things" and "systems" and men which it chooses to fraternize; but then it is covered up, and so it says, "Let it alone, we cannot have a smudge." Let it alone. Peace, Peace. Never mind righteousness; the church must be supported, if the money does come out of the dried-up vitals of drunkards and harlots; never mind, we must have it. Never mind if our songs are mixed with the shrieks of widows and orphans of the dying and damned! Sing away, sing away, and drown their voices. Never mind; we cannot have it looked into, rooted out and pulled up. Peace; we must have peace. And they call you as Ahab did Elijah, the disturber of Israel, if you dare touch the sore place and exhibit their putrefying wounds and bruises; and when you say to them, "The law of life is, do unto others as ye would they should do unto you," they impudently turn upon you and say, "But we are not expected to be made perfect in this life," and so they hide their abominations and throw a thicker covering over their filth and on it goes.

This is the devil's charity, and the more the better for his purpose. But the charity and the wisdom which is from above is FIRST PURE, and then peaceable. I would rather be in everlasting warfare in company with that which is fair and true and good than I would walk in harmony with that which is vile and hollow and rotten and destined for the bottomless pit. The Lord help YOU to make the same choice—godliness.

When the gavel of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives falls upon the desk at exactly 12 o'clock each day, flags are at the same moment hoisted upon the poles that rise from the crests of the cupolas on both ends of the Capitol. The moment that either the Senate or the House adjourns the flag on that wing of the building goes down. One has only to get a view of the Capitol to know if either, or if both Houses of Congress are in session. The flag duty is performed by the oldest employe of the Capitol, John Chauncey, who came to Washington with Thaddeus Stevens, "the Great Commoner;" and when the latter became so weak that he could scarcely walk, Chauncey used to carry him up and down the marble stairways to and from his carriage. It was to him that the statesman made the remark since quoted, when he was carrying him into the House one morning as usual: "Chauncey, I wonder who will carry me when you are gone?"

Mr. Chauncey has been in the employ of the House ever since, and another duty of his is to see that the Republican members are all in their places when an important vote is taken. The Democrats have for the same duty on their side of the Hall a man by the name of Ike Hill, and these two know the haunts and habits of every member of the House. If a vote is to be taken at midnight it is the duty of Chauncey and Hill to see that the members of their respective parties are present or paired.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

THE ENGINEER'S BROTHERHOOD

The great strike on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, now practically over, has called attention as never before to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of which P. M. Arthur is the head. We find in the Omaha Daily Republican of the 19th inst., the following able and conservative review of the leading principles of the order, and exposition of illegal and fallacious arguments by which it assumes the right to inflict incalculable damage to the general public by strikes and boycotts. The Inter-State Commerce law has indirectly defeated them in the present instance. But the people must demand more stringent regulations, by which a railroad strike or boycott shall be made a criminal offense, and put both managers and men under such bonds as will compel obedience. The formation of secret, sworn combinations should be also forbidden. Without this the engineers would never venture so desperately as in the present case. The Republican says:

It originated by the brotherhood of engineers demanding the abolishment of all classification, and a slight increase in wages. This brotherhood, it might be well to remark, dates its origin from 1863. It was originally intended to be a society of a social and charitable character only, having for its object the improvement of locomotive engineers as a body. It inculcates the principles of sobriety and fidelity among the important class, and has accomplished good work in providing for their sick and destitute. It has grown rapidly, until now it includes among its members the great majority of the locomotive engineers of the country, and possesses a large amount of accumulated funds, and it has headquarters in all the important cities of the country, and is held together by a central organization of salaried officers.

More recently the brotherhood has made itself, as Mr. Arthur has freely remarked, somewhat unfortunately notorious by its active participation in several railroad strikes. These have almost universally been successful, through the strength of its resources, the esprit du corps of the association, and more especially from the fact that it has not scrupled to use as a weapon the position its individual members held as trusted agents in a work of modern distribution. These strikes have always been marked by the same characteristic modus operandi. The corporations between whom and whose employes the difficulty has arisen have declined to accept the offered mediation of the recognized head of the brotherhood. Their strike has thereupon been authorized. Without this permission this strike is impossible, for if it is attempted the organization at once exerts itself to fill the place made vacant, and to break the strike down. The permission to strike, on the other hand, carries with it the assurance that the large resources of the brotherhood shall be devoted to securing success, and all those engaged in it at once pass from the service of the corporation to that of the brotherhood, which undertakes to provide for them until the recusant corporation succumbs. Or in case it holds out successfully, until the strikers can secure other situations. In every instance, regardless of the season of the year or public convenience, the strike takes place at a fixed hour. All trains are abandoned by their engineers, wherever they may happen to be.

So far as the organization is concerned, a state of warfare, within the letter of the law, between it and the railroad corporation—an enemy, as Mr. Arthur terms it—then ensues.

The single object of its members is to paralyze its opponents, to stop the whole movement of travel and traffic on its lines, and compel its submission. That they may the more quickly succeed in doing this they wholly ignore the rights and interests of the public. They consider that the responsibility for the consequences rests upon the corporation from its refusal to yield. Every means short of open violation of law is in practice regarded as legitimate to prevent others from taking the places of those who have struck.

The immediate cause of the strike on the Burlington was the classification, or the manner in which the Burlington paid its engineers. They say engineers who have had a long and honorable record and service, proving themselves to be competent and thoroughly reliable in their profession, have been paid more by the Burlington road than recently promoted firemen. This has been the custom for years of the roads and the brotherhood has fully accepted it. But within the last year or two, the inferior men, new and incompetent engineers have obtained a majority in the brotherhood, and are determined to blot out all classifications.

In proof of this, I only have to refer to the report of the railroad commissioners of the State of Massachusetts made in 1887 to the legislature of that State relative to a difference existing between the brotherhood and the Boston and Maine railroad. The ultimatum presented by the brotherhood therein acknowledged that engineers should be classified, asking that those having served three years or longer should receive $3.75 for each hundred miles; those having served two years and under three, $3.25; and those serving only for their first year, $2.75 for each hundred miles. This rule was evidently right, for if the profession of an engineer is such that perfection can be reached the first year, then it is a profession of less merit than the brotherhood should be willing to acknowledge.

The engineers are not responsible for the running of any railroad. If an accident happens, or damages result, either to person or property, the railroad companies are held responsible, not only for the acts of engineers, but for all other employes.

The Burlington management insist that they have a right to manage their own business in their own way, and refuse to abolish this classification. Mr. Arthur said, "If you can fill the positions vacated by our brotherhood, all well and good; we won't work." The Burlington thereupon proceeded at once to fill the 1,800 places made vacant by the striking engineers. Now, the strikers insist that the Burlington shall not only re-employ the striking engineers, but that it shall commit the crime of discharging its present employes who have taken their places, and are now earning an honest living.

The term "scab" is a favorite one with the brotherhood; but to my way of thinking, a scab engineer is made of the same flesh and blood and has the same necessities as has the orthodox engineer. He has to eat, sleep, have clothes, breathe the air, and is entitled to all of the God-given rights of this free country, the same as if he belonged to the royal order of brotherhood engineers.

Neither the Burlington, nor any other road, can force men to work for them; nor can the brotherhood force the Burlington, nor any other road, to employ them unless they so desire. Under our law it takes two to make a contract; but in order to overrule that plainest principle of commercial ethics, what do the brotherhood do? When they find that their strike is a failure, they resort to the boycott. Having already struck on one or two other roads for receiving Burlington freight, they threaten a universal strike and a complete paralyzing of all the commercial interests of the country, thereby showing that they are not the friends of any other class of people than themselves.

In speaking of this feature of the case, the commissioners of Massachusetts, in their report before referred to, make use of the following pertinent and, to my mind, very sensible suggestions:

"The commissioners believe they speak within bounds and say only what it is their duty to say, when they express their belief that the condition of affairs disclosed in our railroad system, as the result of the strike, of the 12th inst., is wholly incompatible with the public interests. The railroads of Massachusetts are its arteries. If, to secure some trivial and private end, either party to a conflict undertakes to wantonly stop the flow through those arteries, it becomes a question, not between private parties, but between the commonwealth and a public enemy. Undoubtedly the employes of a corporation have a right to leave its service. They can do so singly or in a body. The community, however, has also rights in the matter. These employes have no right to take out trains loaded with innocent travelers, perhaps, as in the recent Grand Trunk strike, in the most inclement season of an inclement climate, with the deliberate intention in certain contingencies of stopping the train and abandoning it at a given hour. A pilot might as well 'strike' and abandon his ship on a lee shore! If such an act is not a criminal offense, it should be made one. If, however, employes, in a reasonable and proper manner, with a due regard to their obligations to the public, have a right to leave the service of the corporation, on the other hand the corporation has an equal right to go into the labor market and employ substitutes in the place of those who have so left its service, and those substitutes are entitled to protection in working for it. They have a right to be guarded from intrusion while in the line of their duty, as well as from insults and violence."

The action of the brotherhood in attempting a universal boycott against the Burlington road is plainly contrary to the law, both the common and statutory law of the United States. A clause in the interstate commerce bill reads as follows:

"Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, shall according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines for receiving, forwarding and delivering passengers and property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith."

Now, an interpretation of this statute has recently been made by Judge Gresham in the case of the Burlington road against General McNulta, the receiver of the Wabash, when his engineers had refused to accept Burlington freight. And this decision settles the question whether a railroad may lawfully suspend reciprocal relations with a connecting road through fear of precipitating a strike. The duty of a railroad as a common carrier is plainly stated. It must receive and deliver freight that may come to it in the regular course of business, and it is no excuse for the failure to perform this obligation to urge that to comply with the demand will involve the road in labor troubles. Judge Gresham's decision plainly and unequivocally carries this doctrine to the end.

The strikers assume that one party may rightfully force another to enter into a contract and compel them to accept whatever terms it may dictate. Such an assumption is no more admissable than the theory that "might makes right." Either party has a right to propose the conditions of a contract and the other has a right to decline. It is essential to the law of freedom of contract that both parties be at liberty to propose terms, or to reject them—to enter into a contract or not, as they may choose. But this is not the position assumed by the brotherhood. They assume that they have a right to propose terms, and that the other party has no right to refuse, but must succumb to their dictatorial mandates. And they have sought, and are still seeking, to force the company to employ them upon their own terms.

This is a plain statement of this case, whether the brotherhood shall be permitted to overrule the statutory law of the United States and the common law of our land by conspiring to paralyze and destroy the business of the country—making a local strike on the Burlington system a public calamity, or whether the great principle of free agency between the two parties shall be held essential to a contract. The right to propose terms does not include the right to force another to accept them and compel him to enter into a contract against his will. Each party has a right to contract or not, and the attempt of either to force the other against his will and to terms to which he does not willingly consent is wrong as well as unlawful.

In order to carry out their unlawful purposes, the brotherhood notify the other companies that they must not obey the law of Congress which requires them to interchange traffic with the Burlington. Some of the companies sought to make this notification justify their course on the ground that if they do not heed it their own engineers will go out. They assume that the strikers intend, if need be, to exercise the power of their organizations to compel other companies to assist them into coercing the Burlington to enter into a contract against its will—threatening to put a stop to all traffic over vast connecting systems, not in vindication of their right of contract or of any conceivable right, but for the undisguised purpose of striking down the freedom of contract and forcing themselves as employes on their own terms upon a company whose service they have left, and which does not want to employ them again. Incidentally, if this scheme be carried out, if this unlawful purpose is accomplished, a successful assault will be made upon one of the most cherished rights of every man. If these organized strikes should succeed it would also cause a loss to manufacturers and shippers generally throughout the length and breadth of the country, among populations enough for an empire. It would inflict a loss and bring distress into every class of life. The common laborer would be thrown out of employment, his family would be distressed for the necessaries of life, the wheels of commerce would stand still, and all would be a state of chaos, with nothing but suffering and misery.

If an organization has become so great that it assumes to be greater than the laws of our country, caring not for statutes and legal obligations, governed by mere conclaves, directed by secret resolutions, controlled by secret laws—I say, if such an organization exists in this country, the sooner it is destroyed the better it will be for the well-being of society.

As I remarked before, I have no more interest in the Burlington road than any other citizen of the United States, but I regard the organization of the brotherhood of engineers as conspirators in their conduct against every principle which goes to make a community orderly, prosperous, and happy.

The question of pay with the Burlington road was and is nothing. It is a great underlying question. It is the question of all questions. Shall the great corporations of this country be controlled by secret organizations which stop at no reasonable limit in attempts to enforce their demands?

It is not a question with the Burlington road half so much as it is a question with these people of the United States whether law and order shall control, or whether secret trades unions shall win the victory.

It is certainly time to call a halt upon those organizations, and to reflect upon the warnings of Washington's farewell address, in which he says:

'All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force—to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils and modified by mutual interests.

"However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion."

Reform News.

FROM WASHINGTON TO GEORGIA.

Prohibition Delegates—Education at Atlanta—The University and caste prejudice—Excellent Meetings—Dr. Munhall at Macon—Social Ostracism.

Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Cynosure:—I left Washington, D. C., on the 13th at 11:25 A. M. On the evening of the 12th I attended a meeting of the Prohibition Union of the District, at the large fine hall at the corner of 4½ Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, which has been rented and fitted up by the Union. If the growth of the Prohibition party in the country is to be measured by its growth in Washington it is surely on the high road to success. Four years ago the Union was organized, but it was with great effort that it could be kept alive. Notwithstanding the extreme cold (about the worst of the winter) and the icy streets, there was a full attendance of both men and women, and much interest. Mr. H. D. Moulton, president of the Union, and Major Walker, formerly chief of the police, were chosen delegates to the Indianapolis convention, alternates Mrs. La Fetra and Rev. Baldwin. The officers were re-elected. It was curious to see the editor of the National View, that formerly advertised for the saloons and commended their "drinks," now seeking for election as delegate to the Prohibition convention. Let us hope that the View has reformed.

I need not speak of the unprecedented storm and cold in the North-east. It prevailed all over Virginia; but twenty-five miles south of Washington there was no snow. I came by the Piedmont Air Line, an excellent route and speedy. When we struck South Carolina we found the peach trees in full bloom, but on the west side of the mountains the season is not so much advanced. The peach crop here will be diminished by the frost of Tuesday night, but not destroyed, as many trees are not yet in bloom. To-day the weather is lovely, though fires are still enjoyable.

There is something in the air of Atlanta that betokens, if it does not inspire, thrift and enterprise. It is a growing, bustling city. The new State House, that promises to be a stately building, is well under way, but will be months if not years in reaching completion. A ride of over three miles on the street cars brings one to Clarke University and the Gammon Theological School, the excellent institutions of the M. E. church, established for the education of colored youth and the theological training of the colored ministry. They have some fine buildings and everything betokens prosperity. I visited the Theological school, and found about sixty students in attendance, several of whom are pastors in the city.

On the 15th, by invitation of Pres. Thirkield, I addressed the students and had a most attentive hearing. The president expressed his hearty concurrence with what had been said, and entire sympathy with our work.

This excellent seminary has been endowed by Rev. E H. Gammon of Batavia, Ill., by the gift of $200,000. The bequest was conditioned on its being a separate and independent institution. There are at present three professors and a fourth is to be appointed. In spite of much opposition from the old pro-slavery and Negro-hating spirit of the South, and of some internal dissensions growing out of the old order of things, there is a most substantia. growth of the M. E. church in the South, and they are doing an admirable work in the cause of education.

Clarke University was never more prosperous. Pres. Thayer tells me that a smaller percentage than heretofore belong to secret societies, and that the question of their usefulness and propriety is frequently discussed.

I also visited Atlanta University, now under the care of Prof. C. N. Francis, acting president. It has now enrolled 520 students, twenty-five per cent more than ever before. These are under the in struction of twenty-three teachers and professors. In spite of the efforts of Mr. Glenn and the men of his stamp (which includes Gov. Gordon) the institution is not dead, but more alive and prosperous than ever before. The remarkably well equipped Industrial department publishes a symposium of the discussion which arose out of the Glenn bill. This will (a few years hence, when the Georgia cranks recover their reason) be very interesting reading. It seems to have been well known and perfectly understood for more than fourteen years that it was a fundamental principle in the institution that no one should be excluded on account of race or color. This did not prevent the State from voting (out of funds received from the General Government) an annual appropriation of $8,000. It was not until the terrible outbreak of colorphobia last year that it was seen to be necessary to send Christian mothers to the chain gang, because that in addition to a work of great beneficence to the people of Georgia, they were teaching six of their own children. It was found that the moral sense of mankind was too strong for them and the Glenn bill failed, but they took away all State aid and put an additional burden on Northern benevolence. Prof. Bumstead is now North soliciting aid. Sixteen thousand dollars are asked, and it is hoped that a permanent endowment will be raised.

I was most kindly received by Pres. Francis, and welcomed to the hospitalities of the institution. Prof. Chase also greeted me kindly and expressed his sympathy with the work in which I am engaged. It is arranged for me to address the students at Atlanta to-night. I am also to speak to the students of the Baptist Theological school on Monday, and in the First Congregational church on Sabbath evening. Truly the Lord is making the way plain. I expect next week to go from here to Augusta, Ga., and thence to Savannah. From there I intend to turn northward.

MACON, GA., MARCH 21.—My visit to Atlanta could not have well been pleasanter or more profitable. I was there five days, and the weather was delightful. I spoke five times, and during most of my stay was most hospitably entertained at Atlanta University. On Sabbath I preached at the University in the morning to the assembled students and faculty; at three P. M., I took part in their Sabbath-school; and at 7:30 P. M. preached for Rev. E. Kent in the First Congregational church to a full house, from Eph. 5: 11. This is one of the neatest and most commodious houses of worship in the city, and the church is fairly prosperous. The able pastor, who has long been in sympathy with our reform, requested me to speak specially on the lodge question, as some of his members were involved in its meshes.

I had a most attentive and respectful hearing, and the sympathy of most of those present. I was heartily thanked by the pastor and a number of the leading members of the church, who said that the things I had said were just what they had long been contending for. Others thought them "hard sayings." One, who was a Mason, suggested that I had some spurious Masonic books, and that I knew nothing of real Masonry. The discussion will do good. The lodge question has been up for discussion among the students of both Clarke and Atlanta Universities, and there has been a good deal of careful study of the subject by some of the students. Such discussions always result in one way. The life of Masonry is in its silence and secrecy.

On Monday morning I visited the Baptist Normal and Theological Seminary. It has about 150 students, all young men. This school is under the care of Rev. Samuel Groves, D. D., assisted by four other professors, and is doing a good work. Seven years ago, when I first visited Atlanta, I was welcomed at this school, and my testimony had an attentive consideration. Now there seemed to be but one voice and one mind among the students and faculty. I had an excellent hearing and a hearty endorsement by the President. Ten expect to graduate from the Theological department.

At 2:30 P. M. I took the train for Macon, about 105 miles South. The intervening country is a fair farming region, mainly devoted to cotton raising. The farmers were busy in preparing their ground and planting their crops. I was glad to see that large attention is given to fruit-growing and the peach and pear orchards loaded with blossoms betoken a full crop. We reached this old city at 6:30, and I found comfortable quarters at the Southern Hotel, which, I am sorry to say, like every other has a large bar well stocked with liquors. So much of Georgia is "dry" that the devil has to put in an extra amount of effort in the "wet" towns in order to keep up his work. He evidently succeeds in this city. Macon has a beautiful location, very broad streets without pavements, and some fine public buildings. A fine new market house is just completed. It is a typical Southern city and is said to be slowly growing.

Dr. Munhall is here holding a series of meetings in the leading Baptist church. Though the work has but just begun, a considerable interest has been awakened. On the afternoon of the 20th I attended one of his Bible readings. In spite of the constant rain the attendance was good, and I was amply repaid in the very lucid and impressive way he talked about the grace of assurance.

I visited the Lewis Normal School under the patronage of the American Mission Association. This excellent institution has for a number of years done a good work and is now flourishing. I have nowhere seen a more thorough and admirable drill. By direction of the principal the students assembled in the chapel, and I addressed them for forty-five minutes on the lodge question. The pastor of the Congregational church, Rev. S. Rose, who was present, expressed his sympathy with our work. An Industrial department has recently been added to this school, and during the coming summer it is expected that a large new school building will be erected.

I should be glad if I could say nothing but good of the Georgia people, but in some things they are persistently barbarous. At Atlanta I met a Scotch Canadian of fine culture and excellent Christian character who had been forced to give up a promising school because in private conversation he had expressed the opinion that character rather than color should be the basis of social recognition. After years of faithful labor for the good of this city, the Christian ladies of the Lewis School are as perfectly ostracised as though they were Irish servant girls. Their fine New England culture counts for nothing here.

The infamous lease system by which convicts are worked and whipped to death is one of the relics of the slave system. Just now a case in court shows that a negro convict was kept in camp all winter almost without any covering, and that he froze his feet so badly that one had to be amputated to save his life. Surely these things are horrible.

This morning I have called on the pastor of the leading colored Baptist church which has 1,300 members. He says that his church and the entire community is honey-combed with secret lodges; that they greatly embarrass the work of the church; and that there is no reason to hope for prosperity until their influence is stayed. He had heard of my work in Augusta last year, and assured me of his hearty sympathy. I go this morning to Savannah.

THE SINGING MISSIONARY AT NEW IBERIA.

MARSHALL, Texas, March 17, 1888.

DEAR EDITOR:—I left New Orleans after having delivered over twenty addresses and sung over fifty times in the churches, universities and Baptist and Methodist conferences in that motley city; and to generally large and very attentive audiences, both black and white. My fusilades have been mostly aimed at the wicked, wasteful, demoralizing and degrading liquor, tobacco and secret-society vices that paralyze the energies, rob the families, and ruin the bodies and souls of their victims for time and eternity.

At New Iberia I had a hearty welcome from Bro. Browne, the worthy principal of the Howe Institute. I spoke six times there, the audience increasing every evening, and the last night all could not get seats. The quiet and fixed attention which this people gave was most gratifying and encouraging. They not only need, but receive instruction gladly. This Howe Institute is well and favorably located; has three acres of grounds; a large, pleasant building, conveniently and nicely furnished off, with the exception of two rooms in the upper story, which are very much needed for pupils, who have to be turned away for want of accommodation. They have a building also outside, but near, partly finished, which they very much need as a boarding house; but this, also, they cannot complete for want of money. They have had to dismiss teachers for the want of means to pay them, and this throws a heavy burden upon Prof. Browne, who is himself suffering for the want of back salary unpaid. The institution is in immediate and pressing need of $500 or a $1,000 to complete its buildings and pay its devoted teachers and make it an efficient and successful school.

Come, now, who will respond to this urgent demand? Ye stewards of the Lord's money, may the Lord open your hearts so you will open your purses. The generous Peter Howe has already given the building and grounds. Oh, remember, ye monied men who save, what you give away, you keep; what you keep, you lose!

MAKING GOOD THE LOSSES IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 15, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—To-day has been a day of secret demonstration with the lodgeites. Mr. Benjamin Hale was buried to-day. He was a prominent Freemason, Odd-fellow, Knight of Pythias, Tabernacleist and Harmonian, also a prominent member of Wesley chapel (M. E.) church. Of course Mr. Hale was not "financial" in all of those orders, but knowing as well as they do that they must make a grand display to deceive the simple, or they will soon go to pieces, there was an unusually large procession behind a poor man's remains. Rev. F. T. Chinn officiated, while Rev. Wm. Davis carried an open Bible veiled in crape. Revs. M. Dale, M. E. Brower, E. Augustus and Dr. R. Thompson, D. D., were noticed in the procession, while Grand Master Ladd was a conspicuous figure. The secretists have promised to give widow Hale $300 very soon. This is to induce others to join. It was noticeable to see the secretary of a leading Baptist church leading the procession. He was the only prominent Baptist wearing a secret uniform. As the Masons passed the corner of Gravier and Baronne streets, several yelled at once, "Look at dat feller!" "Look at dat feller!" pointing at me. The Odd-fellows carried more of their lodge implements than they have used before in public; such as ancient harps, timbrels, bow and arrows, Holy Bible, crank with a "Dove," (mockery of the Holy Ghost), axe, fetters, etc.

I preached at Freewill Baptist church last Sabbath and lectured two hours on Freemasonry as a hindrance to Christianity. Many and loud were the amens, though a few seemed offended. The secretists had circulated the news that I had been run out of the city, but Rev. Guy Watson had the church filled with hearers despite their boasting and lies. I have promised to lecture on the same subject next Sabbath at 7:30 P. M. at Orleans Street Baptist church, Rev. John Holmes, pastor.

I clip from the Louisiana Standard of to-day the following:

"(Masonic E. A. W.) We are here again, and will let you hear from us weekly, the Antis to the contrary notwithstanding. The Grand Lodge met, transacted its business, elected its officers and adjourned, and met the Antis just the same Eureka Chapter No. 4, R. A. M., met on Saturday night last, and led (10) ten lambs from Babylon to Jerusalem, who seem to be willing to go up higher, and will celebrate Easter in spite of the Antis. We learn that the Knights Templar contemplate celebrating Easter at one of the up-town churches with all the pomp and dignity becoming the event of the resurrection of our Saviour. (Look out, Antis.) The argument of Sir Dale at the convention of the money changers would convince everybody but the hide-bound Antis, who were kicked out for some cause or other, but they would not hear him."

Note it is evidently known that this would-be Masonic political paper hath not spoken one word that would bear examination. Mr. Dale actually did not believe his own statement, for he very readily admitted that the three first degrees are the only genuine degrees in Masonry; and that they were compelled to recognize the Jews and Mohammedans as brethren in these three degrees. The Antis sat quiet and listened with patience to all the defenders of lodgery had to say. We listened with quietness even to Col. James Lewis; but every Anti-masonic speaker was interrupted by the secretists. The Masons and Odd-fellows anticipate raising the late widow Hale's endowment to $500. The many lodges in this city will of course soon pay this first widow of a Mason since the N. C. A. Convention; but this $500 will only be a seductive bait to the weak-minded. Rev. Dr. Vincent, an ex-Mason, thinks all worldly societies a hindrance to the church. Pray for our deliverance. I have become more of a target for secretists than ever before.

MARCH 17, 1888.—I met a very prominent minister to-day, a friend of Prof. Phillips of Nashville, Tenn. He said: "Sir, I was deceived by the Masons, and joined them years ago; but it happened that a Master Mason of my town ruined the character of a young lady by promising to marry her, but after deceiving her he refused to marry her. This young lady was the daughter of a prominent merchant and an Anti-mason. I made the proper affidavit and had him summoned before the lodge, but the lodge decided that the father of the girl was unknown (all Masons understand this); but I insisted that this gentleman was a business man of our town, and his daughter was raised up here with us, and we do all know him. But the lodge finally voted to discharge the man, and prosecute me for violating my Masonic obligation. I thereupon asked how much I owed them. The secretary said seventy-five cents. I paid it, took my card and bid them farewell forever. I tell you, sir, I am Anti-masonic from my heart."

This is only a specimen of what all secret lodges will do. F. J. DAVIDSON.

PROHIBITION OF LODGE AND LIQUOR IN TEXAS.

THE ONLY SPEAKER AMONG THE COLORED VOTERS.

CALDWELL, Texas, March 17, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since I wrote you last I visited Cameron. Here I found Elder Lights of Bryan, who preaches there once in each month. He is a reader of the Cynosure and says he is loving it more and more. Cameron is a quiet little city, and almost every family, white and colored, owns their own homes. They have five churches, two of which are colored, built in connection with the lodge, the Methodist with the Odd-fellows, and the Baptist with the Brothers of Friendship (U. B. F.) Here I did what I could for reform, speaking on prohibition to quite a large crowd at the court-house. After an hour's talk I canvassed the crowd and found some strong Republicans, but the better thinking part promised to vote for General Fisk. The meeting was a profitable one.

In this meeting I saw more the need of work among my people. As I spoke of the old parties, some sat and were afraid to say yes or no to any questions. They are truly wedded to their party; but a majority are anxious for the truth, and are willing to help make the country better. The reform movement against the lodge or saloon is unpopular. The people will hear, but the thing is too new to take well.

At Caldwell I found a great number of societies. Among them are "The Eastern Star," and "Seven Stars of Consolidation." The presiding elder of the A. M. E. church of this district is to be here on the 19th inst. to work up a Masonic lodge. I have given out tracts and said what I could to warn the people against its formation.

In speaking of the power of the lodge to one of the presiding elders, he took me by the hand and said, "I have felt its power already." He pointed to men who because of their allegiance to the lodge they were given the best places, while he and his family were put off in the woods to live if they could. He says he intends to stand up for God if it costs him his bread. He is above the average of preachers among our people, but has withstood the lodge. We have many more, but they are generally whipped into line by those over them. This dear brother needs our prayers. I spoke to quite a crowd on prohibition, and aimed to show the evil effects of liquor on society, and also the great sin of the license system and our responsibility as voters. After reading extracts from the "Supreme Court decision," and the Prohibition platform, I showed that each regarded the liquor traffic as a nuisance, and that the National Prohibition party was the only party now asking the voters' support that would sweep every vestige of the curse from our land. Rev. Lewis Wilson was the first to stand up and declare himself for prohibition first, last and at all times, and others followed. If our prohibition friends will spend some time among my people they will help swell the ranks of the Prohibition party. There is not a person in Texas speaking among them but myself, and I am doing it of my own accord. It may be that after the meeting of the convention in Waco on the 25th of April, they will put some one in the field. Wherever a few Prohibitionists are found, Gen. Fisk's name is the only one mentioned for the Prohibition standard-bearer. The people are beginning to think for themselves on the questions of interest to our country. We praise God for this. As long as I can raise money to get over the country, I shall lift up my voice against the liquor traffic. Yours for reform, L. G. JORDAN.

SHALL THE LODGE HAVE THE MONEY?

SEYMOUR LAKE, Mich.

DEAR EDITOR:—Again I appeal to the Cynosure for help. The Masonic devil is after me in a new form. Let me explain: I joined the Freemasons in the fall of 1867, and the M. E. church the winter of 1868. Of course I "backslid," but continued with the church.

Four years ago I promised God if he would forgive my sins he should have my time and property. The first thing I had to give up was tobacco, and while talking with a Mason there was something said that displeased him. He drew his hand across his throat, warning me of the penalty of my obligation. I cried out within my soul, "Oh, my God, must I always be bound by these terrible oaths?" The answer came, "No, I will redeem you." Like a flash of lightning, I was cleansed from Masonry. Praise God! My idol was gone. I now loathed Masonry. How clearly I saw its dark and hellish ways leading men down to hell, and they thinking they are on their way to heaven!

Time passed on. I received notice from the lodge to pay all back dues, some $8, I believe. My money all belonged to the Lord. How was I to pay it—pay God's money into the hands of the devil? How could I? The Free Methodists say I should have paid the dues first, then left the lodge. The Lord took me out of the lodge first. I never thought of the dues until the lodge reminded me of them. Now Masonry deceived me from the beginning. I offered to leave the matter before any justice in the county, but they would not, but preferred charges for non-payment of dues, and for condemning Masonry.

I have not paid those dues and shall not until God gives the command.

Now, dear Cynosure, am I right or wrong? Will the Cynosure hold up my hands in this matter.

D. BENJAMIN.

Certainly we will, brother. The lodge began by defrauding you, and will never do anything else. Nothing is due to the order or its members but to pray for them, and endeavor to save them from the snare of the devil into which they have fallen.—ED.

PITH AND POINT.

A TRUE MAN READY.

An inquiry "from a United Presbyterian brother" in your issue March 15, 1888, page 9, would likely be answered by Collins & Co., of the Christian Instructor, 1522 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa., if the writer chooses to write to them. If it is the matter of secrecy on which he wants a faithful witness, then as a Christian and a Christian minister, as also a subscriber to the Christian Cynosure, I would not be afraid to stand examination at his hands myself. Some in our church are alarmed about the safety of this as well as some other principles of our profession. Yours for freedom from all entanglements except the yoke of Christ.—JOSEPH MCKELVEY, Blair, Hancock Co., W. Va.

HOW ELDER BANCROFT HEARD THE NEWS

Bro. Bancroft of Wisconsin was first introduced to the Cynosure at my fireside in Richland county, while traveling as agent for the American Bible Society. I have spent pleasant hours with him. He has changed on some views he held then, but not on the great question of opposing secrecy. God bless him, with all the rest of the workers for Christ. Put my name down as a veteran. I feel that I would like to have cut in the marble slab that may mark my resting place, "He was opposed to Freemasonry."—JOHN MOTTER.

A VETERAN SUBSCRIBER AND HIS "CYNOSURE" ACQUAINTANCES.

My health will not admit of my doing much in the way of new subscribers. I am interested in the success of the Cynosure; have taken it from the beginning. My son subscribed for it the first year, and I have since and expect to while I live. The Christian spirit which characterizes all its productions I consider superior to any other source and second only to the Bible in its salutary influences. It has made me acquainted, in one sense, with scores of brethren and sisters in Christ, whom I take home to my heart as God's dear children, and whom I should rejoice to meet in the present life; but if I am not thus blest I trust I shall in the future.—C. REYNOLDS.

GOOD TEMPLARS.

After we have succeeded in having prohibition for two years in the town of Vernon, Waukesha Co., Wis, the Good Templars have felt constrained to do something for us, and so have organized a lodge. Rev. Mr. Clark of Janesville has been the agent in the work. Bro. Faris and I have protested, and considerable feeling has been manifested in the matter. As a result arrangements are being made to debate the question some time next month..... Would it not be well for the Cynosure to find out how much of the $6,000 subscribed at the Prohibition conference in Chicago last winter was by the lodges? Also give a history of the Prohibition party and the relation of the lodges to it. They here claimed to be the founders of it.—J. B. G., Vernon, Wis.

NOTE.—The only lodge subscription in the Conference was by a little old man in the gallery named Thomas Moulding, who announced a pledge of $100 from the Grand Lodge of Sons of Temperance of Illinois. T. C. Richmond, the prominent Good Templar candidate from Wisconsin who ran for chairmanship of the National Committee and got two or three votes, promised $100 from a Prohibition club in his State, but there was nothing to show that he spoke in the name of the order.

Uriah Copp, head of Illinois Good Templars and Treasurer of the Supreme Lodge of the Universe, in his last report speaks of the influence of the order in originating the party, but is guarded in his language and does not make an absolute claim. His report was printed in the Wisconsin Good Templar of Madison, Wis.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON II, Second Quarter.—April 8.

SUBJECT.—Christ's Last Warning.—Matt. 23:27-39.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me.—Ps. 51:10.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Peloubet's Notes.]

There is nothing, by common consent of all men who are entitled to judge upon the matter, in all eloquence, ancient and modern, to compare, for grandeur of malediction, for moral nobleness, for intellectual insight, with the eloquence of this denunciation of Christ's. How it rolls and scorches like floods of lava.—Joseph Parker.

"Scribes and Pharisees." In the scribes and Pharisees we see ignorance, hypocrisy, pride, insolence, selfishness, rapacity, a restless desire for the applause of men, and an overbearing contempt for all but themselves. In Christ we see knowledge, wisdom, meekness, gentleness, generosity, sincerity, perfect disinterestedness, elevated piety, and unbounded benevolence toward all, however humble or poor Gentle and peaceful as our Saviour was, he could not, without being false to himself and his mission, have refrained from affixing the brand of his indignant reprobation on characters and conduct such as theirs. His whole character constrains us to regard them as the well-weighed "words of truth and soberness," wrung from him by the sight of the widespread and enduring mischief which these self-constituted leaders of the people were entailing upon their unhappy followers.—W. L. Alexander, D. D.

"Even so ye also." Note that Jesus spoke this to the faces of the guilty ones, not behind their backs. He was no backbiter. The hard truths he was compelled to utter were spoken to the guilty ones themselves, and at the cost of the speaker's life. Note, too, that Jesus could speak such words as follow, because he knew what was in the hearts of men.

"Woe unto you,.... because ye build the tombs of the prophets." Among the Mohammedans it is a common way of showing respect for any distinguished man to build a tomb for him. By doing this, they profess respect for his character and veneration for his memory. So the Pharisees, by building tombs in this manner, professedly approved of the character and conduct of the prophets, and disapproved of the conduct of their fathers in killing them.—Barnes.

"Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves," etc.: by your plotting to kill me, a prophet, you show that while you profess to differ from your fathers, by building their tombs, in reality you are doing just what they did. For that very afternoon they had been plotting against Jesus (Matt. 21.45, 46; 23:15). So Calvin says of the corrupt church in his day: "Let them, then, adorn the images of the saints as they please, with incense, candles, flowers, and every kind of pomp. If Peter were now alive, they would tear him in pieces; Paul they would bury with stones; and if Christ himself were yet in the world, they would burn him with a slow fire."

"Ye serpents." "Representing their cunning, insidious, deceitful and depraved character, their hurtful and poisonous influence." "Forever hissing at the heels of the holy." "Generation of vipers:" offspring, brood of vipers.—G. W. Clark.

"That upon you may come." Denoting the intent of God, not merely the result It was in God's plans to bring the final punishment upon this generation.

"All these things shall come upon this generation." Referring to the fearful calamities to come upon the Jewish people, culminating in the destruction of Jerusalem, about forty years later. The punishment was a national one. But the individuals of the last generation received no more than their just due, nor of the former less, since another world completes the individual punishment.—Rev. Com.

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem." How ineffably grand and melting is this apostrophe! It is the very heart of God pouring itself forth through human flesh and speech. It is this incarnation of the innermost life and love of Deity, pleading with men, bleeding for them, and ascending, only to open his arms to them, and win them back by the power of this story of matchless love, that has conquered the world, that will yet "draw all men unto him," and beautify and ennoble humanity itself.—J. F., and B.

"Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Your house is left to you: I leave it; and therefore it is desolate. The Saviour's reference is to his own leaving or departure,—a leaving that involved the penal departure of his Father as the Head of the theocracy. The Jewish theocracy was to be a theocracy no longer. "Ichabod" was to be its name. The Jews henceforth, instead of being the people and kingdom of God, would be a mere Semitic nationality, under the dynasty of the Herods or under no dynasty at all. Their temple would be an empty edifice, dedicated to the empty celebration of an empty ritual.—Morison.

"Ye shall not see me henceforth." He now closed his public ministry among them. They saw him no more in his Messianic ministration and work. After his resurrection he appeared, not to all the people, but to chosen witnesses (Acts 10:41).—G. W. Clark.

"Till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord:" that is, till you shall recognize me as your Messiah, as the multitudes did on his triumphal entry, quoting from Ps. 118:26 (see Matt. 21:9). Some time the Jews will be converted, and hail Jesus as their King, and will be restored in some way to be a people of the living God. They were not left without a star of hope, even in the dense darkness of this hour.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOT WATER FOR PLANTS.

It is a fortunate circumstance that a plant will endure a scalding heat that is fatal to most of its minute enemies. Water heated to the boiling point, poured copiously over the stem of an enfeebled peach tree, and allowed to stand about its collar, will often have the happiest restorative effects. Trees showing every symptom of the yellows have often been rendered luxuriantly green and thrifty again by this simple means. The heat is presumably too much for the fungus which had infested the vital layers of the tree, immediately under the outer bark.

The London florists recommend hot water, up to 145° F., as a remedy, when plants are sickly owing to the soil souring—the acid, absorbed by the roots, acting as a poison. The usual resort is to the troublesome job of repotting. When this is not necessary for any other reason it is much simpler to pour hot water freely through the stirred soil; it will presently come through tinged with brown. After this thorough washing, if the plants are kept warm, new root points and new growth will soon follow.

A lady friend had a fine calla in a three gallon pot, which showed signs of ill health. On examination the outer portion of the filling was found mouldy, it being in large part fresh horse manure. As repotting was inconvenient, the plant being in flower, hot water was freely used; it killed the mould, and the plant began to revive and was soon all right. —Vick's Magazine.

FARM HOMES.—In discussing this subject one of the speakers at a Farmers' Institue in Missouri pertinently said that the privilege of the farmer was to make his home as pleasant and comfortable as possible. He should supply the house with all the conveniences and labor saving appliances. The grounds should be kept neat and all unsightly objects removed or hidden. A warm, cheerful and well-lighted room, with a table covered with books and papers, tends to keep the children at home. A farmer clear of debt and possessed of a clear conscience, a comfortable home and a happy wife and children is the happiest man on earth.

CARE OF HOUSE PLANTS.—One great enemy of house plants is dust, says a floral authority. Whether the plants are at the windows or upon a stand or table contrive some means of covering them at sweeping time. A curtain of some light material can be suspended, and kept from touching the plants by the aid of thin sticks placed in some of the larger pots. Don't remove the cover till all the dust has settled. Some persons use newspapers, which, although better than no cover at all, yet is only a slovenly proceeding.

Coffee acts upon the brain as a stimulant, inciting it to increased activity and producing sleeplessness; hence, it is of great value as an antidote to narcotic poisons. It is also supposed to prevent too rapid waste in the tissues of the body and in that way enables it to support life on less food. These effects are due to the volatile and also to a peculiar crystallizable nitrogenous principle, termed caffeine. The leaves of the plant likewise contain the same principle, and the inhabitants of the island of Lumatsa prefer an infusion of the leaves to that of the berries. Its essential qualities are also changed, the heat causing the development of the volatile oil and peculiar acid which gives aroma and flavor.—Scientific American.

WHOOPING COUGH.—If the head be held back and the fingers dipped in cold water, and the water thrown off into the throat, as soon as one drop reaches the throat the spasm will cease.

A GARGLE FOR SORE THROAT.—Make one-half pint strong sage tea; to this add two tablespoonfuls of honey, two teaspoonfuls of powdered alum, and one teaspoonful of borax. Gargle three or four times a day.

Coal ashes, mixed with salt water to a stiff paste, will harden like a rock, and this paste is excellent to fill cracks in stoves, and it can be used to line a coal or soapstone stove.

LITTLE, "BUT ENOUGH,"

as Mercutio said of his wound. We refer to Dr. Pierce's little Pellets, which are small, swift and sure, in cases of sick headache, biliousness, constipation, and indigestion.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley:—I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals.

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield; In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. HELLOGG

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1888.

ONE MORE APPEAL.

When that wise and timely plan to send 1,000 copies of the Cynosure to our Southern brethren in the ministry was proposed, my hopes were sanguine that the full amount would be subscribed by the first of April, 1888. Truly, a "great and effectual door is opened" for us to glorify God in this grand project. We should, by no means, fall below the mark, but aim higher still. There are more than one thousand colored ministers to whom the Cynosure ought to go by our contributions, but let us by all means reach that mark. By that time so much fruit of the enterprise will appear that many more helpers, we hope, will come up with the widow of ninety years, and swell the number of copies sent to the Southern brethren to, at least, two thousand. When we contemplate the Southern field as white for the harvest, as so strikingly manifest by the meetings lately held in New Orleans and other cities and districts in the South,

WE SHOULD PROSECUTE THE WORK WITH DOUBLE VIGOR.

Let the emancipation proclaimed by the immortal Lincoln be ratified by the N. C. A. army of braves by extending liberty and proclaiming it to the captive souls. Liberty to the bodies of those dear brethren is simply the initial to liberty to the soul—that is, to the man. When men, colored or white, come to know the facts of vital interest to them, they will no longer help fill up the lodges. They will follow the noble example of the brethren in New Orleans, "come out from among them," by the thousands instead of scores.

I am glad, more so than language can express, that the Southern Baptists are coming out in whole conventions and associations. God will bless them, if men curse them, for their manly decisions. I shall send those resolutions, passed by those bodies, to our afraid Baptists of the North—to the American Baptist Publication Society and National Baptist.

That the brave decisions of Southern Christians, against the lodge, will help

is not a fiction. It will come. We shall see our noble brethren, of all shades, from white to black, helping to knock off the shackles of lodgery from these churches and ministers who have not the courage of their convictions—and they are legion.

The N. C. A. has just sent me, free, for free distribution, a package of tracts. The Moody tract, Finney tract, etc., are a power for good. There is not will power enough over the eye and the ear to shut off all the light that such tracts shed. Thanks to the N. C. A. for said eye-and-ear openers. Send them out broadcast, brethren; and ye heralds of truth, SCATTER THEM.

Now, brethren of the reforms, let me once more suggest, that we

DOUBLE UP.

I will, and trust God for the means. How many will duplicate? I imagine I hear voices, like the sound of many waters, saying, I WILL. Then those who have not yet put to a shoulder respond, Leave room for me. God bless you for such music. It will make the grandest doxology. Praise Him! Try Him herewith, and see if the windows of heaven do not open and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room to receive. NATHAN CALLENDER.

—A Colorado judge has decided that a man is in duty bound to tell his wife where he spends his evenings when he is away from home. This is not favorable to the lodges, and if the wife was a wise woman and the law was well applied it would cut off some membership from the orders.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

It is strangely difficult for men to adhere to the Word of God, even Christian men, and ministers. If there is any one commandment which is clear and explicit beyond the possibility of misunderstanding it is the Fourth. If there is any one of the ten which is binding on the Christian conscience, that one is. Yet the conscience of the churches has been so seared on this subject that we have only the fragment of a rest day left, and Mammon and Bacchus are seeking to take it away also.

The trouble has arisen from the attempt to secure the second table of the law and lets the first take care of itself. The main business of government is generally held to be the protection of life and property. The magistrate is not a minister of God to men for good, but he is a policeman to wink at the licensed saloon-keeper and pound and bang and lock up the wretched drunkard or thief.

All this results as we might anticipate. There is no way to make the second table of the law good when the first is broken to pieces. If men do not fear God they will not regard man. If men worship other gods than God in Christ, they will steal and commit adultery and murder. If men will not keep the Sabbath, but on the contrary will turn it into a day of money-making or pleasure-seeking, then, just so sure as God rules, they will find the unbridled passions of the multitude turning the six days of the week into arson, burglary, assassination and public plunder.

We are led to this line of thought by a study of the editorial pages of our religious weeklies, and the usual run of topics for sermons. It seems to have passed out of the minds of men that God has rights or makes requirements of men. Sociological, philosophical and biographical subjects seem most attractive; and even when themes like the Sabbath question are taken, the tendency is to discuss them wholly from the human standpoint. The question is not, what does God's law require about the Sabbath,—about the liquor shop? O no! It is, what will be best for men? What will be best for society? How will it turn out if we do so?

The result is that in great measure the idea of a divine law and a coming judgment are fading out of the minds of men. Vice walks the street unblushing, crime goes to church, murder receives a certificate of good character from a judge, and men who outrage women on the street are convicted by juries and sent out free by courts and prosecuting attorneys. The only remedy is a return to God's law, and ministers have power to apply this remedy and create a public conscience if they will.

We trust that every one to whom this may come will interest himself in the petitions of the Sabbath Association of Illinois which are now being sent out. Over thirty thousand ministers have already been reached. Will not all Christian men help in this matter.

THE CASE OF MR. DAVIS.

Rev. Wm. F. Davis, who is now in the Charles Street Jail, Boston, has been repeatedly mentioned in these columns. We return to his case at this time because he is still imprisoned, and also because his family require the assistance of the Christian public, the husband and father having been for more than half a year in the jail.

His offense was, as all will remember, preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ on the Lord's day on Boston Common. He was offered a police permit to hold the services but declined it on the ground that to permit implied the right to forbid. He holds that the right to preach the Gospel in an orderly and quiet way is one of the rights of man with which no government has the right to interfere, and he refused to recognize such a pretense of authority by receiving permission to preach.

He has several times been arrested and fined, as also were H. L. Hastings, Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon and others. At last he was sent to jail for a year and has now served out one-half of this time. His family meanwhile are not rich in this world's goods and are in a measure dependent upon Christians who sympathize with them in the afflictions of the Gospel.

Whether or no his action was the wisest, we feel certain that he was right in his purpose. The spirit of the old New England must linger, if at all, like coals under ashes, or he would long since have been sent out free. It is getting to be New Ireland rather than New England; and sluggers, ginvenders, and politicians seem to hold the places of influence where ministers of the Gospel and statesmen once swayed the public mind. Wendell Phillips would have been equal to the task, himself alone, but he has gone over to the majority.

It remains that Christian people throughout the country feed and clothe his family so long as the Boston churches allow him to be kept in jail as if he were a common thief. Money can be sent to Rev. H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, for him, and we trust that our subscribers who can do so will help him in his fight for a free Gospel. "I was in prison and ye came unto me."

Joseph Cook, in the Prelude to his 198th Monday lecture in Tremont Temple, made a noble contribution to the discussion of the great underlying principles of American freedom, taking Mr. Davis's case for his text on "Free Speech on Public Grounds." The address is printed entire in Zion's Herald of the 21st inst. The great lecturer maintains that the obnoxious ordinance which has imprisoned Mr. Davis is liable to dangerous perversion and has been so perverted; a hardship to the poor; unnecessary, unreasonable, unprecedented and unpolitic, and should be abolished.

THE LODGE WAR WITH A RAILROAD.

P. M. Arthur of the Engineer's Brotherhood lately gave out that the Burlington strike was a life and death struggle for his secret lodge. If the engineers lose the fight they have inaugurated against the Burlington system, said he, it means death to their organization. The brotherhood commands now from $300,000 to $500,000, and as much more can be raised. Therefore, the men are in a fighting position. And yet they realize that if a break comes in the ranks, that the order will retrograde and become such a one as that now organized by the conductors—an insurance company.

The Reading Company has just overcome the great strike of the Knights of Labor order; and the Burlington road seemed to have about recovered from the blow aimed by the engineers. But when the switchmen struck without a word of warning or complaint early Saturday morning, the railway managers understood they had the whole system of secret lodges to fight. The brotherhood leaders profess dense ignorance of the new movement, but it is on all sides understood to be a bargain; just as Arthur and Powderly made a truce and stand by each other.

The strike takes out about 500 men all along the line of the road, and effectually stops all freight business. If the company overcome this new trouble, the brakemen are ready for the word from the head of their secret sworn league. It is a fight with the whole lodge system represented by the labor societies.

This action of the switchmen will incense public opinion against these societies, and especially against the Engineer's Brotherhood, which is the controlling cause in the whole affair. The public mind was long since made up that the strike was a failure, and without the support of popular sympathy or the justification of any sound principle, the continuation of the strike can be best explained by the remark of Arthur, quoted above. The discussion of means for the prevention of strikes will be renewed, and candid men will conclude the first step to be the abolition of the secret lodge.

—A National Conference on the Christian Principles of Civil Government will be held in Association Hall, Philadelphia, on the 24th, 25th and 26th days of April next, in connection with the annual meeting of the National Reform Association.

—The adjourned meeting of the N. C. A. Board on Saturday was unable to do any business, several members being detained thus preventing a quorum. Funerals called away Presidents Blanchard and Stratton, the former being present, however, for a few minutes.

—Secretary Stoddard spoke to a good audience in the Free Methodist church on Mozart Street in the northwestern part of this city last Friday evening. An incident of the meeting was the awakening of a sincere young Scotchman who had joined the Knights of Labor, under the supposition that this was the only way to contend with monopolies—just as Good Templars wickedly persuade temperance men to join them as the best way of fighting the rum power. But when the light of the Word of God was turned upon the order the young man was astonished, for he professed to follow Christ. This effect upon his mind was increased by the remarks of Dr. Strouble, who had also and for like reasons joined the K. of L., but saw the cunning deception of the devil in the whole business and left the order, though still fighting the monopolies.

—Bro. Davidson sends from New Orleans a little bill which reads:

"COURSE OF SERMONS by Pastor A. S. Jackson, Common Street Baptist church. Feeling very deeply my responsibility before God to rightly instruct my flock and congregation in all social, moral and religious questions which agitate the public mind, I shall preach four sermons on Present Social Evils and the Duty of the Church, beginning on next Sunday evening, March 25, at 7 P.M., and continuing through April (first Sunday excepted) each Sabbath evening. Let all who love truth attend."

So the good work goes on. Bro. Jackson is wisely beginning a most important work of instruction, so that men may not blindly follow or stubbornly oppose the truth. This is a most needful step in the work of separating the believers in Jesus Christ from the "unequal" fellowship with unbelievers in the lodge. May the Lord bless this effort.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Elder S. C. Kimball, of the New Hampshire State Association and editor of the Christian Witness, began meetings at Weatogue, Conn., on the 20th.

—Rev. J. T. Michael, who has for a time been living in Washington City, has removed to Scranton, Pa., and may be addressed at 1533 Caprouse avenue.

—The Mormon Elder, Cornish, whose brutal despotism over some of the remote communities in northern Michigan was assailed by Rev. Wm. F. Davis, the Boston Common hero, about a year since, is again heard from. He was lately unfolding his infamous system at Oscoda.

—The Wesleyan Methodist announces the death of Mrs. Charles Merrick, of Syracuse. Her loss will be deeply felt among the brethren in that city, for she was an excellent woman, whose children rise up and call her blessed; and they, at the same time, are an honor to her faithful and pious culture. Bro. Merrick has the sincere sympathy of all his friends in this office.

—An interesting letter from Rev. A. J. Bailey of Ogden, Utah, brother of Rev. E. D. Bailey of the Washington American, gives very instructive particulars of church work among the Mormons. It is written in response to a contribution from this office. Some weeks ago the College Church Sabbath-school at Wheaton voted to send Bro. Bailey a part of their missionary collections.

—The Living Way of last week reports the death of S. L. Countee, brother of R. N. Countee, pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist church, which occurred on the 19th inst. His disease was consumption, but there was no development of any lung trouble until the attack of the hired assassins of the lodge on the night of October 18, 1885. At that time Mr. S. L. Countee was, with others, accompanying his brother home from church, when the party was fired into. One lady was hit and both the brothers with buckshot. The deceased was struck between the shoulders with a shot—R. N. Countee yet has a ball in the back of his head. The insidious disease soon made itself known, and no remedy seemed able to stop it. For a long time the brother has been expecting his departure, and was ready to meet his Lord.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

BROOKLYN, Mar. 19, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—William Black Steel writes in the North American Review for March on the "Workingman's Sabbath." He says: "Dr. Felix L. Oswald, in his article on 'The Coming Civilization,' speaks as follows concerning the Sabbath of the future for workingmen: 'The workingmen of the future will most emphatically protest against mediæval methods of government interference with legitimate rewards of industry; as, for instance, by the suppression of public recreation on the only day when about ninety-nine per cent of our laborers find their only chance of leisure.' If the workingmen of the future are wise they will do nothing towards breaking down the legal restrictions which are still thrown around Sabbath observance in this country. They ought, on the contrary, to use all their influence to preserve the Sabbath as a day of complete rest. The workingman surely needs one day of rest out of seven. The introduction of public amusements on Sabbath would diminish the respect and reverence with which we, as a nation, have always regarded that day, and it would be but a short time before the Lord's day would be completely secularized.

"As a proof of this, take the Sabbath of the present in France and Germany. In those countries is realized Dr. Oswald's ideal of the workingman's Sabbath. There is an unlimited license in regard to amusements, and, what seems to follow as a necessary consequence, an almost unlimited license in regard to business. From the statistics lately collected by the Prussian government, we learn that of the 500,156 manufacturing establishment of all kinds in those provinces, 57.75 per cent were operated on Sabbath. Of the 147,318 establishments interested in trade and transportation in 29 provinces, 77 per cent were operated on Sabbath.

"In France the case is not quite so bad, but it is well known that the amount of business transacted on Sabbath in Paris is immense. In each of these countries thousands of laborers and clerks labor from one week's end to another without any opportunity for rest, recreation, or self-improvement. What a strain this must be on wearied muscles and overwrought nerves; and how intensely must the tired laborers long for one day in seven in which to take rest! But he has voluntarily reduced himself to this degraded condition, and there is no redress for him now, for if he refuses to work on Sabbath his employer dismisses him, and secures some one who will.

"Now, does the American workman propose to follow the example of his French and German brother? It will be a sad day for himself and his country when he does so. Already is there a strong tendency here towards the secularization of the Sabbath. Many of our railroad companies run their freight and passenger trains on that day, and if their employes refuse to work they are promptly discharged. Other corporations, and even private individuals are following in the wake of the railroad companies. Nothing would please avaricious capital and grasping monopoly better than to see a complete secularization of the Sabbath in the United States, and nothing would tend more towards the degradation and demoralization of our working classes, and through them of the whole country."

The high license bill is to be voted on at Albany next Tuesday, with a reasonable prospect of defeat. High license has been adopted in Illinois, Minnesota, Dakota, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. In the State first mentioned the saloons have been reduced from 14,000 to 9,000. In Philadelphia they have been lessened 2,500. But who does not know that drinking is just as prevalent, and yet more respectable than before? Louisiana licenses a lottery. Why not? Utah licenses polygamy. Indiana licenses "consecutive polygamy." Why not? This principle is tinctured with the malignant and diabolical spirit of the pit. Prohibition is the only legitimate remedy.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Troop Avenue Presbyterian church, Rev. L. R. Foote, pastor. This is a congregation of over 800 members. Bro. Foote is a laborious and successful pastor. We had a large and attentive audience. I preached on the mediatorial dominion of Christ over the nations. Mr. Russell W. McKee, the President of the Sabbath-school Union, gave a hearty endorsement. He wishes me to send him National Reform documents that he may read upon the subject. Hon. Darwin R. James, member of Congress from this district, suggested that a bill be prepared for Congress embodying the proposed amendment. It might not go through the first or second time, but keep it up and when it was reported favorably by the judiciary committee, the Congress would pass it. And then it would be submitted to the State legislatures. He was heartily in favor of the movement and would give us help in the matter. There was quite a sprinkling of politicians out. It was good soil for seed-sowing. A great many young men were out; and they are the ones to reach. J. M. FOSTER

Colonel Switzer, of the National Bureau of Statistics, states that at the request of the National Druggists' Association, he has just concluded an investigation as to the proportion of the liquor consumed yearly in this country, used in the arts and manufactures. He has found that this percentage, instead of being 50 as had been claimed, or even 30, was only 7.2 per cent. Colonel Switzer also said the annual consumption of strong drink in the United States averaged an annual cost of $47 to every man, woman, and child.

When Christ was preaching by the sea, at the time he borrowed Peter's boat for a pulpit, the quese tion of the hour was not "how to reach the masses?'- but how shall the masses reach the Master? The Lord borrowed Peter's boat, but he never remains long in any one's debt. Peter filled two boats with the subsequent draft; and our capacity would need to be doubled to receive his blessings did we consecrate to his use what we have and what we are.—H. L. Hastings.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Congress has given no attention to the question of Prohibition since last week when Senator Colquit, of Georgia, who has taken quite a prominent part in the Prohibition movement in his State, introduced a local option bill in the Senate. It provides for a local option election in the District of Columbia, whenever 10,000 inhabitants of the district shall petition the Chief of Police to order such an election.

A member of the Senate District Committee suggested that it would be more business-like to obtain an expression of opinion through the Police Department by a general canvass of the city. In this way the sentiment of the people could be nearly enough determined as for or against Prohibition to afford Congress a safe guide for its future legislation without resorting to the questionable machinery of a popular election. It is understood that Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, favors a high license system, and that he is preparing a bill to that effect which he will introduce soon.

A New Hampshire Congressman has just given a surprise to Washington political circles by developing the title of "Reverend." The Universalist Church of our Father, in this city, which is now without a pastor, is taking trial sermons from different preachers. On last Sunday the service was conducted and the sermon delivered morning and evening by Representative McKinney. The Rev. Congressman made a very favorable impression, and from the comment passed by leading church members, it would not be surprising if he were called to the pastorate of this church.

In the early part of this week there was a great crowd in the United States Supreme Court room to hear the decision in favor of the Bell Telephone Company. The court held that there was nothing to show that any one had invented an apparatus prior to that invented by Bell, although vibration by electricity had been transmitted by wire prior to 1854. It held that Bell discovered the principle and perfected it. There is nothing requiring the operation of instruments before the patent issues. It is the practicability of the process that is to be shown.

The W. C. T. U. are holding a week of prayer in this city with daily services at different churches. Miss Francis Willard takes a prominent part in these meetings.

The Prohibitionists of the city are full of activity in their hall at the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and 4½ street. The Prohibition Union holds its regular meetings here every Wednesday evening, led by Mr. A. A. Wheelock, Major Walker and others. It is an interesting proof that much of the old anti-slavery spirit is inherited by these reformers, in the fact that the little weekly sheet they are publishing is called the Abolitionist. It is issued from the office of the American, and its columns are full of spirit. Its object is set forth to be the taking of higher ground on the Prohibition question, and to secure harmony among the temperance people of the District, without antagonizing any particular temperance organization.

One of the striking features of the Woman's Congress is the variety of labors and methods of occupation represented in the list of subjects to be considered. There are to be papers and addresses on kindergartens, hospitals, education, general and professional, prison reform, suffrage, social purity, Indians, missions, home and foreign, etc., and all these are to be considered with reference to the relation of woman to them. It was thought a few years ago that no assembly or convention of women could be called or held unless suffrage or church mission work were the attracting subjects. Chicago women will be well represented by Miss F. E. Willard, Mrs. L. A. Hagans, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temperance Temple builder, Mrs. Jennie F. Willing, Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett and Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson.

Mr. Moody recently finished a series of sixty-two sermons in Louisville. At the closing meeting he took up the question of one of the audience, who wanted to know what authority a church had to turn out a member for "simply selling whisky." He made a strong answer, and in course of it had some radical things to say. He said:

"We have got to make this business disreputable. You needn't begin to squirm around and say, 'I have friends in the whisky business myself.' They oughtn't to be in it. God pity the minister who hasn't got backbone enough to fight it. Some of them say, 'I'll lose my pulpit.' Suppose you do—you'll find forty more open for you."

THE HOME.

MY SACRIFICE.

Laid on the altar, O my Lord divine,
  Accept my gift this day, for Jesus' sake.
I have no jewels to adorn thy shrine,
  Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make;
But here I bring, within my trembling hand,
  This will of mine—a thing that seemeth small—
And thou alone, O Lord, canst understand
  How, when I yield thee this, I yield mine all.
Hidden therein, thy searching gaze can see
  Struggles of passion—visions of delight—
All that I have, or am, or fain would be—
  Deep loves, fond hopes, and longings infinite;
It hath been wet with tears and dimmed with sighs,
  Clenched in my grasp till beauty it hath none;
Now from thy footstool, where it vanquished lies,
  The prayer ascendeth, "May thy will be done."
Take it, O Father, ere my courage fail,
  And merge it so in thine own will that e'en
If in some desperate hour my cries prevail,
  And thou give back my gift, it may have been
So changed, so purified, so fair have grown,
  So one with thee, so filled with peace divine,
I may not know or feel it as mine own,
  But, gaining back my will, may find it thine.

THE HOLY SPIRIT IN US AND ON US.

The frequently repeated prayer by Christians, that God would "send the Holy Spirit," "give us the Holy Spirit," "baptize us with the Holy Spirit," "anoint us afresh with the Holy Spirit," and many other such petitions, almost always raise the query in the minds of some, as to whether such prayers do not question the fact of the abiding presence of the Comforter in and with his people. "For," they urge, "did not our Lord say: 'and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you?' Is not this a specific promise that the Holy Spirit shall take up a permanent residence in the heart of every believer? and, if so, is it not an impeachment of the truth, or a denial of the fulfillment of this promise, if we ask God to send us the Spirit, or anoint us with the Spirit, or baptize us afresh with the Spirit? If we have the Spirit already, how can we expect to receive him?"

Nevertheless, it remains true to Christian experience that these Christians who seem most full of the Spirit, are they who most frequently pray for the anointing or baptism of the Spirit, and seem most deeply to realize the need of such anointing from time to time. Moreover, there are many passages in the New Testament that lead us to believe that there is a supplemental gift of the Holy Spirit not included in the promise of the Comforter. There are other passages which clearly indicate that the same disciples received from the Father and from Jesus separate gifts of the Holy Spirit. As, for instance, after his resurrection he met and talked with his disciples (before they went up to Jerusalem); and it is recorded that he gave them his blessing in these words: "Then said Jesus unto them, Peace be unto you; as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Certainly here was a giving of the Holy Ghost. The last words of Luke's Gospel probably refer to the same fact, for there we read: "Behold, I send the promise of the Father upon you" (Luke 24: 49); then "he led them forth as far as to Bethany and lifted up his hands and blessed them, and was parted from them and carried up into heaven; and they worshiped him, and returned unto Jerusalem with great joy, and were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God." Surely this is the account of the giving of the Comforter, which indeed they received just as he was leaving them. Their great joy and the fullness of praise which they gave to God were the evidence that they had received the Holy Spirit.

Looking a little farther, we find two distinct promises: one of the coming of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter, to dwell in them and walk in them, and to teach and guide them and inspire their prayers; the other of a coming as an anointing power to fit them for service. John the Baptist declared, that while he baptized his disciples with water, there cometh One who would baptize them with fire and the Holy Ghost. Luke twice records the promise, that while tarrying in prayer at Jerusalem they should be anointed with power from on high after the Holy Ghost came upon them. (Matt. 3: 11; Luke 24: 49; Acts 1: 5, 11.) While there is some difficulty in separating the fulfillment of these promises one from the other, it still remains to be seen very clearly that the coming of the Holy Ghost to dwell in them as the Comforter, and the falling of the Holy Ghost upon them at Pentecost were two different matters. The gift of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost was preliminary to the public service of the disciples, and not only accredited them in connection with the phenominal manifestation of the tongues of fire and gift of miraculous speech, but endowed them with spiritual power and great boldness, so that these heretofore uneducated men were apparently transformed into the ablest of speakers, and from being feeble and timid they became phenominal in boldness and courage. Moreover, we find that this Pentecostal gift was repeated to them after a few days. The chief priests and rulers being enraged at the boldness of their preaching, in which they charged home upon them the murder of the Lord Jesus, threatened them and charged them to preach no more in Jesus's name. Being under restraint at the time, and full of fear from the people, they did nothing more than threaten. Then it was that the disciples gathered together again, and after another season of prayer and praise, "the place was shaken where they were assembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake the word of God with boldness." (Acts 4:31.) This anointing or filling with the Holy Ghost was repeated to the disciples during the entire apostolic period, although the minute descriptions of it fade away into mere references, as when the apostle declared more than once that, "the hand of the Lord was with us."

On this line of inquiry into this subject it may be seen that there are two phases of the Spirit's mission to the disciples of Jesus. One gift was for personal comfort and edification; the other was for power in order to service. One gift was to them as the children of God; the other was to them as the disciples of Jesus Christ. One gift was permanent and abiding; the other was for the time being, and renewed again and again in answer to the prayers of the disciples, as they had need of special help from heaven. One gift ministers personal assurance to us in the comforts of communion and personal spiritual walk, the other serves to keep us humble before God and always dependent upon him for power for service. It is more than probable that many Christians have the Comforter, who are not anointed with the Holy Ghost as the great power of God from on high. It is, however, perfectly clear that it is the will of God, that all children of his shall also be anointed "with power from on high," in order that they may do the work of disciples of Jesus; and it is a great sin on the part of Christians to rest content with the presence of the Comforter, and neglect to seek after and wait for this second gift of the Holy Ghost. It is for the lack of this anointing of the Holy Ghost that there is so little power in the church, and so little efficiency in the preaching of the Word.—Independent.

PERPETUAL PRESENCE OF CHRIST.

A Christian should make his Saviour a perpetual companion, every day of the week. Christ offers to walk with him in every day's journey of life. What companionship so enlivening and so purifying as his? Who, also, can so "make our hearts to burn within us" by the way? Christ's presence with believers is one of the best preventives from sin, one of the best stimulators to duty. Jesus is "made unto us sanctification" as well as redemption. That is, his is a spirit of business. And when we live in hourly communion with Jesus it has a tendency to make us holy. The sense of Christ's immediate presence is a perpetual check upon our lusts—a perpetual spur to our self-indolence. Are we provoked to cutting words or irritating retorts? One look from the gentle, all-forgiving Jesus should be enough to seal the lip and to smooth the ruffled brow. Are we ever tempted to keen bargains and over-reaching in business? Selfishness says: "All fair; others do it; it is the custom of our trade." But what will the pure and holy Jesus say? How will our account books look to him when he "audits" them? And so on through the calendar of duties and the circle of daily temptations. With my Saviour beside me, how will I dare to play the coward, or the cheat, or the trifler, or the sensualist, or the trickster? Nowhere will Christ's presence be more cheering and sustaining than in the weariness of the sick room, or under the silent shadows of a great bereavement. "Christ comes to me in the watches of the night," said the bed-ridden saint, Haliburton. "He draws aside the curtains, and says, 'It is I; be of good cheer; be not afraid.' Here I lie pained without pain; without strength, and yet strong." And when the last farewells have been spoken in the dying hour, this never-failing Friend will sweetly whisper, "Fear not, I am with thee. Where I am ye shall be also. Having loved my own, I will love them unto the end."—Messiah's Herald.

FULLNESS IN CHRIST.

"Have you got it?" is a question often asked now. I remember being asked this, and I could not help replying, "I have got HIM, and with Him all the its." God does not give us Christ piecemeal, but wholly. We have a whole Christ, or no Christ. Now, while God does not give us a single blessing apart from Christ, yet in and with him we have all spiritual blessings. As a matter of fact, that is true to every believer, but as a matter of experience, it is not always so. "I have lost my peace," groaned a saint one day. We replied, "Have you lost your Saviour?" "Oh, no!" "Well, then, he is our peace." "I forgot that." Just so, lose sight of Christ, and away go your feelings; and the way not to get your feelings back is to look for them; the way to get them is not to look for them, but to look to HIM.

Remember there is in Christ for you a fullness of acceptance, therefore do not doubt him; there is fullness of peace, therefore trust him; there is fullness of life, therefore abide in him; there is fullness of blessing, therefore delight in him; there is fullness of power, therefore wait upon him; there is fullness of grace, therefore receive from him; there is fullness of love, therefore be taken up with him; there is fullness of teaching, therefore learn of him; there is fullness of joy, therefore rejoice in him; there is fullness of fullness in him, therefore be full in him; there is fullness of riches, therefore count upon him; there is fullness of strength, therefore lean upon him; there is fullness of light, therefore walk with him; and there is fullness of energy, therefore be subject to him.—T. E. Marsh, in Sword and Trowel.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

Placing the little hats all in a row,
Ready for church on the morrow, you know;
Washing wee faces and little black fists,
Getting them ready and fit to be kissed;
Putting them into clean garments and white,—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Spying out holes in the little worn hose,
Laying by shoes that are worn thro' the toes;
Looking o'er garments so faded and thin—
Who but a mother knows where to begin?
Changing a button to make it look right—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Calling the little ones all round her chair,
Hearing them lisp forth their soft evening prayer
Telling them stories of Jesus of old,
Who loves to gather the sheep to his fold;
Watching, they listen with childish delight—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Creeping so softly to take a last peep,
After the little ones all are asleep;
Anxious to know if the children are warm,
Tucking the blankets round each little form;
Kissing each little face, rosy and bright—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Kneeling down gently beside the white bed,
Lowly and meekly she bows down her head,
Praying, as only a mother can pray,
"God guide and keep them from going astray."

WHY JOHNNY LIKED THE MINISTER.

"Oh, wasn't that a good minister we had to-day?" said Johnny.

"Yes, very good. Which sermon did you like best?" said the mother.

"Oh, I don't know. It wasn't the sermons altogether that I mean."

"What then?"

"Why, he prayed for Sunday-schools and boys so good; I never heard any one pray so much for boys. Most of them do not. That is why I liked him."

"Do you like to be prayed for?"

"Why yes, of course I do."

"The minister prayed to-day that all the boys might be Christ's boys. Did you like that?"

"Yes, and I prayed as hard as I could that I might be. When we hear people praying for us it makes us think it is about time to be praying for ourselves. If children don't like to say much about good things, I guess they all like to have the minister remember them. I always watch and see if they pray for young folks; if they don't I think they won't have much in the sermon either. Then, of course, I don't listen as well as I should if I thought there was something for me."—Sel.

A GIRL IN CHINA.

When between six and eight years of age, my girl-cousins took that step which affected all their after-lives. At that age all well-born Chinese misses have their feet bound. It is a fashion they are obliged to follow; if they do not they would not be recognized as ladies when they grow up, and they would become a disgrace to their families. Chinese aristocrats are as proud and jealous of their good name as the bluest-blooded of European nobles. Anything that lowers them in the eyes of their neighbors is carefully guarded against. Accordingly, only the daughters of poor and humble parents are permitted by society to retain the feet as nature bestowed them.

The process of binding is a gradual one. From first to last bands are wound around the tender feet to prevent their growth; but at first shoes are worn nearly as large as their natural size; in a year or so the shoes will have to be smaller, and as they decrease in size till they attain to three or two and a half inches in length, so shoes are made to fit the lessened foot. But, oh, the suffering that goes with it! This has never been exaggerated in any account. Many a time have I heard my cousins groan with pain as the tortures of binding were being undergone. Yet, strange to say, those girls would not have had exemption from the process on that account. To be ranked as servants, working girls? Not they. The Chinese young lady chooses to be fashionable even though she undergo torture for several years and incur helplessness for life.

Don't imagine, however, that Chinese ladies are unable to move. They can, most of them, walk short distances. But it is true that the spirit is taken out of them by this species of suffering, and that they are oppressed by a sense of physical helplessness and dependence.

The work that little girls in China is light; trifling things about the cooking, such as shelling of peas or assorting of greens, were given over to my girl-cousins. Between meals the little girls were taught to sew, embroider and to spin flax. They were never so happy as when a group of them sat together at work; one would tell a story, another would follow with a ballad, singing it with that peculiar plaintive tone which is considered a part of the ballad's charm. My cousins were early taught to read and write, and in company with us boys, until they were eleven or twelve; then they were thought too old to be left in the society of boys very much; especially was it so after some young strangers came to our school, which was established in the men's living-rooms.

In closing this chapter I wish to call attention to the fact that Chinese girls—though you may think they lead a humdrum sort of life, though it be true that they are strangers to the exciting gayeties enjoyed by American girls—are usually contented and think their lot a pleasant one. It is the custom, I am aware, to represent Chinese young ladies as languishing in their apartments and contemplating with tearful eyes the walls that confine them. To be sure, they do not have that excess of liberty by which some American girls are spoiled; yet they are not kept under lock and key. They have that liberty which is consistent with our ideas of propriety. They make visits, they call on their neighbors, they go to theaters, they see the sights, they witness boat-races, and so many pleasant and social things besides. But whatever they do, there is always this limit—they are not permitted the acquaintance of young men. And when they are married, they are restricted to the society of their husbands. You perhaps think their life is a failure. They look upon the sort of life that American girls lead as very improper.—Christian Union.

"DOES JESUS OFTEN COME HERE?"

A little five-year-old child of poverty, being shown over a home of great wealth, as she saw the rich carpets and sumptuous furnishings, looked up into the face of the mistress and said: "I should think Jesus must come here very often, it is such a nice house and such a beautiful carpet. He comes to our house, and we don't have any carpet. I am sure he must come here very often; doesn't he?" Receiving no answer she repeated the question, and the answer was, "I am afraid not." Soon the child went home, but her bit of a sermon remained, and that night the lady repeated it to her wealthy, worldly husband, telling him the touching incident, and it resulted in both husband and wife seeking Christ and opening their hearts and home to him. It is the word spoken from the heart for Jesus, and followed by the Spirit, that does the work, whether the preacher be child or orator.

TEMPERANCE.

THE LAMAR FAMILY.

It is always an important epoch in our our history when a vacancy occurs in the highest judicial tribunal of our Nation. If there is a position on earth whose occupants should be far above and beyond political scheming and political strife it is that of a Chief Justice. The imperative necessity of having men here whose garments have never been soiled by treason or tainted with crime is recognized by every thinking man and woman. The Supreme Court of the United States should be filled by the very best legal and judicial talent in the country, regardless of the politics of the administration. Not only this, but it should be filled by men who are morally clean and physically pure. Give us purity and moral strength on the Supreme Bench if we are denied it in all other positions of public trust and public honor. The Lamar family has been prominent in Southern politics for a generation, but they have been politicians with all that the word implies. They have never stemmed the tide of public corruption; they have never been prominent in any reform. They have never sacrificed personal interest for public good. They have been time-serving men, riding into office upon some popular move, regardless of the methods by which that move was produced. It will be remembered that Mr. Albert Lamar was at one time the Secretary of the late Confederate Congress, and he is himself quoted as authority for an incident which aptly illustrates their political methods. At the convention held at Milledgeville, Ga., to decide whether or not that State should secede from the Union, Herschel N. Johnson, who was, perhaps, the finest speaker in the State, was making a noble effort to save Georgia to the Union. Mr. Lamar is reported as saying, "Johnson made a speech that day in January, 1861, which was the grandest effort of his life. We felt the temple of our creation falling around our heads. It became necessary to break up the line of that tremendous speech, and we proposed an adjournment, conceding that Johnson might go on after dinner. It was then resolved to give him a dram that should break his command over his topic. There was some old brandy in the hotel, and I made a toddy of it without water, very palatable, very tremendous. He drank it, and when we met again he could not go on, his memory was weak, his words ran together, the convention got to laughing at him, and Toombs carried it by storm."

Mr. Lamar must have congratulated himself on that day's work when he saw hundreds and thousands of men fall in consequence of it. He must have congratulated himself on that diabolical suggestion of brandy and sugar that wrecked poor Georgia's best friend in her hour of need. How many political conventions have been conquered by such means? How many elections have been carried by brag and beer, by bribery and brandy? A terrible serpent has been nursed in the bosom of our Republic—a serpent that is wrecking the lives and honor of her children.—Mrs. H. V. Reed, in the Inter Ocean.

BOSTON'S FAMOUS DOG.

There is a large Newfoundland dog in Boston that has suddenly become famous through his brilliant efforts in the cause of temperance reform. He is the property of a well-known young man about town whose habits were more or less intemperate. To his dog, his constant companion, his bad habits extended, and every morning when the owner would come down town to take up his stand in the hotel lobby and reading-room, enjoying the proximity to the bar, the dog would always insist on going into Young's Hotel and on having his beer also. First it was only an occasional sip, soon a whole glass, then two both morning and evening, until it was pretty evident that the animal was on the verge of being gathered to his fathers. He became most dissolute, and though often boozy, like all old topers, it took a lot to make him drunk. A few days since the owner went one morning into a spa and got a phosphate; one was offered the Newfoundland and he refused, whereupon he was offered a glass of milk. He wanted more, and his master paid for it. The march to the hotel was then begun as usual, but the dog seemed anxious to keep away, and finally, when about entering the bar, he made such strenuous efforts to get his master away that out of curiosity he followed him back to the spa and saw the dog go gleefully up to where he got his milk. He wouldn't take his until his master took a glass, and then seemed delighted at what he had done. Suffice to say the owner did not get back to the hotel that day; and ever since the dog has positively refused to enter any portal that looks like a bar-room or hotel, and makes frantic efforts to get his master back to the spa.

The effect on the gentleman has been remarkable. He has accepted the example set by the dog, and when very thirsty he makes a break for the spa to get some milk. This has worked so successfully that last evening he formally announced to his friends that he had decidedly sworn off, and confines his dissipation to the drink selected by his four-footed teacher. The milk-drinking attracts much attention every morning.—Sel.

HOW MEN DRINK FARMS.

The Plowman, in a characteristic way, tells how men "drink farms:" "My homeless friend, with the chromatic nose, while you are stirring up the sugar in that ten-cent glass of gin, let me give you a fact to wash it down with. You say you have for years longed for the free, independent life of the farmer, but have never been able to get enough money together to buy a farm. But that is just where you are mistaken. For several years you have been drinking a good improved farm at the rate of one hundred square feet a gulp. If you doubt this statement, figure it out yourself. An acre of land contains forty-three thousand five hundred and sixty square feet. Estimating, for convenience' sake, the lands at $43.56 per acre, you will see that brings the land to just one mill per square foot; one cent for ten square feet. Now pour the fiery dose and imagine you are swallowing a strawberry patch. Call in five of your friends and have them help gulp down that five-hundred-foot garden. Get on a prolonged spree some day, and see how long a time it requires to swallow a pasture large enough to feed a cow. Put down that glass of gin, there's dirt in it—one hundred square feet of good, rich dirt, worth $43.56 per acre."

A STORM BREWING.

A late number of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular, says: "Nearly all the prominent Kentucky distillers have outside interests to which they give a considerable portion of their attention, and to which they can turn should prohibition ever settle its destructive fangs upon this State." Those "prominent Kentucky dealers" certainly are wise in making provision for their future support. They seem to foresee a storm, and they are reefing their sails before the fury of the tempest descends upon them. They have sufficient cause for apprehension. Prohibition is gaining, and before many years it will be strong enough to wipe the liquor traffic out of existence.—Southern Evangelist.

FATHER TAAFE, WHO SMOKED A HUNDRED A DAY.

Father Taafe, who has been a Catholic priest at Flemingsburg, Ky., two years, has apparently become temporarily deranged by smoking cigarettes. He recently confessed a misdemeanor and paid a fine to escape scandal, as he said. Inquiry showed he had committed no misdemeanor. Father Hickey, of Maysville, hearing this, called on Taafe, who denied having paid any fine. Even when confronted with the evidence he remembered nothing of it. Taafe had been smoking cigarettes very freely, some times a hundred a day, and it is feared it will be necessary to take him to an infirmary.—Sel.

Prohibition is making great strides in Dakota. One hundred and fifty saloons have been closed in Fargo alone, and sixty-four counties have banished the saloon under local option.

The City Council of Atlanta, Ga., has black-listed nine white drunkards and prohibited the sale of liquor to them under penalty of $500 fine or thirty days in jail. One of the drunkards has begun a suit against the city for defamation of character in being blacklisted.

The Turks, who are prohibitionists by order of the Koran, are working to abolish saloons kept by the "Christians" in Constantinople. All drinking places within 250 feet from the houses of Turkish worship have been ordered to be closed, and the police are enforcing the decree.

Russia, England and Sweden are, it seems, the only three countries in the world where a decrease in the drinking habits of the people is noted. In Russia the decline has been one-half, in Sweden one-third, and in England one-eighth. All the other countries from which returns are given, including Central Africa, South America, and even China, show a largely augmented bill.

HOME AGAIN FROM WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

Columbus, O., March 23, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—Mrs Stoddard and I reached this city last evening. I had thought to have stopped for some work on the eastern border of the State, but as our stay in Pennsylvania was longer than anticipated it seemed best to return at once.

I doubt if there is a field in the union that will yield better results for labor than the one just left. As to churches the cities of Pittsburgh and Allegheny are eminently Presbyterian. There is a solidity of character and firmness of determination about these people, typical of Scotch and Scotch-Irish Presbyterians. There are as many kinds of reformers as there are varieties of natures. Some impulsive, others morose. Without discredit to reformers wherever found, I may safely say if you want one who will stick by you, rain or shine, seven days in the week, take one of the old Scotch-Irish Covenanters who can sing the 119th Psalm through without tiring; who can attend church every Sabbath from 9 till 4, sitting on a straight-backed, cushionless seat; who thoroughly believes in the perseverence of the saints—and you have your man.

It was our privilege while in Allegheny to listen to a number of trial-sermons given by young men who are soon to be licensed to preach in the Reformed Presbyterian church. Their productions evinced diligence in study, and the earnestness with which they were given, their fitness for their calling. Mr. R. J. Gault, whose brother M. A. is well known as a contributor to our paper, extended me a cordial invitation to present our work to the young men of the Seminary in a series of lectures next year. I hope to comply with this request.

My last lecture at New Alexandria was attended with much interest. The church was well filled. Collection, $5.05. A friend in writing of it, said: "The people up-town to-day are like hornets. He told them the truth and it bites." The Methodist minister, accompanied by his wife, attended. Prior to the lecture he said he was a Mason, and had never seen anything wrong in it. If he should see anything wrong he would leave. I have not heard of his leaving; perhaps his sight is not good. We had thought to have arranged lectures for United Presbyterian churches in the city, but other matters demanding the attention of the people made it seem unadvisable at present. I was assured that lectures would be very acceptable at a future time.

In returning, we leave with many pleasant memories and over forty new readers of our paper. We should have been glad to have remained longer in this promising field, but justice to friends in Ohio impelled our return. W. B. Stoddard.

Religious News.

—Mr. Moody preached morning and evening to an overflowing crowd of thousands in the Chicago Avenue church in this city on the Sabbath.

—A conference of a number of clergy and laity of the Episcopal Diocese of South Carolina have agreed upon a plan of settlement for the admission of colored clergy to the diocesan convention of this State, which has caused so serious a disagreement in the Episcopal church. The plan provides for the organization of a separate missionary jurisdiction for colored churches.

—Evangelist C. H. Yatman lately closed a series of meetings at Peoria. Eleven hundred names of converts were handed in. Mr. Yatman has instituted a Soul Winners' League in which each member pledges himself to try and win one or more souls to Christ. At the first meeting a thousand souls were pledged for.

—Special meetings have been held at Slaterville, Utah, by Rev. A. J. Bailey, pastor at Ogden, with crowded houses every evening. Many who have been opposed to the Bible and religion have been completely won from their prejudices, and a feeling was expressed by all that the Gospel preached was what they needed.

—The Lutheran Synod of Missouri, which thoroughly excludes members of secret lodges, and represents Lutheranism of the strictest type, has 931 ministers and 620 parochial school teachers, who respectively have the care of 459,376 baptized members and teach 71,504 children. There is a total of 1,424 churches and 544 preaching places, with 266,000 communicant members. Only 678 of these churches are officially connected with the Synod, though served by pastors of the Synod. Last year there were 33,391 baptisms, and 13,724 were confirmed. The twelve districts of the Synod contributed offerings for education, orphans and widows, synodical treasury and missions amounting to $107,463 71 of which $32,589.62 was devoted to the Home Missions.

—An association has been formed by the Swedes in Philadelphia for the purpose of recovering for the Swedish Lutherans the old "Gloria Dei" church, built in the year 1700 by the Swedish settlers. The last Swedish Lutheran pastor of the church was the learned Dr. Nils Catlin, who died in Philadelphia in 1831. He is said to have petitioned the Archbishop of Upsala to send a young pastor to this congregation. But this was not done; and the Episcopal church took possession of this and four other churches, built with Swedish money for Swedish Lutherans. Prominent men, as the Swedish Consul Lars Westergaard, Rev. M. J. Englund, and Hon. W. H. Staake, have taken the matter in hand.

—Very encouraging news come from Societies of Christian Endeavor in missionary lands. The annual report of the Woman's Board of Missions says that the society connected with the school in Osaka, Japan, is reaching out helping hands in all directions. Each Christian girl has pledged herself to take three "un-Christian girls as her special charge and lead them to Christ; and to speak to at least one other every day." In Tilly-pally, Ceylon, the girls connected with the society go out to evangelistic meetings, at which they do the singing, while others speak and pray. In Samokov, Turkey, the Christian Endeavor Society has been the means of developing character, and is fruitful of good. In Honolulu much earnest work has been done by the society connected with the Central Union church, and within a year nearly $100 has been contributed for missionary purposes.

—Bolivia, which has an area of 500,000 square miles and a population of 2,000,000, is without a single Protestant missionary. Two American teachers, encouraged by Bolivian gentlemen and recommended by the Presbyterian Board of Missions, expect soon to establish a school in La Paz, the capital.

—The native Christians of Japan contributed the past year more than $15,000 to mission work.

—There are now in the mission field 2,400 unmarried ladies, besides probably an equal number of the married. In the early days of missions it was not thought a woman could enter the ranks of mission workers except as the wife of a missionary.

—The remarkable spread of Protestantism in in South Russia, says a foreign paper, is causing great consternation among the authorities there, and probably attempts will be made to put it down by violent means. The police are instructed to keep strict watch over all that transpires, and to leave no new methods untried to prevent the spread of the Gospel, and to keep the people in ignorance of its truths.

—There is a great change regarding the position of women in Japan. Many who a few years ago looked with contempt on woman are now anxious to raise her to the same level as in Western nations. The desire to have girls educated has worked in favor of Christianity, since it is not considered safe to send girls to any but a Christian school. All the mission-schools for girls at Tokio are overcrowded.

—Dr. Pierson of Philadelphia, so useful with pen and by speech, recently declared that for thirteen years the barrenness of his ministry was owing to the worship of idols. "God said to me, 'If you will give up the idol of literary applause, and give yourself to rescuing the perishing, I will give you souls.' I said, 'I will do it!' Within eighteen months God gave me more souls than in the eighteen years that had gone before."

—Miss Tucker, of Adana, a missionary of the American Board in the part of Asiatic Turkey were famine reigns, writes with reference to the help sent from this country: "The feeling that the religion of Christ is the only true one is rife among the recipients of relief, and among hundreds who only stand back and look on at the relief work. Moslems, Armenians and Greeks are almost daily heard to say, 'Theirs is the religion of kindness, the true religion, else why should they, away there in America, care how many of us die of starvation? Our leaders do not care.'" There is no way to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ so powerfully as by living out its precepts. If all Christians could be induced to adopt the Divine precept, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," as the motto of their lives, and to so act that everybody who knew them would be convinced that they were honestly trying to carry it out, skepticism would die out for want of nourishment, and the multitudes would be drawn to Christ as by magnetic power. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

A Missionary Hero and Model.—Rev. George Bowen, whose death occurred at Bombay, India, on the 5th of February, was not only one of the best known and most useful of American missionaries abroad, but was a man of remarkable personal qualities and independent character. His devotion to the heathen cause in religion was shown by his refusal to draw his salary, after having spent but one year in India, on the ground that he would have more influence among the heathen if he were not possessed of a stated income. Mr. Bowen was born in this country in 1816. At the age of seventeen he was led to doubt the truth of Christianity by reading Gibbon's history. For eleven years he was an unbeliever, but was converted at the death-bed of a lady to whom he was greatly attached. His father was a man of wealth, but the son determined to sacrifice his home and prospects, and to devote himself and his whole life to the missionary service among the heathen. He proceeded to India in 1846, in connection with the American Board of Missions. After he refused to draw further compensation for his labors at the end of his first year he earned his living by giving private lessons for an hour or two daily. He was often pressed to accept the means of making himself more comfortable, but steadfastly refused. For many years he actually lived in the native bazaars and among the sadly degraded population until requested to become secretary of the Religious Tract Society, at whose depot he afterwards resided, managing its affairs without pay, in addition to his other labors.

Literature.

Prohibition Bells and Songs of the New Crusade. Compiled by the Silver Lake Quartette. Price, 30 cents, board covers; 20 cents, paper covers. Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

Old Andrew Fletcher of Saltoun wrote two centuries ago: "I know a very wise man that believed that, if a man were permitted to make all the ballads, he need not care who should make the laws of a nation." If the character of a political party is not made by its campaign songs, it is at least indicated by them. The vulgar and, with the Democrats, the immoral sentiments of the party outcries were a sure index to the party character. No one who has heard the thrilling music of Mr. Mead's Silver Lake Quartette will forget it. This is their book. These bells are not muffled; they give out no uncertain sound. They will be heard throughout the land, for they call to better, purer living both by the individual and the State.

Professor W. G. Sumner, in an article on "The First Steps Toward a Millennium," in the Cosmopolitan for March, says that the questions that confront the student of social science narrow themselves down to the question of population. There are not perhaps too many people who are sound physically and mentally, but there are too many people who ought never to have been born because of their mental and physical feebleness. The latter are the fruit of imprudent marriages, which Professor Sumner denounces with severity. They give rise to most of our "Social Problems," which are apt to be solved by the interference of the state. Such interference, he says, aggravates the evils that it is designed to cure. If, therefore, we are to call upon the state to do anything, it ought to be called upon to prevent imprudent marriages; but this work, Professor Sumner says, very few entrust to the state.

Rev. J. Max Hark, D. D., a prominent member of the Moravian church, an editorial writer for the Christian Union, the Sunday School Times and other papers, has prepared a work on the Unity of the Truth in Christianity and Evolution. The subject is treated in a manner that reminds one of the Duke of Argyll's Reign of Law, and Prof. Drummond's Natural Law in the Spiritual World. A well-known critic who has read the manuscript pronounces it superior to either; if it can reasonably be compared to these, thousands of readers will accord it a hearty welcome.

The current number of Scribner's Magazine is rich in portraits: Napoleon, Wellington, Leigh Hunt, Barry Cornwall, Keats, Shelley; the scientists Henry, Arago, Ampere and Siemens; Mendelssohn and his wife. Mr. John C. Ropes, whose studies of the life and work of Napoleon entitle him to a place of authority contributes the first part of a paper on Waterloo. No battlefield in the world probably has been so often reviewed, yet we have here one of the clearest and most succint sketches of the strategy of all three armies engaged in that decisive battle. Mrs. Field's "Shelf of Old Books" is full of pleasant reminiscences of Hunt, Cornwall and Keats. The history of the electric motor is very happily told from the first discovery by Faraday in 1821 to the present wonderful development. "Mendelssohn's Letters to Moschelles" is continued with fac simile reproductions of the famous musician's composition.

The Missionary Review of the World for April comes to us freighted with the richest treasures of missionary thought and life and information. The "Literature" department contains ten articles on such important topics as Paul's Missionary Principles, David Brainerd's Character, The Bible in India, The Miracles of Missions, Mission Work in Papal Europe, The Great World Council, Condition of Females in India, and others, by the editors, Dr. Chamberlain of India, Dr. Clark of Italy, and other writers. The correspondence section is full of interest, and so of the International, conducted by Dr. Gracey. Dr. Pierson makes the Monthly Concert part indispensable to pastors and churches. The Monthly Bulletin and Intelligence departments show the on-goings of the entire missionary world. The "Statistics" are marvels. The "Notes on recent Missionary Books" and "Editorial Notes on Current Topics" are numerous, trenchant and valuable. Funk & Wagnalls. New York. $2.00 per year.

LODGE NOTES.

An assembly of Knights of Labor in the Shenango Valley, under district assembly No. 199, has been suspended. Cause, that unpardonable sin of all secret cliques, non-payment of dues.—Sandy Lake News.

Thomas B. McGuire, a leading Knight of Labor and member of the '49 Club, of New York, is credited with saying that, of all the Presidential candidates now before the people, Judge Gresham is the most acceptable to the Knights of Labor.

The kicking shoemakers of Cincinnati who refused to obey the orders of District Master Workman Cavanaugh, of District 48, Knights of Labor, and return to work, and who have been declared out of the order, held a mass meeting and resolved to continue in rebellion against the Master Workman and his orders.

State Commissioner of Insurance of Missiouri Alfred Carr to-day brought suit against the Ancient Order of United Workmen under the law governing and restricting insurance companies in this State. This order decided in convention recently held in St. Louis that they would refuse to comply with the law on the ground that they were not an insurance company. A short time ago the Order of the Iron Hall defeated the Commissioner, but he now claims to have better grounds.

The trouble in the brewing trade at Milwaukee has proved more expensive to the National Brewers' Union than was expected. Reports show that since November the union has paid over $80,000 to idle members of the Milwaukee organization. The union has made a change in its attitude toward the men who refused to quit work when ordered. It now promises to regard them as members in good standing, who are at work with the permission of the union. It is believed that this action will add 2,000 votes to the labor ticket.

The Globe Publishing company, incorporated and contemplating the publication of a Democratic newspaper in Chicago, has, it is said, encountered opposition in its business arrangements from the Typographical Union. Its publisher conducted the Times as a strictly non-union establishment, and it is the intention of himself and his partners to run the projected Democratic journal on the same plan. Local labor union Democrats say that the paper, if started with non-unionists, will demoralize all prospects of union between the labor and Democratic parties.

About forty of the cases on the trial docket for the second term of the United States District Court at Springfield, Mo., are against members of the notorious Bald Knobbers' organization, who are held for brutally whipping and intimidating men and driving them from their homesteads on government lands in Christian and Douglass counties. The United State authorities have similar cases against the nine Bald Knobbers in jail at Ozark for the atrocious murder of Charles Green and William Edens, in Christian county a year ago, two of whom have already been convicted of murder in the first degree. Both the State and United States authorities show a positive determination to completely wipe out the lawless organization, and they have already put an effectual stop to the midnight meetings and nefarious work of the members.

Mayor Hewitt of New York denied he is a protector of trusts, as stated in Mr. T. V. Powderly's paper, Journal of United Labor, and boldly accuses Mr. Powderly of lying.

CONSUMPTION CURABLE.

Since the fact that consumption is both preventable, and in its earliest stage curable, it has lost much of its terror. If the first symptoms are at once recognized and the proper remedy applied, very few if any one need die of consumption, which is really lung scrofula. Like many other diseases this formidable one grows out of impure blood, and this, in turn, from a diseased liver. Hence, we have the hacking cough, the pains in chest, the inflamed lungs, and all the symptoms of hastening consumption, all the result of depraved blood and a diseased liver. The use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will arrest all such symptoms, restore the liver to healthy action, and send streams of pure blood into every organ. Of druggists.

TEN PER CENT A MONTH
MAY BE PAID BY THE Carson River Dredging Company.

This Company is to dredge the Carson River for the quicksilver and amalgam that has wasted during the past twenty-five years from the Comstock Ledge. The value of these deposits is estimated by different experts to be from $50,000,000 to £350,000,000

This company expects to raise from 400 to 600 tons every ten hours. The value of material raised will be $2.50 to $7 and $8 per ton. The expense estimated for lifting and sluicing is only 13 1-2 cents per ton.

If the above estimates are anywhere near correct then the Company will be enabled to pay

MORE THAN 10 PER CENT A MONTH UPON THE PAR VALUE OF THE STOCK, WHICH IS $10

INVESTMENTS WOULD THEN PAY AS FOLLOWS:

100 shares, costing $375.00,	income, $100 a month.			15 shares, costing $56.25,	income $15 a month.
50 " "	187.50,	"	50 "	10 " "	37.50,	"	10 "
25 " "	93.75,	"	25 "	5 " "	18.75,	"	5 "

The large boat which is to receive the dredging machinery has been completed and launched, and the machinery will soon be in place.

The Company owns 17 claims on the river of 20 acres each besides the use of Dr. Rae's patents.

The success of Dr. Rae's system as applied to the different mills makes the success of this Company almost certain.

Only the treasury stock is being sold. All certificates are registered by the AMERICAN LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY.

Orders may be sent until April 7th, at the rate of $3 75 per share, by N. Y. draft or P. O. order to W. S. CHAMBERLAIN, Agent, 115 Broadway, New York City.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W Clark,
The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal by tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

FARM NOTES.

OVERPRODUCTION OF CATTLE.

There is clearly an over production in the cattle business, and it interests every tax paying and renting farmer in the United States who raises a calf. This overproduction is a serious drawback, especially to the cattle raiser in the great corn-growing States. Cattle have depreciated in value so rapidly that they can hardly be raised with profit on lands worth twenty-five dollars per acre and upward. The result is being felt far and wide; money is borrowed on mortgages in the hope of better prices which do not come. The direct cause of this has been the use of foreign capital in the cattle raising business on the public domain, rent free and tax free. Powerful cattle companies can afford to lose twenty-five per cent of the increase of their herds, and then be ahead of the man who raises cattle on his own land. The use of the Government land for stock raising purposes retards rather than assists the settlement of the extreme western States and Territories. Home-seekers do not care to go where they are likely to be persecuted, or to have their crops overrun by herds of cattle. There is a remedy for this. Let Congress prohibit the unpaid use of the public lands for grazing purposes as strictly as it prohibits the poor settler from taking timber from the public lands to build his cabin with, or to keep his family from freezing.—Am. Agriculturist.

ASHES FOR TREES.

A simple, homely remedy for many tree ailments and enemies is wood ashes, or, if not to be had, coal ashes with a sprinkling of lime—but ashes; ashes to be used freely before mulching (against frost or drouth); after mulching, that no tree enemies may harbor therein, the mulching itself, when gathered up, to be burned and returned to the trees. Young trees should have plenty of iron filings or cinders around the roots when planted. If the iron is not needed it will not be absorbed, therefore there can be no harm in its use.—Vick's Magazine.

Ira Lonsberry, of Fowlerville, Mich., last fall bought a pig that weighed just exactly 150 pounds. He put it into a pen and fed it for ninety-three days, when, after being butchered and thoroughly dressed, it weighed 364½ pounds. At the time of killing it was thirteen months old, and was fed in the ninety-three days about seven bushels of corn, the balance of the feed given it being carrots.

When the cattle are put on the grass too early both are injured.

The note that is not due till two years will be harder on you than the note due in a year.

Counting our chickens before they are hatched would not be so bad did we first candle the eggs.

The successful farmer is the one that makes ten per cent on the money he has lost through mistakes.

The horse with plenty of currycomb outside and oats inside doesn't show his ribs before midsummer.

It is a poor rule that won't work both ways; nevertheless, both lending and borrowing are unprofitable.

None but a good farmer can make eight per cent on borrowed money; and he is the last farmer to do it.

Bad tempered cows, dull plows, and weak fences ought to be evils unendurable, for they are not immovable.

The man who allows the rivulets to get his manure is always sure that the government is robbing the people.

What doth it profit a man if he keeps the weeds down on his farm and allows them to grow on the highway?

Extend the house cleaning into the cellar, and make the work more thorough where shirking would be least seen.

Better have your heart in your work and eighty acres, than a quarter section and be at odds with your occupation.

There are now a hundred rivulets on the farm, yet it is cheaper to give the animals drink from a well protected from surface water.

It is a false notion that is responsible for greivous evil, that a cheap teacher is good enough for the summer term, because all the pupils are small.

It is better to take a little liver medicine than to grumble and feel blue, and the man who has had fruits during the winter will not need the medicine.

Good highways are impossible as long as the highway tax is worked out by the tax payers. Collect the tax in money and let the work publicly to the lowest responsible bidder.—Am. Agriculturist.

HER FAULT.

If she is made miserable by day and sleepless at night by nervous headache, pains in the back, easily grieved, vexed or made tired, or is suffering from any of those wasting functional disorders peculiar to women, such as prolapsus, ulceration, leucorrhea, morning sickness, or weakness of the stomach, etc., a brief self treatment with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will convince her of the folly of enduring misery that can be so easily, pleasantly and radically cured. Druggists.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkablike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1 00 Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, e c., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian Religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the InITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association,
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Morrison R. Waite, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, died Friday morning at Washington of typhoid pneumonia, after an illness of a few days. Both houses of Congress adjourned out of respect to the memory of the deceased, and committees were appointed to attend the funeral. The Supreme Court also adjourned, and President Cleveland issued a proclamation ordering that the Government buildings be draped for three days, and that flags be placed at half-mast on the day of the funeral. Mrs. Waite is absent in California, and no arrangements for the funeral can be made until her return.

Ex-President Andrew D. White announces that the corner stone of the new library building at Cornell University will be laid by President Cleveland in June.

The President has sent the new Chinese treaty to the Senate. Its main features have been published. It is understood that the President recommends in his message of transmittal that the injunction of secrecy be at once removed from the treaty. The treaty, by its terms, runs twenty years. A Chinese laborer who has $1,000 worth of property here, or that amount due him, or who has a lawful husband or wife or a parent or child here may, if absent, return within one year, or, if detained by illness, the time may be extended to two years. No other Chinese laborers may come in on any terms. Chinese merchants, scholars and students may come only when provided with certificates issued by an American consul. The treaty binds this country to pay to the Chinese minister $276,000 within one year, which sum shall be accepted as a full settlement of all claims against the United States or her citizens for loss or injury suffered by Chinamen here.

The bill introduced by Mr. Frye to apply the laws of the several States relating to the sale of distilled and fermented liquors to such liquors when they have been imported as well as when manufactured in the United States was reported adversely by Senator George from the Committee on Judiciary.

STRIKES.

Non-union workmen at the Terre Haute, Ind., car shops have been carrying revolvers to protect themselves from strikers. Friday, however, two of them, in a quarrel over work, used their revolvers on each other, probably with fatal effect to one.

At Fulton, Ill, Friday, brotherhood strikers threw coal and stones at some of the new engineers and firemen who refused to stop work. Two men were hit, though not seriously hurt.

Fifty citizens of Aurora, Ill., in a petition to the Board of Railroad Commissioners Friday, stated their belief that engineers unfit and incompetent to perform their duties were running trains through that place, thereby endangering the lives and property of patrons, and asked an investigation.

At St. Joseph, Mo., Friday morning, a new Burlington engineer, in going to the round house and passing a crowd of strikers and their sympathizers, was struck on the head with a blunt instrument by some one in the crowd, whose identity is still unknown, and can not recover.

A few minutes past midnight Saturday morning the switchmen on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad stopped work in this city. Their lodge had unanimously resolved that the switchmen would not switch cars for engines driven by other than brotherhood engineers. The strike was spreading.

COUNTRY.

Further investigation of the treatment of Arkansas convicts in the Coal Hill mines reveals brutalities even more horrible than at first reported. Warden Scott whipped 75 men in one night till all were bleeding, the men had gone without shoes all winter, one had been murdered in cold blood by order of the fugitive warden, Gafford.

The flood at Millbury, Mass., necessitated a removal of prisoners from the jail, where the water is now six feet deep. Some of the citizens, it is said, actually had to swim out of their houses. The central portion of the town of Uxbridge is also flooded.

Henry Bergh, nephew of the lately deceased founder of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has been unanimously elected president of the society.

A conductor on a Mississippi railroad refused to permit Roderick Lowry, a nephew of Governor Lowry, to ride on the governor's family pass, which resulted in a row, and also in exposing the fact that the governor is guilty of a misdemeanor under the State laws. It appears that he holds passes on all the roads in the State, the penalties for which are severe. The railroads too are liable to a fine of $5,000.

A terrible electric storm visited northern Georgia Wednesday night. In Fairburn both the colored churches were demolished, shade trees uprooted and other damage done. Near Austelle a house was blown on a negro blacksmith, killing him. At Gainesville the colored Baptist church was completely demolished. Calhoun suffered most in north Georgia. It was visited by a terrible funnel-shaped cyclone which cut a swath seventy-five yards wide through the middle of the town, taking in the court house and station.

A Chattanooga dispatch says: The storm was much more serious and widespread in its destruction than at first reported. It seems to have formed in the vicinity of Calhoun and pursued a northeasterly direction through north Georgia and into and beyond East Tennessee, bounding across to the Chilhowee Mountains, and was next heard of near Loudon, Tenn., on the East Tennessee road, 80 miles northeast of Chattanooga, traveling from Calhoun, Ga., to Loudon, Tenn., a distance of 100 miles, in about 30 minutes. Many persons were believed to be killed or injured.

Arrangements are being made by the colored people of the Northwest for the celebration at Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 22, of the ordinance of 1787, giving freedom to the race in the Northwest Territory, and President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation.

FOREIGN.

While a performance was in progress at the Banquet Theater, Oporto, Portugal, Tuesday night an explosion of gas occurred and the theatre took fire and was destroyed. The house was full of spectators at the time; eighty bodies have been taken from the ruins. Most of those burned were in the third row of boxes and galleries, where whole families were suffocated. There was a terrific struggle at the door when the spectators tried to escape. Large numbers were suffocated and trampled upon. Many on reaching the street were so injured that they vomited blood.

Sunday Emperor Frederick attended the services in the chapel at Charlottenburg. He is in good spirits and contiues to improve.

Low lying districts along the banks of the rivers Elbe and Vistula are inundated. The village of Dornitz is isolated in the midst of a great lake. A number of soldiers from the nearest garrison after arduous efforts succeeded in reaching there with a supply of food for the inhabitants, but fifteen of them were drowned in the attempt. Further attempts to relieve numerous villages in a similar position are being made. The floods, it is estimated, cover 200 square miles of territory, and alarming rumors of the extent of damage done are circulated.

The late German Emperor's will shows that his total savings do not exceed $12,500,000. The larger portion of the property is left to increase the crown treasure or general fund of the crown established by his father.

The opinion prevails in England that in spite of all the sympathy expressed for Germany by Russia the latter power intends to become aggressive as soon as the weather permits. Authentic advices from Russia state that two generals fresh from the war councils at St. Petersburg have said that hostilities will commence in May.

The Chinese papers confirm the reports of the disastrous earthquake in the provinces of Yuman and Syechuen. Several cities were destroyed, and about 20,000 lives lost. The latest reports from the scene of the Yellow River floods place the number of lives lost at 100,000, and the total number of sufferers from the inundation will reach double that figure.

EPPS'S COCOA.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.
TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send 2-cent stamp for sample copy.

The present week, from April 1st to 8th, has been set apart by the World's Sabbath Observance Prayer Union as a week of special prayer for the better observance of the Sabbath. Pastors are requested to preach on the subject, and the excellence of the suggestion will appeal to all sincere Christians, who can but view with alarm the present condition of our country and especially of its metropolitan centers.

While the nation mourns the loss of a Chief Justice whose fidelity, industry and ability have been an honor to the high office, it is with some satisfaction that we see no notice of a secret lodge in the public processions at his funeral. While Judge Waite gave no public expression, that we are aware of, on the lodge question, yet the evidence seems good that he may be classed against them, as are his predecessors Jay, Ellsworth, Marshall and Chase. God grant that the nation may never be dishonored by the presence on the Supreme Bench of men sworn to the alien and despotic lodge system.

Our Methodist brethren seem to be leading the churches in the war on the saloon. Their zeal for prohibition is almost in proportion to their deplorable relations to the lodge. We honor them for what they do for the truth, and trust that it is only a promise of their earnestness against Freemasonry when once detestation for the lodge rises into popular favor. The Kansas annual conference in Topeka the other day passed, almost unanimously, a resolution declaring in favor of National prohibition and refusing to support any party which does not stand squarely upon a temperance platform. They demanded also the following legislation: 1. A law providing that, in Prohibition States, the collectors of internal revenue shall be forbidden to issue tax permits for the sale of liquor, except to those who have been duly authorized by the State to sell intoxicants for the purposes permitted by State law. 2. A law prohibiting the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia, upon the miltary reservations, in the Territories and wherever the United States exercises authority. 3. A law enacting that the sale of liquors shall be subject to the laws of the State in which the liquors are to be consumed, so that manufacturers and dealers in non-prohibition States shall be forbidden to transport liquors into prohibition States except under such limitations as may be prescribed by the prohibitory laws there in force. 4 The early submission of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the importation or sale of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal, mechanical or scientific purposes.

The late two days' strike of the Santa Fe engineers was a new revelation of the unreasonable control of the lodge over labor. And because they had absolutely no cause for their action but a lodge obligation, they were soon shamed into giving up the fight. Last Thursday here in Chicago a Burlington engine drew a train of new cars, belonging to the Milwaukee and St. Paul road, to the yards of the latter. The St. Paul switchmen attacked the train, throwing it off the track and injuring all on board. They then left their work in a body, and Friday about midnight a secret meeting broke up with a resolve to strike which will take out engineers, firemen, switchmen, brakemen and some conductors. The switchmen on the Pan Handle road are also out, and there is a panic in the air. P. M. Arthur, head of the engineers' brotherhood, has returned to Cleveland, it is supposed either to avoid the officers of the law, who might soon trouble him, or to prepare his resignation, since he sees nothing but disaster for his order.

Since the above was written on Saturday the air has been full of ugly and threatening rumors. The city authorities are making laudable efforts to keep the peace, but only the presence of a large police force in several switching yards prevents violence. The men of the Ft. Wayne road are practically out, while already the St. Paul strikers manifest repentance. A dastardly attempt was made to wreck a passenger train by throwing a switch just as it approached. One car off the track and passengers badly shaken up was all the damage. It was expected that after the election of Tuesday the crisis would come. The managers are preparing as best they may for it. They understand that to dally longer with unreasonable men will not do. The Burlington strike was virtually over two weeks ago. The road was again in fair running order. The men who left it were beaten, but failing to overcome that company the whole lodge system of the railroads is combining against the public interest in a guerilla warfare on the commerce of Chicago and the West. The menace to "tie up" every road that obeys United States law by interchanging cars is criminal. These men propose to play the part of dictators, and should understand that their threats will not be tolerated. Arthur, it is believed, finds the "hot heads" in control and has left the city. He lately gave out that these men wanted every road in the country tied up. It lay in his power "to stop railway traffic in the United States entirely," but he refused to do so. If his claim is a good one, it is the duty of the people to take from him and his sworn clique a power which would not be entrusted to any court or legislature. To longer suffer it to be held by a secret lodge of irresponsible, and possibly unreasonable, men is suicidal.

The decision of the United States courts in this city and Omaha, while not directed especially at the labor orders, yet gave them plainly to understand that law-breakers would be punished. The effect has been good; but there is an opinion more widely felt day by day there must be more stringent laws to protect the public from railroad strikes, whether provoked by managers or men. On this important question the New York Independent lately says: "If law can furnish any remedy against strikers, it must be in the way of restraining them from confederating together and combining for the purpose of organizing strikes and carrying them into effect. This comes within the province of a court of equity, provided it be a proper legal remedy at all. It is undoubtedly true that every employe has a right to quit the work of his employer if he chooses. But whether a large number of employes may combine to do this simultaneously, and thus organize a general strike, presents a different question. It is, moreover, a question which the law in this country will have to consider, and settle through the agency of legislatures and courts. The action of strikers is forcing it upon public attention."

TEMPERANCE THOUGHTS FROM A SAILORS MISSION.

BY J. F. AVERY, PASTOR MARINRES' TEMPLE, NEW YORK.

Thomas Carlyle wrote, "No man oppresses thee, O free and independent franchiser, but does not this stupid pewter pot oppress thee? Thou art the thrall of no saloon, but art thou not the bond-slave of this pot of heavy wet? Yet thou pratest of thy liberty!" Let us not use our liberty to vote for the maintenance of a traffic which robs others of their liberty and homes. We can sympathize with a friend who kicked a cask and said: "I wonder how many drunks and curses are inside!" The wholesale business is respectable, is it? Alcohol is made from destruction, it tends to destruction, and ends in destruction; moderate drinker, beware! If you all stop drinking, the 250,000 liquor saloons in the United States will soon be closed. There will be no drunkards in this great city or elsewhere in this new world.

The bitter cries, the cruelest woes, of New York city are caused, beyond denial, by strong drink. The wise Irishman said, "The only safe way of drinking is to leave off before you begin." Every saloon has two sides; only one of them is the safe side, and that is the outside. From the door can be traced the serpent's trail to ruined and sin-blighted homes; thence to the prison, the poor-house and the pauper's grave. It is calculated, by the truthfulness of facts and figures, that there are to-day nearly 1,000,000 drunkards in the United States, and 3,000,000 women and children are suffering cruelty of the keenest, meanest kind continually. The wounding, sin, shame and misery caused is an agonizing aggregate inexpressible; measurable only by Jehovah, whose ear and eye of pity can grasp such vastness. No drunkard or drunkard-maker can enter the kingdom of God. Read 1 Cor. 6: 10. Nearly 100,000 drunkards are said to die every year. Who is responsible? Does it pay to make drunkards? It is said, counting the revenue to the government from the drink traffic at $100,000,000 per year, the government receives $1,000 on every man who dies a drunkard. Dare we cast our votes as Christians for such revenue?

The following facts were recently given at one of our Gospel temperance meetings at the Mariners' Temple by a young man who saw the count and wrote the figures:

On Christmas day, 1886, 1,580 prisoners were confined in Sing Sing penitentiary. The following question was asked while they were enjoying their Christmas dinner: How many of you can say that drink (intemperance) has been the cause of your imprisonment? One thousand, two hundred and thirty-three prisoners arose; 347 remained seated; they were moderate drinkers.

The next question was: How many of you have Christian parents, received a Christian training, and have at the present time parents, brothers and sisters living? One thousand, three hundred and sixty-two arose, 218 remained seated.

The next question was: What are those two hundred and eighteen men who remained seated? Out of the 218, 102 had never known a mother's care, having received no education whatever; parents died when they were infants, and brought up in foundling homes; left their places at the age of eight, and the streets were their future home. At the age of twelve each one of these found himself in the House of Refuge, from there to States prison. One hundred and sixteen had been brought up by parents who were drunkards and criminals themselves, and were brought up in crime and taught in the profession of crime, as they called it. Not one of these 218 men could read or write; never attended a church, unless compelled to do so by prison rules. That is what intemperance has done.

GENERAL PHELPS AS A REFORMER.

BY CECIL H. COTTS HOWARD.

Since the publication of the brief memoir, which the writer penned some months ago, new thoughts have arisen in connection with the life of General John Wolcott Phelps which may perhaps be most fittingly embodied in an article for the Cynosure. We all know that the lapse of years serves to strengthen many preconceived ideas in some cases; in others to do away with them and substitute new matter, perhaps, if our environments have changed. We may safely assert, however, that those impressions which are most enduring from earliest remembrance are most often true.

My thoughts of General Phelps from earliest recollection have always been that he was a reformer. He embodied more perfectly all that the word means than any other one thing. He was an accomplished scholar, but his scholarship only helped him the better to carry out his ideas as a reformer. The same might be said of all his accomplishments. He was proficient in all these, but they were so blended in his character as a reformer that they were lost in the greater merits of those purposes that the good man sought to accomplish. His hatred of secret societies was deep and lasting. With many men that would have been the end. Not so with him. If there was an evil to be remedied he must lend his aid; mind and soul and body must bend to the accomplishment of it, and if success was attained, well and good. If apparent defeat, he had at least done his duty like a man.

I have heard many say, "He was too conscientious." There is the point! Men love to be good externally in many cases, but when it comes to carrying all their theories or ideas into practice that is too much. They deal in superficialities. Perhaps some will esteem this eulogistic, but we believe those who best knew General Phelps will realize as they grow older that whatever he was he was not superficial. In this we do not mean to convey the impression that his was an isolated case as regards this particular, but in comparison with the vast multitude of men in the world who do not pretend to free themselves from the world's superficialities.

The following extracts from letters on various subjects may serve to illustrate anew his intensity of feeling: "I stand with the few on religious grounds that Freemasonry is a wicked, blasphemous joke, trifling with and perverting the most serious and sacred interests of life, without which interest tenderly and sacredly preserved society is but a wilderness, filled with savage brutes."

Again, "Let us separate from the others and fall together, if we must fall."

"If our country can digest the Masonic lodge without a war-fever, in which it must lose all that constitutes its life, it will be by the virtue of a miracle of religious potency, and not by political acumen."

In giving these terse quotations to show his thoughts as a reformer, it may perhaps be but right to say that his written thoughts were in conversational style. They give an accurate idea of his firmness of purpose and eloquent spirit. In reading his translations of Florian's Fables from the French, one who has known him intimately must be impressed, not only with his scholarship, but also with the bent of his life purpose. Aiming always for the good, the true, and the beautiful, who shall measure his influence for good?

May the omnipotent Heavenly Father speed the day when there are more such men to push forward his work in the world.

GOOD ADVICE FROM SUFFOLK JAIL.

As for Bro. A. H. Springstein's question in the Cynosure of March 22d, I am moved to make a few comments on our duties as Christian citizens.

First. In this country the voter is king.

a. The character of the kingdom is the net product of the characters of the kings.

b. The man who does not vote throws away his vote, and thus fails to impress his character upon the kingdom.

c. The man who, on whatever pretext, votes for men or principles which he cannot heartily endorse, votes to prostitute and degrade his country.

d. The voter who casts his ballot for godly men to govern in the fear and love and knowledge and obedience and faith of God, is a Christian politically.

Second. We cannot neglect our political duties and be guiltless. The doom of the servant who wrapped his lord's money in a napkin awaits political shirks.

Third. The highest, deepest and strongest factor in government is the moral factor.

Fourth. The secret of the power of the moral factor is true testimony, or testimony to the truth.

Fifth. This Power is really irresistible. It is God in government.

Sixth. Every man who votes for the ideal Christian government in elections "succeeds." His success is the more marked and remarked, the fewer such voters there are near him.

Seventh. To vote for Freemasons to hold the offices of government, at the bidding of the Prohibition, or Republican, or Democratic, or any other party, is Judas Iscariotism.

Eighth. Nominate godly men for office. We better make up our ticket from the Bible characters than put in nomination any wicked contemporaries.

Sincerely, W. F. DAVIS.

SECRETISM IN THE WEST INDIES.

LETTER FROM THE FRIENDS' MISSION.

MANCHIONEAL, Jamaica, W. I.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—If you will look at your maps of North America in latitude eighteen degrees to eighteen degrees and thirty minutes north, and longitude seventy-six degrees and thirty minutes to seventy-eight degrees west, you will find the little Island of Jamaica but a mere dot compared with the United States; only 144 miles long and 49 miles in its greatest width. Kingston is the capital on the south, where old Port Royal, the former capital, was once destroyed by an earthquake at the time it was said to be the richest and wickedest spot on earth. Some of the houses may yet be seen beneath the waves of the sea that now cover the spot where it stood.

The mountain and water scenery of the Island are grand; the highest mountain rising to an altitude of 7,360 feet above the sea. All sorts of tropical fruits grow here in profusion, with wild flowers and five hundred varieties of ferns to add to its beauty. Perpetual spring and summer make the climate most delightful. But it is a garden of Eden after the fall. The great mass of the six hundred thousand population are ignorant, superstitious and wicked. There are a number of churches and about six hundred schools. About one-fourth of the people profess some connection with the churches. The Baptist, Wesleyan and Episcopalian are the largest and most influential churches on the Island.

In 1836, when the slaves were freed, the wealth of the Island was withdrawn by the English planters, and the freed people were left in abject poverty, and are still very poor. Eleven hundred rum shops disgrace the fair Island, and filch from the poor people their hard earnings, leaving the poor victims of drink hungry, and only clothed in rags. But in addition to that, Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and other allied, secret conspiring associations spread their dark mantles like a death pall over the already dark and ignorant minds of the people, enslaving body, soul and spirit. This is especially so in the towns and centers of population.

At Manchioneal an Odd-fellow's lodge was opened last summer with a large enrollment of members, many of them from the Wesleyan church. The Wesleyan minister joined, and then his members said, "Well, its a good thing or our minister wouldn't join." But some of his members had enough of Gospel light and good sense to know that the unfruitful works of darkness were not good, but to be reproved; and their reproof of the minister was so sharp that he reluctantly withdrew from the lodge.

The lodges promise great things in charity! Well; yes. One poor man joined, and in order to pay his assessment had to sell his saddle. A young man joined whose old mother lived in a comfortable house which they wanted for a lodge room. The poor old woman did not want to give it up, but by the persuasion of her son, and the minister telling her that it was a good thing, and the lodge promising to build her another comfortable house, she was induced to give it up, and allow herself to be put into an old hut, never to see the promised house built, but died last week with old age, exposure, disease and grief. Oh, yes! the charitables came out and attended her funeral, dressed in black with three links on their coats. Charity? Yes, such charity as vultures give to lambs, and wolves to harmless sheep. Such orders need secrecy to hide their nothingness, with oaths and horrid penalties to bind the chains of darkness. But then the angel comes, and the great defiant doors of darkness and sin open of their own accord, lets a streaming flood of light from heaven in, so that those who have eyes may see the hideousness of the whole falsehood with the mask torn off.

JOSIAH DILLON.

A CRY FROM INDIA.

COME OVER AND HELP US.

DEAR EDITOR:—Allow me through your columns to have a plain talk with your thousands of readers. First, I want to say to all my countrymen, that we stand as your representatives before the people of the East. We Westerners who are living and working in Asia are in a sense "ambassadors" who represent the Christian lands of America and England before the many millions of non-Christian people in Asia. The tens of thousands of proud, worldly, avaricious, wicked men; yes, and women, too, who come from Europe to India, represent our Western lands and people as being godless and base. It remains for us who follow God to represent the Christianity which is the great blessing of our nations. But, alas, we are a minority, humanly speaking, though by faith we are a majority.

We want more workers in India. As I write these letters, I confess that my earnest desire is to stir up some godly men and women to come to India and work for Jesus. Many who cannot come themselves could assist those who can and in various ways help us in this great work. India is so far away from America that it looks worse than climbing the Alps to come out here. Very well, I ask none to come who have not "faith to remove mountains," or at least "wings of faith," to fly over the mountains!

Dear Editor and dear Pastors, do not think that I am coming into your folds to entice away some of your sheep! No. Rather you will share with me the deep desire for India's salvation, so that you will gladly let me plead the cause of India before your people, and if the Lord calls any of your dear ones this way, you should give your sons as gladly as Abraham placed Isaac upon the altar, and your daughters as heartily as Laban gave Rebekah in marriage to the rich young Isaac.

Now a word to all the young people. For years I shrank from entering into the very responsible Gospel work. After nearly twenty-five years of hard work, I now say that, had I known beforehand the pain and joy, the battles and victories, instead of fleeing like Jonah (mentally) I should rather have pleaded with the Lord, "Here am I, send me." There is nothing better than to offer yourselves as a living sacrifice. Come to India if you can.

You ask about qualifications. They are two:

1. A saved soul.

2. A good brain full of solid sense. I do not say "common sense:" in foreign mission work, you want some uncommon sense. The first chapter of Proverbs and Eph. 1:17, etc., tell you where and how you can get this extraordinary wisdom.

We want workers to come, not expecting a fat salary, but simply their expenses. The China Inland Mission is conducted upon this plan. During 1887 Hudson Taylor took one hundred men from England to China upon those terms. Then we want some who will work for their own support, something after the plan of William Taylor in Africa. To make it practical, I will state some of our immediate wants. And there are other openings for earnest workers all through India.

I want two men as "Colporteur Evangelists." I have two already in the field. One of them is a brother from Missouri. Years ago, he was a colporteur of the Bible Society, and afterward an evangelist in Texas. I would set two more at work to-day if I had them. Any who wish to come for this work may please write to me direct and also write to the editor of the Cynosure, informing him that you have applied to me and giving him references by which he may make inquiries regarding your fitness for the work. This labor of love is explained in the following statement. Other openings for work will be presented in future letters.

COLPORTEUR EVANGELISM IN INDIA.

1. What is it? (1) Selling books and tracts from station to station and from house to house; (2) preaching to persons and to parties wherever possible, and (3) scattering tracts and papers everywhere.

2. What books? First of all those on Christian experience and work,—that is, Repentance, Salvation, Holiness and Soul-saving. Then, such special works as are most needed. We have received a small stock upon "secrecy," and so our traveling agents are taking National Association truths to the people of India.

3. What special methods? Hard work and self-denial. C. E. takes a large box of stock, ordering more as needed. A loaded "cartridge-box" of books at his side, ten to twenty pounds. Sells for cash only. Never travels nor sells on Sundays.

4. What success already? The last two months our man has sold over Rs. 400 (a rupee is about 47 cents). Considering that much of this is in small books, tracts, etc., and that much has been given away besides, it means a large circulation of the best literature. But remember that the selling of books is only a part of our colporteur evangelists' work. His equally important mission is to preach the Gospel directly, and this he does in every station and to hundreds of souls every month.

5. What co-operation and support? The colporteur evangelist acts with liberty, yet in close concert with headquarters. As the books belong to the Watchman Repository, careful accounts are kept and reports made. He is self-supporting, i. e., he is to earn his living and railway fare through the good he does to the people.

6. What profits and prospects? "Much every way," except financially. The high rates of exchange, freights, etc., also donations, losses, printing, clerkhire, etc., make it impracticable for our Repository to depend merely upon its sales. We expect wide-awake souls to see that this is as necessary a part of God's plan of evangelizing India as any other. As a union evangelistic mission this work expects the cordial co-operation of all good people.

7. What needs? We need more workers and a large stock of books. We long to extend this line of labor among the natives also.

Men of any nationality who are full of faith, wisdom and the Holy Ghost, and who glory only in the cross of Christ (see Acts 6:3, 5 and Gal. 6:14) are invited to correspond with the undersigned. There is also work for women of like faith and zeal in other departments of our mission.

Pray for us and our work and for more workers and means, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified in India more than ever before.

W. J. Gladwin,
India Watchman Office, Bombay, India.

WILL THE OLD PARTIES SUPPRESS THE SALOON?

ADDRESS BY REV. ALEXANDER THOMSON AT THE WHEATON PROHIBITION CONFERENCE.

Scott says, where a good reason cannot be given why a man should do a thing, that is one good reason why it should not be done. If a good reason can be given for believing that prohibitory laws will be enacted and enforced by either of the old parties, I should consider it unwise to continue the organization of a third party; for the increase of parties always multiplies popular excitement and expense. But if no sufficient reason can be shown for such a belief, then it becomes evident that a third party is a necessity to men and women determined to secure the extermination of the saloon.

Let us first examine the affirmative of this question. There are two States in the Union where prohibition has been carried as a party measure, and the law to very considerable extent enforced. These States are Kansas and Iowa. But in both these States we find this condition of affairs: Where their borders touch on whisky States there is drunkenness all along such borders; and in many of their large cities the law is what South Carolina said the tariff law should be in the days of Jackson—null and void. The first is easily accounted for by the motto on the banner at the Chicago Convention: "Local option is a failure; it is too local and too optional;" also by this other fact, that if a man has a block of coal touching him on one side and a well-tarred plank on the other, he may find it a rather difficult matter to keep clean.

But what can account for the fact that when a law has been passed by a large majority of a State, as was the case with the temperance law in Iowa, that in certain sections of that State that law is absolutely defied? Has the old error of nullification become among our Northern States an actual fact? Has a sweeping majority in the whole State lost its power in refractory sections? If so, there is open and successful rebellion in the land. This, of course, we do not for a moment believe. The explanation will have to be sought elsewhere. We believe it will be found to be this: that though prohibition was a party measure both in Kansas and Iowa, it was and is opposed bitterly by many claiming to be members of that party; who, although they did not see fit to go outside their party lines and oppose the measure, have continued with ceaseless vigilance, and in active alliance with the party opposing the measure, to obstruct the enforcement of a law which they do not favor.

Does any one believe that if the whole Republican party in Kansas and Iowa would use the full power of the government to crush the saloon, that it could not be done? If so, then you ought to be a monarchist, for popular government is a failure.

What has been said of the Republican party in Kansas and Iowa, may be said with certain limitations about the Democratic in Georgia and Missouri. There the Democrats have taken up prohibition as a party measure by counties, and in many cases have been successful not only in enacting laws, but in securing their enforcement to a large extent. But as we have seen, the argument which will apply to Kansas and Iowa, will apply with even greater force to Georgia and Missouri. This, we believe, to be practically the affirmative side of this question. Now, does the fact that two or three Republican States and two or three Democratic States, where temperance laws have been enacted by a divided party and partially enforced, justify us in believing that the whole nation can be delivered from the curse of intemperance by either of these parties, a majority in each of which favor either the open or restricted sale of liquor? For an unprejudiced mind there is but one answer to this question.

Let us now take up the negative side of this subject. In this country there are three principal ways by which we may reach the opinions and principles of an organized body of men. There are the views of its leaders, the views of its party press and its latest declaration of principles as formulated in convention assembled. Along this line we will try to understand what the Prohibitionists may expect from the two old parties.

It will be admitted, I suppose, that James G. Blaine is a Republican, and that to a large degree he represents the opinions of his party. His latest utterance is for a continuation of the liquor tax, which is a government permit or indulgence to commit what every thoughtful man knows to be a great wrong. We Protestants hold up our hands with holy horror at Tetzel selling his indulgences, and yet this United States Government is to-day selling indulgences to the black crimes of robbery and murder (for the dram shop embraces both), and this Mr. Blaine endorses. It will not be denied that Chauncey M. Depew is a Republican. At a recent banquet, given by the most prominent Republicans of New York, at which this gentleman was expected to make the principal speech, they had thirteen different kinds of liquor, according to the New York press. Had any of our Prohibitionists been present at that banquet to present our cause, no doubt the gentlemanly Republicans would have offered to treat, for if they were such a dry set that they needed thirteen different kinds of liquor to satisfy them, they would surely think that such a severe and general drouth would extend to the Prohibitionists.

It is but lately that agents of the prohibitory party in Washington sought, by personal conversation with the national leaders of both parties, to ascertain their views on prohibition. Of course the result was as might have been expected. It was high license or local option; but in most cases determined opposition to making prohibition a party issue.

Next, let us notice the party press. In New York the Tribune is the great thunderer. Those who know it, will not accuse it of rolling forth much prohibition thunder. There was a day when the Tribune was a temperance paper; when a mightier hand wielded its editorial pen. I do not much believe in spiritualism, for if spirits could come back from the other world old Horace Greeley would return and make such a racket about that Tribune building that Whitelaw Reid would think the Day of Judgment had come. There is no statement too mendacious, no act too mean or contemptible for the Tribune when it appears in the field against the Prohibitionists.

Coming to our own Chicago I was in the habit of reading the Tribune, but being in favor of prohibition myself, I did not like it very well. I have honestly tried, perhaps in a weak way, to be a Christian gentleman, and I must say it was not very pleasant to be called a crank and a fanatic. I knew that Seaton was a crank, and Osman Digma, the great robber of the African desert, was a fanatic, and I did not like to be placed in such company. So I changed over to the Inter Ocean—when, behold! I am just as big a crank and fanatic as ever, and, if possible, the Evening Journal makes me out to be a more utterly abominable man than either Tribune or Inter Ocean. I think they will all speedily come round, however, to the very correct position taken by Mr. Halsted of the Cincinnati Gazette, that it is time to stop trying to fool the Prohibitionists. They should go to work fighting them with pitchforks, pistols and butcher-knives. What a wonder he left out dynamite. Quite right, Mr. Halsted; now that you can fool us no longer, we ought to expect the pistols and butcher-knives.

What did the last National Republican Convention do in regard to prohibition? Absolutely nothing. The leaders of the prohibitory party tried to secure some kind of recognition, but utterly failed; and when Senator Blair, that noble anti-saloon Republican, endeavored to speak in their behalf, his voice was drowned by a chorus of yells that savored of the bar-room. If a friend came to my home seeking aid in a certain course of action and I simply ignored him, would he expect much aid from me?

Again, what has been said of the Republicans in regard to the views of their leaders, their party press and their convention, can be said with even more force about the Democrats. President Cleveland went out of his way when in Wisconsin last fall to insult the whole prohibitory sentiment of the country by openly going into a brewery and twice publicly drinking of its fountain of curses. And while there are, as among the Republicans, a few noble exceptions, among the leaders of the Democratic party it is well known that the overwhelming majority are against prohibition, and many of them from personal reasons. If the Democratic press is not quite so hard on third party men, if it does give us an occasional pat on the back, of course we thoroughly comprehend it. It is the monkey kindly patting the cat with whose paws it hopes to pull the chestnuts out of the fire; and when the day comes that the cat eats the chestnuts herself, we all know there will be a very mad monkey.

In regard to their last National Convention the Democrats gave no uncertain sound. Like the devil in the garden of Eden, they placed themselves on record as being opposed to all sumptuary laws.

And now, finally, if the leaders of our great parties were friends to prohibition in the small section of the Union which they govern, there at least prohibition would be properly enforced. The thirteen hundred saloons in the District of Columbia, and one gin palace in the very Capitol reared by the people's money is the forcible and damning comment on their views of prohibition. O men and brethren, mothers and sisters of America, when God is flooding the land with great waves of light on this question, shall we sit in darkness till the light is withdrawn and his judgments begin!

PRESS COMMENT.

A Tyrannical Order.—The papers report the "escape of two sisters from the Ursuline Convent at Pittsburgh." The account says "the bishop had been consulted, and his orders were emphatic that they must be found at any cost and taken back to their Oakland home." Is it possible that any religious order will be allowed to exercise such tyrannical power as this in America? If inmates of a church prison rebel against their incarceration and escape, what right has a bishop to bring them back against their will? Evidently the bishop has forgotten in what country and in what century he lives. The account reads like a chapter out of the history of the middle ages.—Southern Evangelist.

The Order of the Indian Commissioner Forbidding the Native Language in Schools.—Remember this order is issued in the United States, not in Turkey, or China, or Japan, or Siam; and it is issued in the nineteenth century, instead of back in the dark ages; it is approved and affirmed by a President of 60,000,000 free people, instead of by a barbarous autocrat. In the words of the New York Mail and Express: "There is scarcely another country on earth where missionaries are forbidden to teach the Bible in the native tongue; and for such a thing as this to occur in America is one of the most remarkable things that has happened in the nineteenth century."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

Freemasonry Leaning on George Washington.—It is a failing cause which buttresses itself by names which do not belong to it. The Freemasons of Virginia have secured a charter "for the erection in Fredericksburg of a Masonic Temple as a memorial of the character of George Washington, who was made a Mason in Lodge 4 in Richmond on the 4th of August, 1753." It is well known that George Washington was, in his youth, initiated as a Mason. It is just as well known that he afterwards ceased to attend the lodge or to maintain any connection with the order. This fact he stated in a letter which has been often published. The frequent attempt of Masonry to identify his illustrious name with their order is a piece with their claim of Solomon as their founder and of John the Baptist and of John the apostle as members of the craft.—Christian Statesman.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE FIGHT AGAINST ROME IN BOSTON.—THE CYNOSURE COMMENDED.

The devil-head of evil in this world consists of the trinity of Rum, Romanism and Lodgery, and the word which the last R. of Dr. Burchard's initial triplets represents—rebellion, is simply a consequence of the existence of these cardinal factors in evil.

In this city rum has its unflinching opponents, and even Romanism, in this, its most invulnerable stronghold, has its undaunted assailants; but not even a Quixote is found in the field against lodgery, an evil more subtle than all other elements combined.

We need a leader in the fight against the lodge system in this city. The drunkard, and even the saloon-keeper hangs his head in shame and attempts no denial of the effect of intemperance; the Romanist listens, and sometimes argues or crosses himself and retires; but the lodgeman, with all the impudence of his sovereign master, the devil, defies, denies and endeavors to squelch free speech. Endeavors, I said; nay, he does squelch it. I have seen him do it in one of our largest halls, in defiance of the representatives of law.

"Who is there among us" bold enough to lay seige to the citadel of secretism in this lodge-ridden metropolis? But then, where could such a person speak? No hall would be opened. Speech-making is not allowed in the thoroughfares—and the Common is altogether out of the question.

But Romanism and not secretism is my topic this week. Protestants, and all lovers of liberty, should be exceeding joyful because of the good being done in the fight against the harlot of the Tiber.

Mrs. M. L. Shepherd, the converted nun, lectures every Thursday afternoon and evening to overflowing audiences in Tremont Temple. This nun is really an exceptional woman. Keen, witty, logical and philosophical, she draws to her feet many of our most intellectual citizens. By her sweetness and gentleness of manner she wins the obdurate Romanist, and many converts are made. Her knowledge of the papacy, doctrinally, politically and historically is really wonderful. At the close of her discourses questions of all kinds bearing upon the subject are allowed, and successfully answered, often to the discomfiture of many would-be discomforting inquirers. Without doubt, Mrs. Shepherd is thoroughly converted, a fact which deeply impresses all who hear her; and one Catholic Bishop has said that he feared this nun and the open Bible she inevitably holds in her hand more than any other antagonist. The Romanists of this city, also, seem to hold her in dread. She charges the Globe with refusing to print notices of her lectures. To show that the Jesuits seem to intimidate, if they do not absolutely control the press, Rev. W. Kellaway states that even that conservative Republican paper, the Journal, has succeeded in imitating its Democratic contemporary a few doors north. In other words, Mr. Kellaway affirms that the Journal actually declined to publish notices of his anti-Romanist lectures in Horticultural Hall.

The friends of Dr. Fulton and the Reformed Catholics of this city have united, and will issue in about one week the first number of a representative organ, to be known as the Free Press. A very interesting meeting of the projectors of this new publication was held a few evenings ago in Arlington Hall. Rev. Mr. Kellaway, who will have editorial management, noticing your correspondent in the audience, motioned that a vote of thanks be given to the Christian Cynosure for the articles it has published, from time to time, concerning the work in this city, and the imprisonment of Rev. Mr. Davis. A storm of applause followed the motion.

Evangelist Leyden, a converted Catholic, is one of the most vigorous and radical opponents of Rome I ever met. He stands at the head of the rapidly increasing body known here as the Reformed Catholics. In conjunction with Mr. Kellaway he holds meetings in Music Hall every Sunday. The testimonies of some of these Reformed Catholics are very interesting. I will briefly cite one instance.

One young man stated that he became too inquisitive in regard to the source of power the priests pretend to have in the confessional. He ventured to ask his confessor one day how, when and where he received power to forgive sins. "Young man," replied the priest, "you've too much brains." He next advised him to cease from such inquisitiveness. But the brainy young man's eyes were opened. He concluded that if the church of Rome discounted brains, he would get out where there would be a premium on such an indispensable possession. He couldn't afford to allow Romanism to stunt them, so he came out, but is unconverted to Christ.

Mrs. Shepherd declares that many of the clergy as well as the laity would leave Rome could they find some temporary asylum from the persecution which always follows Romish seceders. She is now agitating a movement to provide such a place, which meets with much approval from Protestants interested in anti-Catholicism. The story of Mrs. Shepherd's conversion is very entertaining, and she has several times been urged to repeat it. She will close her lectures here next May.

Some person, presumably a Romanist, has smashed with a brickbat one of the large and expensive plate glass windows of Benj. F. Bradbury's drug store, corner of Washington and Winter streets, where are displayed stacks of Fulton's book "Why Priests should Wed." Across the shattered pane Mr. Bradbury has pasted the inscription, "The book still lives." The affair is the talk of the town, and the book is thus receiving a splendid free advertisement.

D. P. MATHEWS.

A SECRET SHAME.—I live in a little town called Smithport, in which there are four licensed hotels and bottling works, three of which are being conducted by members of the Grand Army lodge, and also the minister of the M. E. church belongs to the same organization. The man that was the chaplain was one of the wickedest men in the place. How true the words of the Master, where he says light has come into the world but men have chosen darkness in preference to light, and they love to assemble themselves together in secret places, for their deeds are evil and they are ashamed to come to the light. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret."—John R. Barr in the Wesleyan Methodist.

Waldeck, Germany, has a law forbidding the granting of a marriage license to a person who is addicted to intemperance.

REFORM NEWS.

WHERE SHERMAN MET THE SEA.

The attractions of Savannah—The churches—Good report of the Congregationalists, but the Baptist brethren deep in the lodge pit.

SAVANNAH, Mar. 26, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Savannah, Georgia, was visited by both John Wesley and George Whitefield, and was the scene of their labors. Whitefield also labored and died in New England. It was here that Wesley must have formed his opinions of slavery, which he declared to be "the sum of all villainies." This is one of those places which nature made for a city, and which, but for slavery, would have been what it may yet become, the great emporium of the Southeast.

Nearly fifteen miles up the river from its mouth there is a considerable island, the main channel being on the southwest side. Opposite this island is a high bluff on the south, and a vast savannah on the north and east. It was on this bluff that the city was built, having an excellent, natural, deep-water harbor, and an elevated but level location. For two hundred years it has been an important port, and from here sailed the first steamship that ever crossed the ocean. Savannah has grown steadily since the war and now has many fine streets and buildings, a multitude of small parks and one fine one, and quite a number of monuments, the most conspicuous being to Gen. Greene, Count Pulaski, Sergeant Jasper, and to the Confederate dead. The soil of the city and vicinity is sandy, and in the suburbs is largely devoted to market gardening. There are great fields of peas that are just beginning to be picked for the market.

I visited "The Hermitage," a typical plantation of the olden time. Several pictures of the place appear in the Century of a year or two ago, and I recognized the place at once. An avenue a mile long, bordered with great live oaks, whose branches shut together over the top, and whose limbs are draped with the ever-present, sombre Spanish moss, leads up to the fine old mansion. On each side of the avenue, but far enough away not to spoil the effect, were the brick cottages that constituted the Negro quarters. They were small, one story, and have long since been abandoned. On one side, back from the rest, was the house of the Negro driver. It was two stories and overlooked the others. On the other side, nearer the mansion and in a much nicer building, lived the white overseer. Close to the great house was the hospital and dispensary where the sick slave was cared for, and near by these were a multitude of out-buildings for various ends. There is now a wild profusion of shrubbery and flowers, and there seem to have been some fine old orange trees until the cold winters of seven and four years ago killed them. The whole place is gone to decay, and is simply kept by some colored people for the owners, who live in the city and come here on convivial occasions. The great cotton and rice fields that gave employment to the hundreds of slaves have now become forests.

Near by are the city waterworks, where from a large number of artesian wells great engines pump the bright, pure water into a great tower that supplies the city. I have nowhere seen a purer or more abundant water supply.

Next we visited a great cotton-seed oil mill where the seed is first divested of the remainder of the cotton which adheres to it (and which is made into batting) and then ground and pressed into cakes for the food of cattle. The oil that is extracted has already become an important article of trade. Mixed with lard it is greatly used as food, and while it cheapens the product, does not, I think, impair its value as an article of diet. It is well that cotton-seed oil, like oleomargarine, should be sold for what it is. It is not well that they should be taxed.

I also visited the Telfair Academy of Arts and Science. This is a fine building, admirably kept, and has a fine collection of statuary and paintings. As compared with the Corcoran Art Gallery of Washington, it is less costly and smaller, but is certainly a fine collection and well worthy of the city.

Beech Institute is the fine Normal School of the American Missionary Association, with 260 students, eight teachers, and admirably managed by Miss Holmes, the able superintendent. A second time I addressed the school on the lodge question with, I hope, excellent results. Some of the largest colored churches in America are here. One Baptist church claims 5,000 members, and another 3,000. Some of the pastors are able men and are doing what they can to develop a more intelligent as well as a more earnest piety. The First Congregational church has an able pastor, who graduated at Atlanta, and at Hartford in theology. Another colored Congregational church on the border of the city has a colored pastor educated in Germany, and who speaks German well. Both of these are opposed to the lodge, though one of them was made a Mason, and has been Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of the State. His church has now no secret society members. All the other pastors are, I believe, Masons or Odd-fellows, or both. It is a hard field.

On Sabbath morning, the 25th, I preached to a good congregation in the First Congregational church. I dwelt to a considerable extent on the duty of separation from the secret lodge system. A number of the members responded most heartily and thanked me for my timely words. At 7:30 P. M. I lectured in the Woodville Congregational church to a full house. I had the closest attention, and nearly all were in sympathy with my remarks. This morning (26th) I walked into the city, and addressed the Baptist Ministers' Union. Every one is a Freemason, and one has been Grand Master of the State. Several other ministerial brethren were present. I had excellent attention for more than an hour, though often pressed with questions. On the whole, the course of those who heard me was kind and courteous, if not candid. I trust that good was done. I go from here to Charleston, S. C.

THE NEW ORLEANS LETTER.

CHURCHES YET OPENING FOR DISCUSSION.

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 24, 1888.

I preached last Sabbath evening on the religion of Masonry. We had a very good and quiet congregation, although the fraternities were well represented, and several left the church while I was going through the Fellowcraft obligation. Rev. John Holmes, the pastor, heartily endorsed the sermon.

Rev. Dr. Manning, Freewill Baptist Missionary from Michigan, is preparing for the annual meeting of the Freewill Baptists in this State here in April. Rev. R. Kendricks of Amite City, La., pastor of the Freewill Baptist church of that town and a seceded secretist, is in the city. He knew nothing of the N. C. A. and had never seen the Cynosure. I have promised him to come up the 31st of March and lecture on secretism. He is quite sure if I come that some of his people will give up secrecy. He says Rev. Antoine Washington, an African Zion M. E. preacher, planted Odd-fellowship and other secret orders in Amite City.

I purpose to attend the 5th District Baptist Association on Wednesday, April 4th. I have promised (D. V.) to preach at Mount Moriah Baptist church and at St. Matthew Baptist church on the Sabbath.

Rev. A. S. Jackson purposes to open fire on the secret fort of lodgery the last Sabbath in March. I have not obtained very many Cynosure subscribers this week, but have done much visiting and had private conversations on the secrecy question. The Masons are loud in their boasting of celebrating Easter in a large up-town M. E. church.

The Herald, of which Rev. A. S. Jackson is editor, has a column of its last issue devoted to anti-secrecy, but to my astonishment it very strongly defends the Knights of Labor, by saying that their cause is a righteous one.

No intelligent man can justly deny but what the laborer is worthy of his hire, and that he is as much entitled to the protection of the law as the capitalist; but meanwhile we do not think the secret lodge the proper place to arbitrate labor. We trust our anti-secret brethren will wake up to oppose secrecy, even if it come in form and with the tongue of the tempter in the Garden of Eden. I have well nigh distributed all the copies of the Cynosure and tracts in my possession. Mr. S. S. Butts, formerly K. of R. and S. of the Pride of Louisiana lodge, No. 3, K. of P., said to me this evening, "I tell you the Cynosure has got me studying over this thing." Mr. Butts's family are strongly opposed to lodgery. We trust he may see its evils and renounce it.

LODGE PERSECUTION.

Whereas I have suffered persecution as an evil-doer for preaching the Gospel of the blessed Son of God; and whereas said persecutions have come from members of secret societies or their sympathizers; and whereas, since the late National Christian Convention held in Central Church of this city, certain gentlemen, members of secret societies, have begun a tirade on me and are circulating frivolous reports that I was expelled from the "Pride of Louisiana" Lodge, No. 3, K. of P., for embezzlement, etc., I feel it is my duty as a Christian and a minister of the Gospel to set myself aright before the well-thinking public. I will not go back to expose certain things respecting the joint picnic given by the then four lodges of Knights of Pythias of this city in April, 1882, but I will only ask my secret brethren what became of the $4 00 I paid in 1883 for your complimentary banner? Where is the $4.00 I paid to the P. L. Lodge, K. of P. in 1883, October and November? The $4 00 I paid on the banner was a gift, but the $4 00 I paid to the lodge in October and November of 1883 was all and the only money I held for them before or since the fourth Thursday of November, 1883.

Now, dear brethren, there is a law for all embezzlers to be tried and if I was an embezzler of lodge funds five years ago, why did you gentlemen not carry me to law; why do you wait five years to charge a Christian with embezzlement, only because you believe him to have been instrumental in getting so many others to leave your dark lodges after being convinced of your secret folly?

I will not criticise, but submit this to the consideration of my brother preachers. If the lodge brethren want me to reveal anything connected with certain cases I am prepared to expose it. Yours for the pure Gospel of Jesus,

Francis J. Davidson.

PROGRESS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

York, Pa.

Since the great task of reorganizing the anti-secret workers of Pennsylvania was begun I have been cheered by many signs of progress. There seems to be a strong desire to do all that can be done to push this old Commonwealth into her proper position, with her old motto, "Virtue, Liberty, and Independence," rubbed up and dusted off so that all can read it.

Our friends at Pittsburgh are wide awake, and seem to realize that the time has come to do hard work for civil and religious liberty. This old city is famous for her smoke; but I am mistaken if it is not also full of true Protestant faith (or fire). There is generally genuine fire where there is so much genuine smoke.

Dr. J. C. Miles of Dalton says: "I hope and trust that the efforts being put forth to suppress these mighty evils will ultimately succeed, but the devil seems to have general control. If universal prohibition could be established, other reforms would be more easily accomplished." Anti-secret reformers who oppose the use of "fire-water" are wise; for a sot or rowdy cannot do much for freedom.

W. B. Bertels of Wilkesbarre says: "Anything I can do to help on the anti-secret work I will do. I am with the movement to do all I can."

Rev. J. T. Michael writes from Washington, D C., as follows: "I feel intensely interested in the Pennsylvania work."

Edward H. Magill, president of Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Delaware county, says: "Friends do not encourage secret societies of any kind." I expect to receive much aid and encouragement from the many thousands of Friends in the great city of Brotherly Love and in all parts of Penn's old colony. Pennsylvania belongs to Freedom and not to Freemasonry. The Society of Friends only need "more light" on the subject of secret societies to arouse them to the most energetic action. Nothing could be more antagonistic to the principles of the Friends than all the principles and practices of Jesuitism, Masonry and secret orders of every description.

No State in the Union contains so many men and women who are intensely opposed to Romanism, rum, rebellion, rings and secret societies as the old State that William Penn established solely for the sake of civil and religious liberty. Let every Pennsylvanian go to work with energy to recapture our grand old Commonwealth from the sly and crafty craftsmen of the Romish lodge and Roman Catholic church. Priestcraft and kingcraft have no legal claim to a single inch of Pennsylvania soil. The time for action has come. Pennsylvanians, are you ready? Edward J. Chalfant.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A TEXAS FIGHT WITH THE TWIN DEMONS.

Anderson, Texas, March 26, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—After an illness of several days I am up and at work again. Since I wrote, on my way here, I stopped at Bryan. Here I visited Prof. A. H. Colwell, a former student of Straight University, of New Orleans. He has been a member of the Odd-fellows' lodge. He appeared excited on learning my mission. "Why, Bro. Jordan, it must take a great amount of manhood for one to stand up against the lodge," said he. He kept me talking a long time, and took the tracts with great interest. He is a good "Anti." He introduced me to his pastor, Rev. W. H. Hopkins, a seceded member of the craft and pastor of the A. M. E. church. He, too, is out-spoken against the evils of the lodge.

Our work is being felt all over this State. Bro. Clark is in the northern part, where I was to join him, but have been unable. I am preaching here, and my people love me and have unshaken confidence in my sincerity in whatever I undertake. After services yesterday I announced that I would speak on Monday night at the court-house. That was all right. So I posted my bills; subject, "How shall we Prohibit the Liquor Traffic?" Politicians began to squirm. One of my brothers came to see me, saying, "The white folks are just a-cussing," and asked that I would not speak, as my bread and meat depended upon my keeping quiet on that subject. My reply was, "We were kept in the worst form of slavery known to history, longer than we would have been if the people could have been made to hear. Men were killed to stop their mouths; but as soon as Douglass, Garrison, Blanchard, Clark, Phillips and others could get the ear of the good people of this country, they were heard, and they conquered. And if the people can get loose from their old parties long enough to hear, they will arise and free themselves from this great curse. Let them hear." He agreed, so I am to talk to-night. Pray for our success.

I am learning more about the power of these twin devils. Several of our pastors are being choked into silence. It would be a blessing to the ministry and our cause if Bro. Hinman or some agent could be kept here a while. It strengthens us who are trying to fight the "powers of darkness." Letters have been sent all over this State defining my position, but as yet I cannot say I have met any real resistance. But I see, as I never saw before, God is truly on the side of right. I am yours in Jesus,

L. G. Jordan.

FRIENDSHIP, LOVE AND TRUTH AS PRACTICED IN CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS.

"Chained to no party's arbitrary sway,
But cling to truth, where'er she leads the way."

The Fourth of March is a great day in Texas among colored Odd-fellows. I am not a member of any order or church, but under the above principle I favor the cause of God wherever it has a footing, and I am not afraid to denounce wrong wherever it lifts up its hydra head. Of the instance which I now record, if I did not give my unqualified condemnation I belief the rocks would cry out.

The population of colored people in Corpus Christi is not over 300, and in the midst of this small collection of inhabitants there are lodges of Masons, Odd-fellows, U. B. F.s, S. M. T.s, Seven Stars, S. S. of C., and one or two other Jim Crow orders. These, together with the African Methodist, Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Free-will and Missionary Baptists—five churches and seven or eight lodges to be supported by these three hundred colored people. It is evident that some of these bodies must suffer, either the church or lodge. I am satisfied it's the church that suffers, and what I say has come under my own personal observation. Every one of these churches are poor, groveling, half-supported, and utterly unable to feed a minister, say nothing about supporting one. All churches are in debt; while, on the other hand, the lodges, with scarcely an exception, are blooming. Members of the church refuse, in many instances, to render their dues to the church of Christ, but give the last cent to the lodge, denying themselves and children of bread and raiment. Is this right?

On the first Sunday in March the G. U. O. of O. F. turned out to hear the annual sermon delivered by the talented, refined and Christian gentleman, Rev. J. Harvey Jones, A. M., presiding elder of the Corpus Christi District of the A. M. E. church. The sermon was profound, and showed that much time had been spent in its preparation. This gentleman was asked to remain and preach for these very Odd-fellows; and, notwithstanding the sacrifice made by this elder refusing to go on to his district, after the sermon was preached the collection was taken up, and these very Odd-fellows lovingly took half of the money collected, it being only $6.50, and put it in their treasury, to the contumely of the elder and disgust of the audience. The sermon preached last year for them was delivered by a man of no learning, who told them that the Negro race came from monkeys, and that the great grand-daddy of Odd-fellows was a monkey. How is this for F. L. and T. in Corpus Christi, Texas! All of this I can prove, and more too. X. Y. Z.

MISSIONARY WORK IN MORMONDOM.

Dear Brother:—Yesterday I received a letter from my father with one dollar enclosed from you for our Ogden church, with a request that I write to you of our work.

Ogden is the second city in size and commercial and political importance in Utah. It has a population of 8,000, more than half Mormon. The Mormons carry every election, though the non-Mormons hope to win in a few years. They are gaining strength. Half the business is in non-Mormon hands; and the Mormon officials feel the pressure of outside influences, and yield to it when they must.

The public schools are actually Mormon schools, as much so as Christian schools are non-Mormon. There are no free schools here; tuition being required in the public school. A tax is raised but it will not half support the schools. Poor children are admitted free in public and private schools.

The non-Mormons are generally irreligious. Infidelity and spiritualism have a strong hold. The church attendance is small, and churches weak. Our Congregational policy is to hold a few centers and work out from them as far as possible. The New West Commission has a strong academy here, and we have a church half built. The church will have a seating capacity of over four hundred, opening all rooms for special occasions.

The work is an experiment in one sense, for we do not know who will respond to the Gospel. But we shall preach the Gospel whether men will hear or forbear. On the principle that a rock cannot be broken with a tack-hammer, we are preparing to to strike blows equal to the resistance they must overcome. This is our need of a church. We do reach the people, not in wonderful ways, but by patient, faithful work. The town feels the influence of our work. I preach in three outside places regularly, and hope to preach occasionally at other points. In one place I held special meetings; infidelity was strong; but now the infidelity does not keep the people from our meetings. We have overcome their prejudices, and we feel hopeful for the salvation of many people in that place. In the other communities the same conditions exist in general, only the work has been carried on for a longer time.

We reach the non-Mormon elements about as sinners in other places are reached. It is a hard, slow process to convert wicked people, and change the character of a community. But that problem is here what it is elsewhere.

As to the Mormons—we are not making very much headway in the larger towns, or in Ogden, at least, though we do reach some. In the country places we have Mormons in large numbers in our meetings. We have no startling conversions from Mormonism; but the leaven is working, and the Mormon church has not the strong hold that it once had. If you can, in thought, combine the power of the Catholic church over its people with the power of an oath-bound secret lodge, and work such machinery in the midst of a people whose ignorance leads them to superstition rather than faith, you can know something of the Mormon problem to be solved by Christian work.

But against all this we are making some headway. In a ladies' meeting in our society a stranger was saying some hard things against Mormonism, when she explained her boldness by saying, "I suppose I may speak freely here, for there are no Mormons in this company." But more than half the company had been Mormons. We cannot say just how the work grows now, for generally those who come out from Mormonism come slowly; at first holding their church lightly and then leaving altogether.

Pray for us that we may have faith to open our mouths for Christ, and preach the Word boldly as we ought to preach it. Yours in Christ,

AMOS JUDSON BAILEY.

FROM OUR AFFLICTED BROTHER COUNTEE.

MEMPHIS, March 23, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I intended to have furnished you with a copy of my New Orleans speech before this time, but constant watching at the bedside of my brother has incapacitated me for a revision of the same. You shall have it, D. V., for the next issue.

After weeks of weary watching and waiting, the Master has again laid his hand upon us, and my self-sacrificing brother has gone home to rest. His death was hastened by the ball he received between his shoulders the night when the Masons attempted my assassination. It lodged near the right lung, and its irritating influence precipitated an attack of consumption from which he died on Monday, the 19th, at 7:15 P. M.

On Sunday night he said to me, "I am going home to-night, I think." On Monday morning I said to him in a playful way, "You did not get home last night." He said, "No, but I wish that I had;" and ere another night had sped its way he passed away to rest.

During my bitter warfare with the lodge he was constantly by my side, and was always ready to jeopardize his own life to save mine. He was shot because he was walking behind me. He would say, "The people can spare me better than they can you." I would say to him, "You ought not to get behind me; you might get shot, and then you are not a Christian." He would reply, "Better that I should die any time than you. You can care for my family, and God will take care of you." One year afterward he embraced a hope in Christ, and since the death of our mother, Nov. 6, 1887, not five months ago, he has been anxious to go home and be at rest.

A few day prior to his death he called us all around his bedside, and to each of the five members of his family he gave a charge, and admonished them as to how they should live. I then asked him if there were no parting words for me. He gave me all five of his family to care for, and amid tears of joy he put his hands around my neck, and said, "You have been the best brother that ever lived. God bless you!" And now I feel completely broken up.

This much has been written to you amid intervals of tears. I felt when brother passed away as though the solid earth had slipped from under my feet. Such feelings of weakness I have never before experienced. I know God doeth what is best in his sight, but I cannot rally only for a little while. I am aware that he tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, and I look to him to by-and-by raise the cloud.

I read this morning an account of the continued good work in New Orleans, and I could but say, "Glory to God in the highest!" I have all my brother's family of five to care for, and I ask all of the dear Christian friends to help me bear this burden. Pray for me. R. N. COUNTEE.

PITH AND POINT.

MORE LODGE THAN LAW AND ORDER.

The soil here is of a strong nature, and don't bring forth a very large crop of reform of any kind. But in the way of "joining," we are having a "boom." A man that has not joined is as rare as a white blackbird. There a law and order society here, to which the ministers have all been invited, time and again; but they never come, they are too busy! That may be: but some time since the Masons had their installation of officers in the Presbyterian church, and after this ceremony they adjourned to the hotel to supper, where the evening was spent making speeches, and eulogizing what some of them certainly knew nothing about. All of the ministers of the city were invited, and all attended, I believe, and made speeches. The Law and Order Society don't have supper after they transact their business. Then Paul says, "To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." But after looking over the field, I guess the lodge is a few lengths ahead, and increasing its lead, while the church will come in for second premium. We had a faithful champion on the Lord's side, Rev. Wallace of the United Presbyterian church, but he has gone to San Diego, Cal.—A CRANK, Bellaire, Ohio.

GOOD WORK APPRECIATED.

I want to see an anti-secret Prohibition candidate nominated and pushed for all the cause is worth. You have got some excellent correspondents, especially J. M. Foster and Hinman always give something readable. I hope Miss E. E. Flagg will soon be ready for work again. She is a second Miss Willard, only more uncompromising. —(Rev.) JOEL WARNER.

MICHIGAN SPIRITUALISTS.

In your paper of March 1st there appears an article from Rev. A. H. Springstein in which he gives an account of a colloquy between himself and the leaders of a spiritualistic meeting in which the said A. H. Springstein everlastingly got away with and utterly dumbfounded and confounded his opponents and silenced them to such an extent that "all was painfully still," but that "there was a great amount of suppressed excitement" He says: "'Is this then the doctrine of Spiritualism?' They all answered, 'Yes, it is.'" Now the leading Spiritualists and all Spiritualists declare that they have no doctrine, no creed, nor no belief as a sect or body other than that the spirits of the dead can communicate with the living. That constitutes spiritualism; and a man may be and frequently is a Christian Spiritualist believing all the tenets and doctrines of some orthodox church, or he may be an infidel Spiritualist, or he may be anything he wants to be. Although I have been "raised from a dead level to a living perpendicular" symbolical to the resurrection of Christ, yet I cannot see very much to condemn in your paper, but much to ponder on; and I must own that it has set me thinking in a different channel in regard to Masonry than I ever thought I would.—JOSEPH F. CLARKE, M. D., Walkertown, Kans.

NOTE.—Two passages were omitted from the above letter: one containing offensive allusions to Bro. Springstein, which being from an entire stranger were unkind; the other inviting an indiscriminate discussion of spiritualism, for which our columns are not open. It is possible that the writer is not so well informed in the creed of that system as he supposes. We are glad to know the citadel of the lodge in his breast is not impregnable, and hope he will continue to read and profit by the Cynosure.

AN APPEAL FROM TEXAS.

Your paper is doing an inestimable good here. The pastor of the leading church here has once been a Mason but has "come out from among them" and is greatly in need of light, such light as the Cynosure conveys. He had never seen a copy of the paper until I gave him mine to read. He can do a world of good among our people toward discouraging them in worshiping the lodge He is a Baptist minister and is very intelligent. I told him about Rev. Countee, and his bold position which he took against the lodge a few years ago, and he is anxious to see Countee's views in print. There is no better place for an agent of the N. C. A. to work than Dallas, for this is a city of secret societies.—J. W. ROBERTS, Dallas, Texas.

AN AMERICAN MARTYR.

What! Has our free country martyrs? Yes, indeed. Martyrs make brightest stars in history, and the United States is making history. But stars are best seen in darkness. So it has been, is now, and shall be hereafter. Lodgery has had its Morgans. Slander and jails and murder attended the John Browns and Lovejoys of freedom for the slaves; saloonery murdered Haddock; and Romanism jails Davis for peaceably preaching the Gospel on Boston Common! The color of law is too transparent to cover the demoniacal features of the gratified persecutors, but the cowardly time-serving party politicians shut their eyes and wait the popular changes, anxious only to secure their party temporary victory. Oh ye blind! how can you escape the eagle's claws! Awake, Americans, and proclaim again to the whole world that yours is a free country, where the Gospel of Christ can be freely preached, and that your freedom cannot be longer infringed upon by the servants of the Pope under the hypocritical pretense of obedience to their manipulated, tampered with, municipal American law. But there is a higher law than the law of any nation. The law of God must ever be held supreme over any majority in any nation. And if Cæsar wrongly imprisons his subjects the Christian must then rise superior to his civil rights as the victim in Boston jail has done, and esteem it a privilege and glory to obey God rather than man. Yes, Wm. F. Davis is a sufferer for righteousness' sake in a double sense—the one as an American exercising his rights against an unjust local law, and the other as the faithful servant of Him whose kingdom is not of this world.—T. BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON III, Second Quarter.—April 15.

SUBJECT.—Christian Watchfulness.—Matt. 24: 42-51.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.—Mark 13: 37.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Notes in United Presbyterian Bible Teacher.]

I. THE DUTY OF WATCHFULNESS.—Vs. 42-44. 1. The Duty Itself.—Vs. 42. The word "watch" means (1) To keep awake. For an example of its use in this sense see 1 Thess. 5: 6, "Therefore let us not sleep," etc. (2) To be vigilant, or watchful (a) against temptation (1 Peter 5: 8); (b) for opportunities of usefulness, Eph. 5: 16, "Look therefore carefully how ye walk.... buying up the opportunity," etc. (margin of Rev. Ver.) (3) This command requires not only wakefulness and watchfulness, but also fidelity. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," Eccl. 9: 10. We must not only keep awake, but we must obey orders when awake.

We should carefully guard against all irreverent, unkind, untrue, impure and idle words. "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Matt. 12: 36.

We should guard against sinful and foolish actions; for in the judgment every one will receive "according to his deeds," Rom. 2: 6.

We should guard against all improper thoughts; "for as he thinketh in his heart, so is he," Prov. 23: 7.

We should be watchful as to our company; for "evil communications corrupt good manners," 1 Cor. 15: 33.

We should watch the heart itself, seeking to have it renewed and sanctified daily, for it is the fountain of all thoughts, words and actions. "Keep the heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life," Prov. 4: 23.

When are some of the times when we should especially watch? It was after the greatest victory ever given to the ten tribes that the Lord sent the message to Ahab, "Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest; for at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee." And so he did, and gained the victory by fair promises and flattery. The king had need to watch "himself," as the prophet warned him. Failing to do so, he was overcome. Attention has often been called to the fact that eminent men have been overcome at their strongest point. Moses lost his meekness, Job his patience, Abraham his trustful spirit, Elijah his courage, Samson his great strength, David his pureness of heart, Peter his boldness. When we feel strongest, then we have greatest need to watch. We should also watch our weak points. No chain is stronger than its weakest link. No fortification is stronger than its weakest point. A fence will serve but little purpose if the bars be left down. No character is stronger than its weakest spot, and the devil knows bravely where the weak points are. We need to have on "the whole armor of God," and be skilled in its use, if we would be steadfast and victorious. And the time never comes in this present life when the Christian can safely lay aside his armor, or relax his vigilance. What Christ says, he says not only to all, but he says it for all times, "WATCH."

2. Reasons Assigned. (1) Because of trials and exposure to temptations and trials. Watch, therefore—because of what he had just said. He had shown that great trials and temptations should come upon the church. He had shown that judgments were liable to fall upon the heedless and impenitent at any moment. (2) Because of the coming of the Lord. For ye know not what hour your Lord doth come Three things are implied in this statement. (a) The Lord will certainly come again. No truth is made more prominent in Scripture. Read Acts 1: 11; Mark 8: 38; 1 Thess. 5: 2; Jude 14; Rev. 1: 7, etc. The Lord's Supper is a pledge of his second coming, "till he come," 1 Cor. 11: 26. (b) The time of his coming is uncertain, Mark 13: 32; 1 Thess. 5: 2; Rev. 16: 15.

II. THE FAITHFUL SERVANT REWARDED.—Vs. 45-47. 1. His Faithfulness.—Vs 45, 46. (1) Assurance of his Lord's return. He is "faithful and wise"—he knows that his Lord may come at any time, and he seeks to have things in readiness. (2) His proper sense of responsibility. He realizes that "his Lord made him ruler over his household,"—not for his own personal enrichment, but "to give them meat in due season,"—that he might be a blessing to others. (3) His fidelity to his Lord's commands, v. 46. When he cometh shall find so doing—Watching and working just as directed, dealing faithfully with every trust.

2 His Reward.—V. 47. He shall make him ruler over all his goods—Christ's rewards will far exceed the measure of his servants' fidelity. "Faithful in a few things—made ruler over many things," Matt. 25: 21.

III. THE UNFAITHFUL SERVANT PUNISHED.—Vs 48-51. 1. His Unfaithfulness.—Vs 48, 49. (1) His unbelief.—V. 48. Shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth, etc. Such unbelief in the heart is the root of all unfaithfulness in the life. If we lived always in full view of the judgment seat, with the certain expectation of Christ's coming again, how much more careful we would be! (2) His abuse of trust.—V. 49. (a) Oppression and injustice. Shall begin to smite, etc. Instead of using his position for the welfare of others, he injures them. (b) Dishonesty and selfishness. And to eat and drink. He uses his Master's goods for his own immediate gratification, instead of for the good of those over whom he was placed, and for the Master's interests.

2. His Punishment.—Vs. 50, 51. It was (1) sudden and unexpected. V. 50. The lord of that servant shall come, etc. He shall surprise him in his wickedness, in the midst of the proofs of his unfaithfulness; and shall leave him no opportunity to redeem himself. "The wicked is driven away in his wickedness," Prov. 14: 32. It will be too late to begin to be faithful. (2) Terrible and irrepealable. V. 51. Shall cut him asunder—literally, "shall cut him in two." This terrible form of execution was sometimes practised, See 2 Sam. 12:31; Heb. 11:37. His portion with hypocrites—What that portion is may be seen by recalling verse 33 of last lesson. He was appointed a hypocrite's portion because he was one indeed, pretending to be the Lord's steward, yet serving no one but himself. Weeping and gnashing—Expressive of the most bitter agony and the deepest despair.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Caroline Worth died of paralysis March 15. 1888, at her residence in Starksboro, Vt., in her 78th year. She was the second wife of William Worth, who for several years had been a constant subscriber to the Christian Cynosure, and had been zealous in advocating its principles and teachings, and in soliciting subscriptions. Since his death Mrs. Worth has been no less interested in the opposition to secretism or the success of the paper than was her husband, although for several years she had been deprived of the pleasure of reading on account of failing sight. She was a woman of superior excellence, and was loved and respected by all who knew her. She was a consistent Christian and a cheerful giver of her limited means for the support of the Gospel and for other benevolent purposes, and will be greatly missed by those who were most intimately acquainted with her. FARM NOTES.

WINTER KILLING OF FRUIT TREES.

There is a wide difference in the hardiness of different varieties of fruit trees. Some varieties endure severe freezing better than others A variety that lives one winter may die the next, because of the changes surrounding it; and so a tender variety may live, when one naturally more hardy dies. Sudden changes often work disastrously. This was seen in the winter of 1853-54 in a belt of country extending from New York to Michigan. Quince trees and pear trees on quince stocks were greatly injured by rapid successions of very warm and intensely cold weather. The result was, that nearly all the trees that were not sheltered were destroyed, or so weakened that they continued to die till late in the summer.

The warmth had promoted sap circulation, and the sap, suddenly freezing, formed little crystals in the wood, which lacerated the fibers by every motion of the swaying trees. This cause may be supplemented by such a freezing and thawing of the limbs and branches as dries the life out of them. In all such cases the injury to trees will be in proportion to the exposure, and so the protection of good wind breaks is of great importance. In that memorable season of such wide spread loss, those trees that chanced to be sheltered from the winds escaped. It was also observed that the loss was not so great with trees on clayey soil that shed off the water, as on sandy soil that was filled with water.

A wise precaution against winter killing in sections where there is danger, is not to cultivate late in the season. The culture that stimulates a late growth of soft wood that does not ripen before the severity of winter sets in is to be avoided. The immature wood is easily injured, the cells are ruptured by freezing and thawing, and the disorganized cells in spring are no longer able to perform their office. Secure an easy growth of wood that will ripen in time to be ready for all changes of weather, and you will have comparative security.—American Agriculturist.

CARROTS FOR HORSES.

It is not alone nor chiefly the nutrition in carrots that makes them valuable feed for horses and other stock in winter. They have an admirable effect in keeping the bowels open, loosening the bile, and thus promoting healthful circulation of the blood. A stalled horse kept on dry feed through the winter becomes bilious, just as human beings do who lead sedentary lives. We have not got into the habit of dosing horses for biliousness, nor need we. A mess of carrots daily, with half the usual amount of grain, will keep a horse in better working order than oats without the roots. In most places carrots can be bought by the quantity at about half the price of oats, and pay the grower well at that.—American Cultivator.

What the busy Bee Produces.—It is estimated by an expert apiarist that the annual production of honey in this country ranges in value from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, while that of wax is about $1,000,000. Not more than eight or ten per cent of those favorably situated for bee keeping are engaged in the pursuit. If even one-half of those thus situated were so engaged the annual product would now fall below $75,000,000 or $80,000,000 in value. Though this may be an optimistic view, there is no doubt that many farmers and others not now engaged in bee-culture could make the business profitable by giving it careful study and attention.

How to Feed Meal.—Prof. L. B. Arnold, the dairy expert and author, has satisfied himself by experiments that meal if fed alone to neat cattle will at once pass into the fourth stomach; but that if the hay or straw, whether cut or whole, be wet and the meal sprinkled on it the meal will be chewed over with the cud and go through all the digestive processes, and give much better returns. This should be noted by stock feeders.

Green Stable Manure.—This manure seems to be coming to the fore, or at least gaining favor. According to the New England Homestead, late experiments with green, coarse stable manure, in comparison with well decomposed stable manure and several kinds of commercial fertilizers, have resulted for the third year in producing the largest crops where green manure was applied, at the Rhode Island State Farm. And it adds: "Have we under-estimated heretofore the value of green manure? These experiments would lead to this conclusion. It is to be hoped the experiments will be continued and enlarged, for they promise important and practical results."

Active Fowls Lay Best.—The hen that is active, scratches vigorously, and seems anxious to be always searching for food, is usually the one that is a good layer. It is this quality—activity—that makes the Leghorns so prolific, as they rarely become too fat, and are always productive when properly kept. The slow, clumsy fowl fattens very readily, and often breaks down when in the prime of life. Activity is the only good characteristic in the common fowls, and sometimes enables them to thrive under adverse circumstances. So proclaims the poultry essayist of the Mirror and Farmer, a good authority.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you have obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges from head and throat, sometimes profuse, acrid and watery, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid and offensive; dull, heavy headache most of the time, with occasional "splitting headaches;" are your eyes weak, watery, or inflamed; is there ringing in the ears, with more or less deafness; do you have to hack, cough and gag, in your efforts to clear your throat in the morning; do you expectorate offensive matter, scabs from ulcers, perhaps tinged with blood; is your voice changed and is there a "nasal twang" to it; is your breath offensive; are your senses of taste and smell impaired? If you have all or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common and dangerous of maladies—chronic nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, which is sold by druggists at only 50 cents, will cure it. The manufacturers of this wonderful remedy offer, in good faith, $500 for a case of this disease which they cannot cure.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington (to Gov. Trumbull): "Masonry is a benevolent institution, which may be employed for the best or worst purposes."

Edward Everett: "A secret society so widely diffused and connected as this puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public."

Richard Rush: Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, "her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection." Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation.

Wendell Phillips: "History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

John Hancock: "I am opposed to all secret associations."

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

General U. S. Grant:—All secret, oath-bound political parties are dangerous to any nation, no matter how pure or how patriotic the motives and principles which first bring them together.

Myron Holley of New York: —"Such a rebellion Freemasonry has raised. It has violated the dearest rights of nature, and the most sacred enactments of our laws, and this in a spirit manifestly treasonable, for it has done this in pursuance of solemn, deliberate and voluntary obligations to a foreign government,—I mean its own—a government far more alien to that which claims our allegiance than any which has ever afflicted mankind"

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellowmen."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

The Christian Cynosure.

Editors.
J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1888

ALMOST TWO-THIRDS.

Elder Callender's stirring appeal of last week was not lost, as the treasurer's report of donations on page 13 speaks in eloquent figures. One good brother and his wife in the far Northwest have deliberately and prayerfully concluded that the effort against the lodge promises most success in the circulation of the Cynosure in the South, and they send on one-fifteenth part of the amount now asked. May they find their reward, both here and hereafter. Our correspondence from the South shows how in ever-widening circles this question is becoming of greatest interest among the colored churches. Let us not be satisfied with smiting twice or thrice; but strike till the Syrian host of the lodge be overthrown.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

New Iberia, La., March 24, 1888.

We have been here near three weeks, and I have written little except letters. Seven-tenths of the population of this old parish (county) are blacks. It was originally settled by French, when Jefferson bought Louisiana Territory eighty years ago. The language heard in the streets now is almost all French, and until reconstruction French was spoken in the courts. Now English predominates.

I have seen and conversed with the mayor of Iberia, and he has introduced me to the leading members of the bar, to the president of the parish school board, judge of the court, and other leading men. I have also made a pleasant acquaintance with the M. E. pastor (white), and have attended his and the Episcopal churches. I have preached in the colored Congregational church (Rev. Mr. Gunner's), and, of course, have met the leading members. Hon. Joseph A. Breaux, the candidate of both Democratic and Republican parties for State Superintendent of Instruction, to be voted for April 17, introduced me to the white high school here, and Mr. Wm. R. Burke took me to two city schools, one white, the other colored, having 180 pupils each.

These city schools have sprung up since reconstruction, and are greatly quickened and pushed forward by the Howe Institute here, and, generally, by Northern efforts to wipe out colored illiteracy through the South. Mr. Burke, local school superintendent here, is of Irish extraction. His parents went into Texas, while it was a Mexican province; escaped from their cabin when it was burnt by Indians; and he has been here in Iberia from his birth. All the white gentlemen named above are, of course, Democrats; and I am pleased to see them all seeking to beat the Republican party in educating the blacks. Mr. Burke surprised me in his remarks to the 180 colored children in the colored school, by a handsome laudation of Lincoln as their great friend and patron, and Gen. U. S. Grant as the greatest general of his age. This to colored city pupils, and spoken by a gentleman who fought under Lee, and who has been a Democratic office-holder for years! The explanation is this: the black voters are a great majority in these old parishes, and if they vote solid for the Republican party, and their votes are counted, the Democrats are forever in a dead minority. Grover Cleveland will not endorse and protect the shot-gun and false-count policy. The Ku-klux are getting out of fashion. The leading men are holding immigration conventions to draw Northern farmers and capital South. The only argument for "The White Man's Government" was that the whites had the talent and intelligence, and that "the ignorance of a country has no right to rule its intelligence." Now, then, seeing the North bent on educating the blacks; and knowing that wealth will follow intelligence, and give the educated blacks the ascendency in power as well as in numbers, the Democrats are striving to make the Negroes their friends, and here they are succeeding. The deputy clerk of the court here is a colored man. So is the janitor of the court house; and I saw three Negroes on the jury, wedged in among the whites in the jury-box.

The only difficulty here, as in the North, will be that the Bible and its author, God, will be ruled out of the public schools by politicians, where there are Jews and infidels to object, and thus leave these schools without a standard of law or morals. But a few Howe Institutes scattered through the South will salt the rest. A godless school is, at best, an intellectual mob. And when Christ and the Bible are excluded, the lodge-god, who has neither law nor Gospel, will sink the schools to a level with its own paganism.

When I consider the origin of society in these old slave plantations, I am absolutely pleased with the men I find at the head of affairs in this town of New Iberia. The fountains of morals here were two: Paris and slavery. In Paris (France) brothels are licensed, and the wretched women are examined by surgeons to protect men from their diseases. This horrible affront to God and immolation of women was, some years ago, adopted in St. Louis. If St. Louis could adopt a regulation so infamous, French society here, with its laboring class degraded and held as property, could hardly be expected to have just views of the crimes of whoredom and concubinage, or even the revolting crime of incest. Along this Gulf belt, in slavery times, crimes of this damning hue were sanctioned by the slave system. Now, I am indebted for what knowledge I have of these social horrors to prominent white citizens, who abhor them as we do. Then the anarchist class, which curses Chicago, are not wanting here, both black and white. These keep up Sunday horse-races and cock-pits. But the citizens of whom I inquired, thus far, despise them.

THE WHEATON COUNCIL.

As Rev. Dr. Boardman, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, said at Wheaton lately, "We are on historic ground. Another council was held here ten years ago and its record has gone out among the churches." The meeting of Tuesday, March 27, 1888, will also be historical, and will forever be remembered with holy joy by most of the participants, as that of 1878 has been with regret.

The importance of the meeting of the 27th was not underestimated. The result of the council of two weeks previous left no doubt that a review of all the old difficulty would be had in some form, and a final decision made which would supercede every other, since it was of the nature of a mutual council. Though called by the College Church, it, by advice of the meeting of the 13th, called all the churches of Elgin Congregational Association, among the number the Congregational church of Wheaton, to which was extended the unusual courtesy of being invited to judge in a difficulty in which it was one of the parties concerned. Beside the Elgin Association the pastors of the churches of Galva and Granville, Ill., and of the First Church of Chicago were present, with Rev. A. Ethridge, State evangelist. Such a meeting as this the College Church had long desired; and, knowing that the control and particular direction of such a meeting must be with the Lord, in order that the greatest good should result to the churches of Christ near and far, to this end there was earnest and prevailing prayer.

The council assembled with the representatives of twenty churches present, seventeen pastors being in the number. Dr. E. P. Goodwin of Chicago was chosen moderator and Rev. C. S. Leeper of Batavia secretary. Organization being completed the chairman spoke tenderly of finding a little company at prayer as he entered the room, and the first words he heard, that the will of the Lord might be done, ought to be the keynote of the council. At his suggestion some time was spent in prayer, and it was evident that the Holy Spirit, who had been invoked, was present in power.

These exercises being concluded the council took up the business which had occasioned its call. The church was asked to make its statement by its representatives, and Pres. C. A. Blanchard read for the committee the following brief paper, stating that the part of the paper relating to the history of the church he would not read unless asked for by the council:

Dear Brethren:—The College Church of Christ at whose request you are assembled is a company of believers in Jesus Christ who have met in this building since 1860. Our manual, which you have in hand, contains our Covenant, Articles of Faith and Rules of Order together with Questions for Self Examination, etc. These we suppose to resemble similar provisions for church order in other self-governing bodies of believers, and have not been essentially changed since the time when, as members of the First Church of Christ in this place, we were connected with Elgin Association. We have a body of elders whose duties are those of a Prudential Committee. The office in some form is in all our churches; we prefer the New Testament name, which was also used by the early churches of our order. Our testimony against practical evils, especially secret societies, corresponds with the deliverances of Elgin Association, the State Association of Illinois, the Directors of the American Missionary Association, the First Church of Oberlin and many other Congregational churches. We submit to your candid consideration this, our church manual, believing that you will find it, for substance, scriptural and correspondent with the judgment of our most wise and pious leaders.

We were advised some time since to call simply a recognition council which should consider the church in its present condition, and omit all reference to the painful memories of past years. We did so, but as soon as it met we were told that our letter was faulty in that it omitted just what we had been advised to omit. We were advised to widen the scope of our letter and increase the number of churches called. We have done so and in answer to our request you are here. We thank you for your presence, and believe that God's Spirit, holy and wise and true, has come with you. We ask that you take such a course in examination as seems to you judicious, and if you believe it to be true that we are a body of believers, self-governing, orthodox, evangelical and seeking the purity, peace and prosperity of the churches of Jesus Christ, we ask you to so certify to the world.

The manual of the church was then taken up for examination and the different sections approved unanimously. When the testimonies were read two or three brethren objected to their approval because they condemned secret societies. But it was voted without dissent, after a slight discussion, that "we recognize the right of any Congregational church to make such testimonies as it may deem proper."

It was then moved to take up the question of membership, and that subject was referred to a committee consisting of Dr. Goodwin, Rev. C. C. Harrah, Rev. A. Ethridge, Rev. G. R. Milton and Dea. John C. Carr. The only question raised before the committee was as to the relation sustained to the two churches by the senior editor of the Cynosure. The representatives of the College Church held that this brother had been, since the division of the First Church of Christ in January, 1878, one of its members; that if there had been any form of discipline by the minority part of the said church after its division, such an act was attended neither with legal trial, nor was it by advice of the ex-parte council, and was, therefore, null and void; and, further, that if this alleged act of discipline had been ecclesiastically regular or warranted by any ill-doing, the relation of the editor to the First Congregational church, according to its own claim, was terminated more than ten years ago.

The representatives of the First Congregational church contended that though they had withdrawn fellowship and dropped his name ten years since, he was still considered a member of their church under censure.

The committee in view of these conflicting opinions and after consultation with the committees of the two churches, prepared a paper, which, while not in all respects the view of either party, was accepted by both as a possible settlement of a long and painful difference. This paper reads thus:

Whereas, It appears, in considering the facts relating to the First Congregational church of Wheaton and the College Church of Christ, that the College Church supposed the relation of President J. Blanchard to the First Congregational church was severed by said church on March 7, 1878, in its action wherein it said, "This church hereby withdraws its fellowship from the said J. Blanchard, and that its watch and care over him now ceases;" and

Whereas, On the other hand, the First Congregational church has had the opinion that in some sense he was still a member and amenable thereto; and

Whereas, The two churches have, notwithstanding such difference, gone on harmoniously in their work, and have alike enjoyed the blessing of the Master, and demonstrated that there is good reason for the existence of both organizations; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the council recommend, as an adjustment of all difficulties, the following: 1. That President J. Blanchard sign the following statement:

Whereas, During the controversies of the past ten years, more or less, between myself and the late Professor J. C. Webster, and in particular at a certain meeting of the Executive Committee of Wheaton College, in 1877, I made certain statements which have been generally regarded as reflecting upon the moral character of Professor Webster, and now disowning the construction put upon such statements and particularly upon my remark that Professor Webster was mentally and morally incompetent, I retract the statement as interpreted, and affirm that I regarded him as a Christian man.

2. That when this paper is filed with the Clerk of the First Congregational church, that church shall consider matters of difference as settled, and shall enter such a record upon its minutes.

3. That council, having examined the manual of the College Church, expresses its approval thereof; and, upon the basis of agreement heretofore proposed, recommends the admission of the church to the fellowship of the Elgin Association.

This result was submitted to the council after a prolonged sitting of the committee, and it was heard with profound relief. There seemed to be no need for remark; a disagreeable debate was avoided, and the result was unanimously adopted. It was a moment of breathless interest, and nothing could have been more appropriate than the devout prayer offered by the moderator. The council then adjourned.

It is, as we understand, occasion for devout thanksgiving to God that so large and influential a body, in which the First Congregational church of Wheaton was itself present by pastor and delegate, should have been of one mind upon the question submitted, and we trust that the recommendations or the council being carried out in good faith, this division among the Lord's people may be thoroughly healed.

REMARKS.

The Cynosure deems it just that a word should be said for its senior editor, respecting a decision affecting him personally and made in his absence. Of course neither he, nor the College Church are responsible for the following comments:

1. Our readers will properly inquire whether it be true that their editor has for a period of years refused to right a wrong, real or supposed. It is a great satisfaction to present the following facts:

a. In the meeting of the College Board in 1877 President Blanchard put into the hand of Rev. Wm. G. Pierce, a member of the Board opposed to him, a writing which said:

WHEREAS, Jan. 10, 1877, at a meeting of the Executive Committee of Wheaton College, statements were made by Prof. Webster and replied to by President Blanchard, in which each used words which reflected unfavorably on the other; this is to certify that at a subsequent meeting of these gentlemen with each other, to-wit, Feb 8, 1877, each of these gentlemen agreed to recall all utterances whatever against each other on that occasion, and to wish the same unsaid.

This we find in the Chicago Tribune of June 28, 1877.

b. In an address March 24, 1878, in Wheaton he said:

Soon after this meeting Jan 10th, I went to Prof. Webster's by advice, for personal reconciliation. He declined to converse with me unless before witnesses. I suggessed Messrs. Mather and Taylor.

We four met at my house in February, when I wrote a reconciliation paper, setting forth that in calling him "morally incompetent" four years before, I did not mean to call him "immoral;" and that I would sign a mutual paper with him wishing everything unkind between us unsaid.

These statements show the past, and are predictive of the future.

2. The unanimous vote of the council upon the testimonies in the manual of the church bears the encouraging interpretation that this is a declaration that it is consistent with Congregational order that individual churches may testify against the lodge, and enforce their testimony by discipline. The testimonies of the College Church are against intoxicating drinks, secret societies, tobacco and narcotics, and dancing. That on the lodge reads thus:

"Being fully persuaded that secret societies are in their nature hostile to the Gospel of Christ, members of such societies who may desire to unite with this church will be required to abandon them."

When these were read two or three brethren objected. One wished to ignore the second. As a member of secret societies he did not approve the article. There were members of secret orders in all our churches. The invitation to come and pass upon this testimony placed some members of the council in an unpleasant position. He wished to avoid having anything at all to say about it. Another did not see how a church having such a rule could be fellowshiped by Congregational churches, since it would not receive some of their members.

Other brethren, however, gave better advice. It has been the custom for Congregational churches to protest as they saw fit against prevalent and popular evils. The church at Princeton, Illinois, over which Owen Lovejoy was a long time pastor, had such a testimony against slavery, refusing fellowship to slave-holders. That church stood almost alone for a time, but in the providence of God all the others have come up to that standpoint. It seems necessary often that an advanced position be taken by a church on Christian reforms, and as time passes other churches, one by one, come to the same belief.

As the discussion seemed likely to be very damaging to the secret orders, those who objected to the church regulation were glad to drop it, and no adverse vote was noticed by the chairman.

To the significance of this vote we wish to call the attention of our readers. It is not a declaration either for or against the lodge, but it does declare that it is according to Congregational order for local churches to adopt and enforce a testimony against the lodge if they so elect. There have been few decisions of such importance upon this question by representative Congregational bodies.

3. It has been suggested that our note of two weeks ago should be explained in its reference to Masonic attacks on Wheaton College and Church in 1877–8. There were on both sides of that struggle persons sincerely opposed to secret societies; and Professor Webster, who is named above, was of that number, as were others who sympathized with him. The senior editor of the Cynosure was at that time the President of the College; and, so far as known, all of those who stood with him were more or less active opponents of the lodge. Respecting these facts there will probably be no difference of opinion.

It is true, however, that beside these two parties there was a third, and that the third aided the first, as we believe, because of its hope of destroying the College, or at least its power against the lodge. This third party was the Masonic party, which in various effective ways fomented the strife and took part in the difficulty from beginning to end. It was still in the name of secret societies that objection was made to the College Church only last Tuesday.

It may not be directly pertinent to this topic, but is it not a marvel that our colleges, seminaries and churches can see the lodge organization extending downward from the Jesusits, Masons and Oddfellows through every occupation and grade of society until it seeks to control the whole country, and at the same time make no protest? No country was ever yet ruined without the consent of the clergy. We earnestly hope that from all our educational institutions such a flood of light may be thrown upon these conspiracies against society and law, and such an indignant protest rise against these supplanters of the church of Jesus Christ, that the College at Wheaton may be robbed of its honorable pre-eminence in this respect.

—A portrait and sketch of Professor Woodsmall would have appeared in this number, but it was impossible for the engraver to complete his work in time. The work could have been done in cheaper form on time, but the Cynosure readers deserve the best, and so does the memory of so noble a man, so we wait a week.

—We regret exceedingly to see that Elder Browne, our neighbor of the Bible Banner, fears a temporary suspension of that journal to prevent a debt. The Banner has its two-week's annual vacation, and its friends meantime are asked to take hold of the subscription list, so there may be no break in its excellent work. We hope they will outdo themselves.

—Mr. S. W. Packard, the able lawyer of this city whose efforts for Prohibition have become national, asks a correction or two in his article on High License in Chicago in the Cynosure of two weeks ago. The number of saloons in this city May 1, 1887, should have been written 3,687, and Dec. 1, 4,103. At the close of the article Mr. Packard's estimate of the cost of liquor to the drinkers of Chicago is $37,668,000 instead of $37,668. We regret such mistakes should have crept into the copy from which we printed.

—Among our exchanges the Advance of this city and the Midland of Omaha have put on new spring styles in type and head-dress. Their many other attractions are thus enhanced,and every eye that rests upon their fair pages is pleased. We suggest kindly to both that it is time to turn their attention anew to the secret lodges. Especially the Midland, organ of a church that excludes them and edited by men who have written so ably as Bro. Graham in "In the Coils," and lectured so eloquently as Bro. McNary on this question, may justly be expected to give us something fresh and strong on this subject. We speak thus of the Midland without requiring any the less of the Advance, which should be a leader for righteousness.

—At Dundee, Ill., not long since, Seth Hill, a former member of the Masonic lodge, died and was buried. He had not met with the lodge for years, and was generally known as having withdrawn from the order. Indeed, he had stated publicly in a prayer meeting that he was opposed to the lodge. Elder Clifford, a superannuated Methodist minister, preached the funeral sermon, and took great pains to hold forth upon the glorious character of Masonry, and to say that the brother whom they mourned was always, in public and private, ready to be known as a Mason, as if he felt honored by the relation. Such falsehood, aggravated by the surroundings of death, and without danger of denial from lips forever sealed, is shocking; but it occurs too frequently. A member of one of our grand juries in the U. S. court of this city was surprised to find his name printed in the roll of Freemasons of his town, though he had openly denounced the order for years. So Elder Boring of the M. E. church, in preaching at the funeral of Mr. Wheeler in Wheaton, falsified the character of the dead brother, who had left the M. E. church because of his hatred of the lodge and worshiped with the Free Methodist brethren.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, March 30, 1888.

This is "woman's week" in Washington, and a Washington letter of this date with the International Council of women left out would be an anomaly. Still with the space allowed me even the merest epitome of proceedings would be an impossibility. The Council has been in full sail for five days; there have been three sessions each day, with half a dozen speakers on the programme of each session, so that you see I could not even mention the names of the delegates to this convention with the subjects discussed by each without giving a list of such a character as would prove to be very monotonous reading.

But really the women are having a good time and an interesting time in Albaugh's Opera House. The city is full of distinguished women from everywhere, and this is by far the most important gathering of women the world has ever seen. They come from the farthest limits of America, and from across the ocean, from England, France, the Scandinavian Peninsula, and from far away Finland.

The object of the Conference is to improve the condition of woman in the Church, the State and the Home. And the wide scope of the topics under discussion gives unusual interest to the proceedings. The improvement of their political condition is only one of the matters to be considered, and the attention given to their notable advances in other lines of development has drawn to the city certain representative women and has added to the audiences a number of hearers who would not be attracted if the crusade had but a single end in view.

Nothing that pertains to woman is foreign to the business of the Conference, and this comprehensiveness of plan, involving a review of what has been accomplished in all lines of development, gives to the gathering a cheerful and congratulatory tone, which might be wanting if political conditions alone were considered.

It was on Tuesday that Philanthropies were discussed. The subject of temperance, coming under this head, brought upon the stage many women noted for their work in this cause, Miss Frances E. Willard, the president of one of the most wonderful organization that ever sprang into existence,leading with a strain of eloquence which held her audience in chains, broken only by applause. She mentioned that there were now forty district departments and 10,000 unions. Sa'd she: "We have sharpened our weapons in sight of the enemy, and they are about ground to an edge. We want a national prohibition amendment against the liquor traffic, the Esau and Ishmaelite, the social pariah of this land."

Hannah Whithall Smith, another woman known throughout the country for her share in Gospel temperance work, diplomatically inveigled her audience into endorsing en masse a resolution calling the governments of the civilized world to protect the Congo Free State from the flood of poisonous gin which was being poured in upon the unsuspecting and bibulous natives. The resolution was adopted unanimously, for the good lady refrained from calling a negative vote, on the ground that it would be an insult to suppose that any one present would vote no.

The public buildings all over the city are again draped with emblems of mourning, this time for the late Chief Justice of the United States. The Waite obsequies, which were simple, but imposing, took place on Wednesday, at noon, in the hall of the House of Representatives. They were attended by both Houses of Congress and the higher government officials who occupied the floor of the House, while the public galleries were filled with the families of Senators and Representatives, two tickets of admission having been issued to each Senator and member of Congress for distribution. The reserved galleries, such as the President's, the Press and the Diplomatic, were occupied by those for whom they are set aside. The remains were sent to Toledo, accompanied by six of the Associate Justices, a Congressional committee and part of the Ohio delegation in Congress.

It is probable the House will begin debate on the Mills tariff bill to-day and that the discussion will last until the last of May, when the measure will either be defeated or passed by that body. From present indications it would not be safe or wise to venture a more encouraging prediction.

—The Mormons have a bureau of observation and for lobby purposes in Washington. It is now sending out all over the country pamphlets printed in New York, written by "a resident of Utah," presenting very plausible but deceptive reasons for admitting that mass of social filth into the Union as a State.

The Home.

RETROSPECTION.

Life's pilgrim looks from peak to peak,
Across a hazy vale of years,
In whose soft light he loves to seek
Each desert step or fount of tears.

Each obvious cliff or stream or hill,
Which marks the intervening way,
Though distant, seems familiar still,
But fairer in the grand survey.

Thus do the long receding years,
Contracting into months and days,
Throw o'er life's rugged toils and tears
A softening and a golden haze.

'Tis but the large events we see
Which turned our feet, as round a slope,
Down thro' some vale of agony,
Or up some sun-lit cliff of hope.

Thanks for the hazy, golden hue,
Which rounds the angles of the past,
And from the whole presents a view
So mellow and so sweet at last.

Thus may the charity of friends,
Broad as the bending heavens above,
Drop where each pilgrim's journey ends
The softening mantle of its love.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

A TRUE STORY.

"Why are you so grave and silent this evening, Charlotte?" asked Doctor Hammond, laying down the book he had been reading, and looking across the table at his young wife, whose fair head was bent over some sewing on her lay.

"I have been thinking, Herman."

"And is that such an unusual thing, Charlotte?" Mrs. Hammnod smiled.

"No; but perhaps I have never before thought seriously of my duties in life, Herman. I have gone on from day to day, enjoying my pleasant home and its comforts, and rejoicing in my many friends, without thinking that I ought to make some return for all the good gifts heaven has showered upon me."

"You have always done your duty as a wife and mother, Charlotte."

"Yes; but that is not enough. I have been selfish in thinking only of my own, Herman. I did not realize how selfish, or how little I had done for the interests and welfare of those outside the pale of my affections until to-day."

"And to-day you awoke to a realization of your short-comings?"

"Yes, and quite by accident. Mrs. Perley came this morning to ask me to go out with her to do some shopping, and on the way down town she took me in to see Miss Ford, who lives on Olive street, and who had sent for her on business. I hesitated at first about going in; but Mrs. Perley insisted on it, and said Miss Ford was always glad to see any one, having been confined to her bed with spinal trouble for fourteen years. But she is not in the least peevish or ill-natured. I thought her lovely; so gentle, so sweet and kind, so thoughtful of others. And she accomplishes the most wonderful amount of work. It seems almost incredible that, afflicted as she is, she can do so much. She has a class of women three times a week whom she teaches to sew and embroider, and twice a week she gives lessons in painting to half a dozen young girls who are anxious to become teachers, and are too poor to pay for instruction. She has, too, a Bible class of young girls, who come to her every Sunday afternoon; and she is interested greatly in the Home Mission Society. Mrs. Perley says her fingers are never idle a moment. Think what an amount of good she must accomplish, Herman, and how useless is my life compared to hers! I felt humiliated and ashamed as I reflected on it, and realized how much valuable time I had spent in making fashionable calls and reading novels. I want to do better. I can't be satisfied after this unless I lead a less selfish life; but I don't know where or how to begin."

"In my opinion you have enough to do in caring for your house and children, Charlotte. I fear you would soon weary of teaching poor people how to sew and read."

"Perhaps so, Herman; but that is no reason why I should not make a trial. I am not particular about the kind of work. I only want to feel that in doing it I am working for the good of others, and not suiting my own desires and tastes."

"Look for the work and you will find it, Charlotte. There will be no difficulty on that score."

"And you are willing to have me go outside my home to find it?"

"Yes; for I am sure you will never neglect your home or children, however zealous you may become in working for others. I have entire confidence in your discretion and prudence."

At this moment there was a ring at the door-bell, and the doctor was called into his office to see a patient; so the conversation terminated, greatly to little Mrs. Hammond's regret, for she seldom had an opportunity for a quiet talk with her husband. He had a large practice, and was devoted to his profession, allowing it to absorb him more than his wife thought prudent.

Mrs. Hammond continued to follow the train of thought which her visit to Miss Ford had suggested, and tried to determine in what way she could carry out her desire to be useful. But, earnestly as her mind dwelt upon the subject, she was unable to arrive at any conclusion.

The next morning as she was returning from market, she chanced to pass through the street on which the Emergency Hospital was situated, and as she reached a point opposite the door, she stopped suddenly, struck by an idea.

"Harriet," she said to her servant who was following behind her with the marketing, "You can go the rest of the way alone; I want to go in here for a little while."

She felt very shy as she demanded admittance to the hospital, and her confusion increased when she was asked what patient she desired to see.

"I am simply a visitor," she explained, "I have never before been in a hospital, and I know no one here."

She was allowed to enter all the wards, and as she passed through them, deeply moved by the signs of suffering on every hand, she thought how terrible it must be for anyone once accustomed to the refinements and comforts of a home, to be obliged to pass weeks, and perhaps months, in such a place; for this was years ago, before hospitals were the comfortable, cleanly, even luxurious asylums we have now. As this reflection passed through her mind she noticed on a bed not far from her, a young man of perhaps twenty-five years of age. He was pale, wan and much emaciated; but there was something very attractive about his face, and an appealing look in his large brown eyes that touched Mrs. Hammond's sympathies at once. She recognized the fact that he was a gentleman, and some impulse moved her to ask him how it happened that he was in the hospital.

He seemed touched by her kindly interest, and told her that he was a young clergyman, without money or friends, and had come to St. Louis to obtain employment. Failing in this, and being much reduced in health by lack of means to procure proper food, he had fallen an easy prey to disease, and had been seized with a low fever, from which he had only just begun to recover.

"If I were only at home—in the home I used to have before my mother died," he said in concluding his story, "I would soon grow strong again. But as things are now I have no desire to live, and find it almost impossible to eat or sleep in this place."

Mrs. Hammond talked to him a little while longer, and then hurried home. Her husband was in his office, and she was fortunate in finding him alone. She told him about the young minister, and then proffered her request—she wanted to bring him to her own home and nurse him back to health. The doctor demurred at first, seeing many objections to the plan; but when he found how earnestly his wife desired it, and how eager she was to embrace this opportunity to do good, he gave his consent; and an hour later young Mr. Lester was brought away from the hospital and established in the best bed-room in Dr. Hammond's house.

Though she had had no experience in nursing, Mrs. Hammond carried out her project bravely and well. She had a kind, warm, generous heart, and she found ample scope for her energies in waiting on Mr. Lester, planning for his comfort, and preparing with her own hands delicacies calculated to tempt his capricious appetite. She did not weary of her charge, and felt fully repaid for the care and trouble she had undergone when Mr. Lester was able to go out once more, and declared that he owed his recovery entirely to her.

Doctor Hammond, who had large influence, interested himself in the young man, and at length secured for him the charge of a small church in a village in northern Missouri, to which he went as soon as his strength was fully restored.

"Never, as long as I live, can I forget you or your great kindness, Mrs. Hammond," he said when he parted with the doctor and his wife. "I feel that but for you I would have died in that hospital, so utterly had I lost all desire to live, and so terrible was my sense of weakness and loneliness. But you came to me like an angel from heaven, and though I am not able to make you any return, save in words, for what you have done for me, the bread you have cast upon the waters may return to you after many days. Heaven never fails to reward such nobility as you have shown."

He little imagined how singularly his prediction would be fulfilled. For several years Mrs. Hammond corresponded at intervals with Mr. Lester, but at length lost sight of him, for an increasing family and the charitable duties in which she had extensively engaged, occupied her attention to the exclusion of her correspondence. Ten years passed, and she did not know whether Mr. Lester were living or dead, and her memory rarely reverted to him. Then her husband started out on a business trip to Michigan, where he owned heavy interests in lumber. Much of the journey had to be taken in a stage-coach; and one evening, on a desolate, rough road, the coach was overturned, and Dr. Hammond's right arm was broken just above the wrist. Had he been at home the hand could have been saved; but he knew that under the circumstances now surrounding him, he must lose it. He was conveyed to the nearest settlement, and found a room at a wretched log tavern, destitute of every comfort and convenience.

Here was performed the most trying operation of his surgical experience, for, with the most ordinary tools, rusted from long disuse, he was forced to direct the amputation of his hand. As may well be imagined, the operation was one of terrible agony, requiring the most wonderful courage, and when it was over the doctor was completely prostrated.

He was lying in his miserable room the next morning, feeling ill and wretched, when the door opened and a gentleman entered, with outstretched hand, and the cry, "Dr. Hammond, don't you know me?"

It was Mr. Lester, who had heard of the accident, and feeling sure it was his old friend who had met with the injury, had hastened to offer his help and sympathy. The time had come when he could make some return for the kindness he had received ten years before. He was comfortably situated in a flourishing village four miles away, and to his pleasant home Doctor Hammond was removed at once, and tenderly nursed and cared for until he was well enough to proceed on his journey.

"So you see, my dear," the doctor said when giving his wife the history of his accident, "the bread you cast upon the waters ten years ago, returned to you after many days. What I would have suffered had I been forced to remain in that desolate tavern, I dare not think. As an angel of mercy you appeared to Mr. Lester in the hospital ten years ago, and as an angel of mercy he appeared to me when he entered the door of my miserable, dark, uncomfortable room, and took me to his delightful home. I felt then how deeply grateful I ought to be that you had cast that bread upon the waters so many years before."—Florence B. Hallowell, in the Standard.

MAKE THE BEST OF YOURSELF.

The preacher's voice was clear and intense. A young woman sat listening, to whom life seemed a burden. As those words, "Make the best of yourself," flashed forth, she felt as though they were hurled at her. She make the best of herself! How could she? The rest of the sermon was unheard. It was as if a diamond had been thrown into her lap. This was all she needed. I said the sermon was unheard, yet there did enter into her consciousness another flashing sentence: "Every man has the right to make the best of himself."

Had you been looking at the young woman you would have seen a new and strange expression come into her face, just such a change as might come in to the face of a dying man if he should suddenly find the fabulous elixir of life. She leaned her head forward on the back of the pew before her and sat very still, but from her heart went up a cry, "Lord, help me to make the best of myself. Lord, I will make the best of myself, with thy help."

At last came the benediction, and she rose up Then as the congregation poured out, she followed with the crowd. Near the door stood an old, decrepit woman, in worn and shabby garments. Her hands were wrinkled and large-jointed. She was a shy, half-frightened woman, who had strayed into this large church and now stood back, half awed by its grandeur and the immense mass of people.

Gail Bruce liked dainty people and dainty things of all kinds, and she shrunk with a horror from anything that was uncomely. But as her eye fell upon the old woman, she suddenly sent up a prayer, "Lord, help me to make the most of myself in all the humanities, in love, and in tenderness. And, Lord, bless that old woman."

When Gail reached her, she stretched out her own well-gloved hand and touched the old woman's arm with a tenderness that thrilled her frame; then slipping her hand in hers, she said,—

"We are glad to see you here, and hope you will come again."

The old lady looked up with a pleased smile, and said it was a "fine church and she liked the minister."

When Gail passed out there was on her face a reflex gladness. Seeing it, several people unconsciously held out their hands to her, who, as a rule, only bowed.

She went home, and, kneeling, said, "Help me to help others. Help me to do some kind deed every day. Help me to grow like Christ,so that I may be my best. Amen."

That was the beginning of a great change in Gail Bruce. Every morning she took up the day with the prayer,"Lord, help me this day to do something for others! Help me this day to make some one happier! Help me this day to make the best of myself." Many a gentle answer she returned when her nervous temperament would have prompted a quick word.

One little thing she tried to do especially—that was to carry a bright and cheery face; to give a pleasant word whenever she could. This was hard for her to do at first, for she possessed by inheritance an inclination to morbidness and melancholy. But she shook it off as best she could, and gave her "Good morning" or "Good evening" with a hearty grace and a pleasant countenance, even though the necessary effort cost her no little self-denial. But continued perseverance in little kindnesses wrought effectually upon her nature; and the change at every degree contributed to the answer of her prayer.

And the effects of this change were not only visible in her own increased happiness, which was very great, so that life itself seemed a new thing,but they were also seen and felt in all around her. Harry, her twelve-year-old brother, suddenly ceased to "tease her life out of her" as he felt the warmth of her loving interest for him, and said to her after a long struggle with himself:

"Gail, I'm sorry I opened your letters and tied knots in your thread, and have done so many bad things; I begin to feel like trying to make a man of myself." And right there were all the old scores settled, and vows of eternal friendship mentally made.

"Ask God to help you to make the best of yourself," were her parting words. And the heart which all these years had found so much time to fret over disappointments and personal grievances was now filled with impulses of kindness, and led willing feet and hands to the lowly homes where shadows were lying, bringing sunbeams of mercy and hopefulness. She filled her place in the church,and,having taken up her neglected music she soon relieved the Sabbath-school organist, who was sickly and over-burdened, and the sweet tones of music as they swelled up from a heart full of love and gratitude went forth to cheer and gladden whoever they reached. Thus led and assisted by the grace and Spirit of the Master almost imperceptibly her prayer was answered, and she learned to make the best of herself in the quiet way of common and every-day life.—Sel.

WINE OR WAR.

Mr. John Bright, in a recent speech of great force, said that Great Britain, during the last two hundred years, had not been engaged in one war that could not have been honorably avoided. Close investigation of the present causes of each conflict would probably show that the illustrious Quaker spoke the truth.

On the back of this the Paris correspondent of the Times wrote to the journal he represents that he would stake his place—worth £6,000 a year—and reputation on the fact that the present Czar is a confirmed drunkard. He quotes the following words, uttered in his hearing "by a very eminent Austrian statesman": "Everything now depends upon the Czar, who drinks, and who is very near to delirium tremens. As he may at any moment commit some act of folly, Austria must make ready for war." He further declared it to be "certain" that the Czar lately slapped the face of a gentleman who approached him at the head of a deputation from Lithuania. Moreover, that the eccentricities of the Czar are such as to make the settlement of any question by the way of diplomacy impossible.

Bismarck is also known to imbibe freely. It is asserted that during the delivery of his recent speech, demanding a large increase in the German army, he consumed nine glasses of brandy-and-water. From his youth up Bismarck has been a deep drinker. He has been known to boast of drinking a quart of wine without removing the cup from his lips, and he drinks freely every day. Such a brain as he inherited would have been capable of better thoughts and wiser schemes if, perhaps, it had not been kept half paralyzed for fifty years by alcoholic poison.

Mr. Kinglake, the historian of the Crimean War, attributes to wine the invasion of the Crimea by the British army. He asserts, on the authority of eye witnesses (and the statement has never been denied), that the dispatch which caused Lord Raglan to invade the Crimea was read over and disposed of by the British Cabinet when the members were in a drunken sleep after dinner. These are his words: "Before the reading of the paper had long continued, all the members of the Cabinet, except a small minority, were overcome with sleep. For a moment the noise of a tumbling chair disturbed the repose of the Government, but presently the Duke of Newcastle resumed the reading of his drafts, and then again the fatal sleep descended upon the eyelids of the Ministers."

The historian relates that later in the evening the Duke of Newcastle made another attempt to get Ministers to listen to his dispatch, but again drowsiness prevented. Not a letter of the draft was altered. It was afterwards ascertained that it was the uncompromising phrases of the dispatch which caused Lord Raglan to believe that the Cabinet meant him to invade the Crimea, which was, for every reason of war and policy, a bad movement. Mr. Kinglake, in speaking of this hideous crime, involving the loss of seven hundred thousand lives, and money enough to have made them all happy and contented citizens, calls the wine which they had been drinking at dinner "a narcotic substance," which had brought upon the brains of the Government an irresistible torpor.

A Paris paper recently published a jocular article upon a certain Celestin Nicole, whom it calls "the Providence of the orators of the Chamber of Deputies," since it is Celestin Nicole who supplies these orators with drink while they are speaking.

"Without his assistance," says the author, "how many speakers would be powerless to bring their discourses to a conclusion."

To some members he brings only a glass of sugar and water; to others, hot coffee; to others, beer. To some he conveys a glass of sugared water, with a little cordial in it. Others drink claret during their speeches; some "absorb with delight that horrible liquid which the English call porter and the Americans black beer." Some take seltzer water; others seltzer and Marsala; others a cup of tea with rum in it. A few prefer lemonade, with or without a "stick;" while some orators boldly follow the example of Bismarck, and take brandy.

When we consider that the most important effect of alcohol upon the brain is to weaken its highest faculty, which is judgment, and that this faculty of judgment is the one supremely precious in a statesman, we can form some conception of its fatal influence upon the politics of recent centuries, during which alcoholic drinks have been brought within the reach of the leanest purse, and made so seductive as to lure all but the most refined appetites.—Sel.

SUMPTUARY LAWS.

Rev. Sam Small answers in a most masterly and ludicrous manner the popular objections raised against prohibition.

When he came to speak of those who oppose it because, as they said, it was a sumptuary law, he was exceedingly facetious and witheringly sarcastic. He told the audience that the country now had one sumptuary law—a law passed by a Democratic House and a Republican Senate and signed by the man from Buffalo, Grover Cleveland, therefore both political parties were committed to it. He referred to the law passed by Congress against oleomargarine or bogus butter.

Oleomargarine had not poisoned anybody, had not made anybody drunk, had not caused any husband to whip his wife and children, had not impoverished any families,had not created any riots or instigated any murders—in fact, oleomargarine had not done anything except greased the poor man's bread so that he could swallow it better, and the Congress of this great nation had gone to work and solemnly enacted a law forbidding the manufacture of oleomargarine, and the President signed the law. "There's a sumptuary law for you," said he.

Whisky poisons, whisky kills, whisky fills criminal dockets and the penitentiary, whisky debauches the intellect and ruins the health of the American people, and every foreigner who wants to make it his home must abide by the laws of the land and the voice of its loyal citizens or be knocked into fits by the club of justice and advancement.

When we have the prohibition question settled the next thing in order should be to constitute a committee of the whole of the nation to seriously consider the propriety of admitting on our shores any more foreigners, who are the cause of all the trouble now in the country.

ONE GLASS OF WINE TOO MUCH.

A glass of wine changed the history of France for nearly twenty years. Louis Phillippe, King of the French, had a son, the Duke of Orleans, and heir to the throne, who always drank only a certain number of glasses of wine, because even one more made him tipsy. On a memorable morning he forgot to count the number of his glasses and took one more than usual. When entering his carriage he stumbled, frightening the horses and causing them to run. In attempting to leap from the carriage his head struck the pavement and he soon died. That glass of wine overthrew the Orleans rule, confiscated their property of £20,000,000, and sent the whole family into exile.—Chamber's Journal.

THE TREMENDOUS PERIL IN HIGH LICENSE.

High license pretends to decrease the profits, but in reality it vastly augments them, by contracting the business into the hands of a comparative few, who reap tremendous gains, and who, by the facility with which they can combine and concentrate their forces, wield immense political power. And this may be done, too, without decreasing to any appreciable extent the number of saloons. How it is accomplished is shown by a letter written by City Collector Onahan, of high license Chicago, to the Mayor of that city, Jan. 3. After admitting that high license "has not greatly reduced the number of saloons;" but claiming that it has "arrested and prevented an overwhelming increase," he adds the following startling statements:

"At present the bonds for 3,000 saloons are signed by the different brewers, who likewise pay for more than one half the whole number of licenses issued, or over 2,000 licenses. These bonds cannot be challenged, as the brewers are generally wealthy and responsible, but it may be questioned whether it is in accord with sound public policy to allow the security for the saloons to be in the control of a limited though powerful class, whose efforts and intentions are steadily and unceasingly directed to the extension of the saloon traffic."

The result of throwing three-fourths of the traffic into the hands of these few wealthy brewers has been disastrous in the extreme. Nowhere in America has the saloon so dominated in politics as in Chicago, and the court records show a steady and appalling increase of crime ever since the high license law went into effect.—Voice.

In a letter to A. S. Barnes & Co., a native Hindu writes: "The Hindus of India are a proverbially sober race. Alcohol is not even known among their higher classes. For instance, I am a grown-up person of forty-one, and up to this time I have not seen other kinds of liquor excepting beer, port wine, and brandy, and these, also, I have seen either at Englishmen's tables or as prescribed by doctors trained under the English system. My parents,who are the other side of sixty, have perhaps seen none of them. This sober race, the Englishmen, are fast demoralizing by spreading the drink curse far and wide. My feelings amount almost to agony when I contemplate this. But we are helpless. We have no hand over our laws, consequently we cannot control the evil. Native public opinion has pronounced itself with unmistakable unanimity against the Government policy, but no heed is paid to it. The consideration that seems to be paramount with the Government is, 'Revenue.'" Is not this pathetic?—Union Signal.

A well-known banker, three-score and ten, was attacked by pneumonia last May. It was a severe case; but in ten days he was convalescent; in five weeks he was out, looking and feeling almost as well as ever. His physician said he saved him because he had no tobacco or liquor to fight. The stimulants he needed acted like a charm. As soon as possible he ceased their use, saying, "I may be sick again; then I want to be free from them that they may do their work." Young men, make a note of this.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Private letters from Pres. J. Blanchard lead us to expect his return with Mrs. Blanchard from New Orleans during the present week.

—Bro. A. W. Parry, who was secretary of the late New Orleans Convention, has just returned from a visit to Henry and Bureau counties in this State. He is laboring to endow the seminary at Evansville, Wisconsin.

—Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes, the Greek missionary, who has been spending the winter in New York, expects to visit the West, and will reach this city during this week to spend a few days here and among friends at Wheaton.

—Rev. H. J. Becker of Akron, Ohio, whose letters from foreign parts began in the Dayton Conservator of March 23, has five other gentlemen in his company, most of them clergyman. Together they travel through Europe and the East.

—The Inter Ocean of Friday publishes a portrait of Lewis G. Clark, our old friend of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" fame, who visited Chicago some four years ago and addressed several audiences in this city and vicinity. A little sketch of his eventful life is also given.

—Elder J. L. Barlow was visiting friends at Wheaton last week. He was suffering from a severe cold which nearly prostrated him and forced a suspension of pastoral labor. He expects to remain at Grundy Center, Iowa, not longer than June 1st. The lodge is strong in that place and has been able to secure an adverse vote against Bro. Barlow at a small meeting. He would be glad to begin correspondence with some Baptist church where his convictions respecting the lodge will have the sympathy of the people. Write him at Grundy Center, Iowa.

—In the February Home Missionary Rev. Jeremiah Porter, the first minister who preached regularly in Chicago, writes of his assisting lately at a communion service here, and making the following remark: "Fifty-four years ago it was my privilege to administer the Lord's Supper in Chicago, when there were only four hundred people in the town; and the last male member of that primitive church of this city, except myself (then, and to the end of life, 'Good Deacon Philo Carpenter'), died last year. My wife is one of the three women still living who were at that communion." Since Mr. Porter wrote the above, his wife, who had so long walked by his side in life, has been called to her rest.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The United Presbyterian church began its work in India in 1885 with one missionary—and to-day it has 68 stations, 35 missionaries, 136 native helpers, and over 4,000 communicants.

—Nearly every evening in a Bombay bazaar may be seen two blind Christians reading from a Hindustan New Testament, printed in raised letters, to large audiences of Hindus and Mohammedans, who marvel at the strange sight.

—A remarkable spiritual awakening is reported in the Syrian Presbyterian missions. In some towns there are from forty to sixty inquirers. Among the converts are several Mohammadans.

—A revival of great power has been prevailing in the Wilberforce University, Xenia, O. Every lady student converted, and every young man except three. Such was the interest for two days that studies were suspended.

—Two years ago Mr. C. W. Pritchard, editor of the Christian Worker and member of the N. C. A. Board, made a carefully prepared statement of the number of Friends in America, taking his figures from the published minutes of the ten yearly meetings. The number was 69,475. Of these, 53,310 were west of the Allegheny Mountains, and 16,165 east of this line. He has just made another computation, and finds from the minutes of 1887 that the number is 72,968, an increase in the two years of 3,493. The increase in the Western yearly meetings has been 3,271; in the Eastern, 222.

—A Union Conference of delegates from all the Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies of the Friends in America is to be held at Indianapolis, beginning March 31st, to continue five days. Next to the General Conference held at Richmond, Ind., last fall this will be the most important church meeting of the Friends for many years. Friends' Women's Societies for missionary work are of recent origin, the first being that of the Western Yearly Meeting, Indiana, organized in 1881. Since that similar associations have been formed. College Societies are also formed at Earlham College, Indiana, and Wilmington College, Ohio. The membership of these societies, as reported in 1886, was 3,892, and they had at that time raised $27,840. They are supporting, or aiding in the support of missionaries in Syria, China, Japan, Mexico, Jamaica, and among the American Indians. The organization has led to the establishment of a missionary paper, the Friend's Missionary Advocate, of Chicago, edited by Esther Tuttle Pritchard. All the societies above named are to be represented in the conference, and the well-arranged program of practical topics, together with the names of eminent speakers, promises an occasion of unusual profit and interest.

—Revival services in the Methodist churches at St. John, N. B., have resulted in nearly 400 conversions. At the early morning class in the Centenary church on Sunday before last, there were nearly 100 men present, and the attendance at the Sunday-school in the afternoon was the largest at any session since the great fire of 1877. The services still continue and with increasing attendance.

—Kansas has been greatly blessed with the revival spirit. It is reported that the probationary list in the Methodist churches will receive additions before the first of March of at least 10,000 to 12,000.

—The Presbyterian church at Hempstead, Long Island, claims to be the first Presbyterian church organized in America, and the date of this organization is said to be 1644. It is not to be supposed that the church building, erected over two centuries ago, is standing to-day. That building was seized during the Revolutionary war by British soldiers, who converted it into a stable for a time, and it was afterward destroyed by fire. But the church organization, it is claimed, never died, and has existed since 1644.

—The city of Winnipeg, Manitoba, vies with Toronto for the honor of having the most quiet, orderly Sabbath. It has a population of 23,000, with church accommodations for 15,000. On the Lord's day the churches are full, all houses of business are closed, and no street railway is operated.

—A Presbyterian missionary in China is authority for the statement that more money is spent in one year in a single province of that empire, in building and repairing temples in the worship of idols and in the propagation of unbelief, than the Presbyterian church gives annually for carrying the Gospel to the ends of the earth. This comparison may have a touch of exaggeration about it; but well-authenticated cases of the lavish expenditures by the heathen in their worship of strange gods, as well as the frequently reported instances of the liberality of native Christians, are enough to make many of us at home blush when we contrast them with our own scanty contributions.—Congregationalist.

—Congregationalism seems to flourish upon Southern soil, says the Associate Reformed Presbyterian. Finding New England too narrow for its aggresive spirit, it is moving westward and southward. Four years ago there were four churches in Florida. To-day there are thirty-five. It is likely to receive a considerable reinforcement from a number of "Congregational Methodist" churches in Georgia, Alabama, and other Southern States. These churches number about 350, and over fifty have already voted to become Congregational.

—The Jesuits are building a large college at a cost of $100,000 in the northern suburbs of Denver. The location is one of the finest in the vicinity of the city.

LITERATURE.

The Lomb Prize Essays.—No. 1. Healthy Homes and Foods for the Working Classes. By Victor C. Vaughn, M.D., Ph.D.
No. 2. The Sanitary Condition and Necessities of School-Houses and School Life. By D. F. Lincoln, M. D.
No. 3. Disinfection and Individual Prophylaxis against Infectious Diseases. By Geo. M. Sternberg, M. D., U. S. Army.
No. 4. The Preventable Causes of Disease, Injury and Death in American Manufactories and Workshops, and the best means and Appliances for Preventing and Avoiding Them. By Geo. H. Ireland.

The American Public Health Association, a voluntary organization, comprising in its ranks physicians, clergymen, teachers, engineers, manufacturers,—in fact, intelligent men and women of all classes,—has labored for years to correct the evils growing out of the old order of things, and to bring home to the people the sort of knowledge that is needed to save life and avert disease. Heartily aided by the press, the Association has done much good work at its annual meetings held in different parts of the country. Still, only a small proportion of the country could be reached in this way. Three years ago, however, a philanthropic member of the Association, Mr. Henry Lomb of Rochester, offered prizes for essays upon topics of vital interest to every intelligent person having any regard to the preservation or life and health. The subjects selected and the successful competitors for the prizes are as noted above. Although the treatment of the subjects in these essays is popular in tone, and easily understood by any one, the teaching is sound and thorough; and while the most rigid scientific demands for accuracy are complied with, the whole matter is made clear and comprehensible to the most ordinary understanding. Through the means furnished the Public Health Association, it is enabled to offer these valuable works at a price almost ridiculously low. They may be obtained at the book-stores, or of Dr. Irving A. Watson, Secretary, Concord, N. H., at the following rates: Single copies, No. 1, ten cents; Nos. 2, 3, and 4, five cents each. The entire four essays in pamphlet form twenty-five cents, or in cloth binding at fifty cents or seventy-five cents, according to style of binding and paper. Dr. Sternberg's Essay has been published in German, French and Flemish, and Dr. Vaughn's in German. Mr. Lomb could not do a more benevolent act than to provide that such books be written and published. What working people need now is a good store of practical instructions as to the care of their homes, bodies and surroundings. No one can read these essays without feeling that he can do more to help work off disease and maintain his health.

The current number of Our Day will open of itself to Joseph Cook's Monday lecture on Inspiration, and the Prelude on Utah and Mormonism demanding Statehood. These topics are discussed with a breadth and force and eloquence of diction which hold the attention, and quicken the pulse of the reader. Miss Willard discusses the prospective platform of the Prohibition party, holding that it must begin with God as the Bible does. The out-lawing of the drink traffic, woman's ballot, disfranchisement of the drunkard, reform in the method of voting, the civil service, Indians, polygamy, tariff, international arbitration and wise measures against monopolies and to secure justice to labor, are the different planks. Anthony Comstock, who has just gained a case against a prominent New York picture dealer, writes on the "Helps and Hindrances in the Suppression of Vice."

Scribner's Magazine has made preparations for interesting the entire railway fraternity of America. It will shortly begin the publication of a series of articles on railways, based on the great importance and wide interest of the subject, shown by the fact that in the United States there are about 150,000 miles of railway, nearly one half the total in the world, although the population of this country is only about one-thirtieth of that on the globe. These roads have cost more than $8,500,000,000, and their earnings for the year 1887 were about $900,000,000, of which two-thirds was expended in maintenance. In the State of Illinois alone there are more than 50,000 people who are dependent upon railways for their occupation. The articles prepared for Scribner's will treat the whole subject from a point of view of popular interest.

The March Library Magazine is an unusually handsome number, and its contents will be attractive to a large class of readers. In ethics and philosophy these are some of the titles: "The Higher Life: How is it to be Sustained," "The Catholic Scientific Congress," "Rright and Wrong," "Parseeism and Buddhism." In social topics: "Charity Bazaars," "The London Unemployed and the Donna," "Agricultural Distress in England." In biography, history and literature: "Shakesperian Curiosities," "Literary Voluptuaries," "Percy B. Shelley," "Canadian 'Habitans' in New England." Current events: "Moves on the European Chessboard," "Railroads in China," "Mountain Floods," "The Inundation in China."

The long looked for days have come, when the gardening plans of winter are to be put in practical operation. The pleasure and healthfulness of gardening we all need, and the love of it is inherent in every man and woman. As a practical helper we rejoice in that beautiful, reliable and eminently practical journal of gardening. The American Garden, which comes to us each month, laden with the good things of the flower border, the shrubbery, the vegetable garden, the orchard, the vineyard and plantation, as well as the beautiful lawn, conservatory and window garden. In the April issue is "An Open Letter on the Planting of a Small Place in the Suburbs," which is just what is wanted by thousands of country dwellers.

The American edition of the London Illustrated News for March 31, is a commemorative number. A splendid portrait of the late German Emperor is accompanied by page after page of fine portraits and illustrations of the scenes connected with so important an event to the German nation as the death of the aged William.

Vick's April Magazine begins with the garden, and what is necessary for a good garden the reader of this monthly will not fail to find. Among the articles and notes on flowers we notice something on Larkspurs, Begonias, Primroses, Lillies, Roses, Geraniums, etc.

The April number of Babyhood contains several medical articles of interest to mothers. An elastic gate for the nursery door, a hanging medicine-chest, a crib guard, and other nursery helps and novelties are described and illustrated; and much useful advice is given regarding "Gritting the Teeth," "A Railway Journey Before or After Delivery," "Worms," "Dark Rings about the Eyes,"

"Yellow Spots on the Teeth," and many other nursery problems. In "The Mothers' Parliament" will be found a rather striking, and we believe very much mistaken, protest against religious precocity on the part of children.

The opening article in the April Century is to be a description of the Palestine of to-day, by Edward L. Wilson, illustrated with a great number of engravings made from Mr. Wilson's photographs. The article will appear at a time when students of the International Sunday-school lessons are especially interested in these scenes.

Rev. G. T. Cooperrider has written a tract defending the position of the Lutheran church in maintaining close communion. Those who are interested in the discussion of this question can obtain the pamphlet at the Lutheran Book Concern, Columbus, O.

From the edition of Geo. P. Rowell & Co.'s "American Newspaper Directory," published April 2d (its twentieth year), it appears that the Newspapers and Periodicals of all kinds issued in the United States and Canada, now number 16,310 showing a gain of 890 during the last 12 months and of 7,136 in 10 years.

The publishers of the Directory assert that the impression that when the proprietor of a newspaper undertakes to state what has been his exact circulation, he does not generally tell the truth is an erroneous one: and they conspicuously offer a reward of $100 for every instance in their book for this year, where it can be shown that the detailed report received from a publisher was untrue.

Lodge Notes.

Rumors prevail at Pittsburg that the puddlers propose to withdraw from the Amalgamated Association, and reorganize the order of the "Sons of Vulcan."

At his reception by Kit Carson Post, G. A. R., at Washington Wednesday night, Senator Ingalls said that if the G. A. R. men were in any place maligned he should defend them, and that nothing should deter him from denying that the organization is the debtor of the nation.

At a secret meeting in Boston of large manufacturers of doors, sash, and blinds in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, a combination was formed, with the object of advancing prices and regulating production. Each manufacturer will pay into the pool a certain sum of money, which will be forfeited if the rules of the "combine" are broken.

Judge Bailey of Chicago has filed a decision of interest to secret societies in the case of the administratrix of Charles A. Avery against the Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum. Avery was insured in Allen Council, No. 49, of Milwaukee, and deceived the medical examiner. It transpired after his death that he had cerebro spinal meningetis and nearly died of convulsions two months before his application and examination. The court decided from this evidence that Avery's administratrix had no right to recover on his policy.

The State executive board of the Massachusetts Knights of Labor has issued a call to all district and local assemblies not attached to a district to elect delegates to the State convention of the organization, to be held in Boston, April 15. The attitude of Master Workman Powderly toward strikes and his proposition to place lecturers in the field, that the working people may receive a more thorough education on labor questions, will be discussed. The probability is that Powderly will receive a most hearty indorsement by Massachusetts Knights of Labor.

John Matthews, the Bald Knobber indicted for complicity in the murder of Charles Green and William Edens, closed in the Circuit Court, at Ozark, Mo., on March 24th, and the jury were out only a few minutes before returning a verdict of murder in the first degree. Matthews is the third Bald Knobber convicted of the same atrocious crime and there are six others in jail at Ozark awaiting trial on the same indictment. Swift judgment like this would soon sweep away the disgrace of midnight lodge marauders, who scourge, torture and kill innocent persons for some mere personal grudge.

Mr. W. O. Huckett, who is secretary of more organizations and societies than any other man in Kansas City, says the Star of that city, not excepting John Sullivan, is the scribe of the Masonic Board of Relief here. In every large city in the United States and Canada, with the exception of Kansas City, there it what is known as a Nest of Owls, composed of the members and ex members of the Masonic board of relief. It is now proposed to organize such a nest here, and Mr. Huckett has been selected as the one to take the first step toward forming it. The Supreme International Nest of Owls of the United States and Canada will meet in St Louis on Saturday. During its session Mr. Huckett will receive a degree. His invitation to the session and subsequent banquet bears the inscription: "Come and roost in Nest No. 1. Saturday, March 31, 1888."

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known, as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint." — Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults." — Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life." — Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever." — Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE STOMACH—ADVICE IN REGARD TO ITS TREATMENT.

An old New Yorker, who was brought up in hotels and restaurants, and knows all about eating, gave some points to a reporter of the Sun the other day about the way for a man to make friends with his stomach.

"There are two big mistakes tha almost all persons make," said he. "One is that they don't eat the right things, and the other is that what they do eat they don't eat right.

When a man has dyspepsia, his stomach is always with him, and he's always conscious of it. He can't sleep. His food doesn't taste right. Boils break out over him. He is morbid. All his friends seem to have deserted him, and some day he goes out and blows his brains out, and the public and the newspapers say he had business troubles. Business troubles! Why, what does a man care for business troubles when his stomach's all right? If his stomach is right his head will be clear, and he'll prosper. No glutton or dyspeptic can stand up alongside of a man with a sound stomach and a clear head.

"When you got up this morning what did you do? Went right off to breakfast and filled yourself with your nose in the papers, and your mind wandering over the earth. You don't know what you ate or how much, or how long it took For all the good it did you, you might as well have swallowed bacon and cornbread, or turkey and buckwheat cakes, or any other mixture that would take up space in your stomach. Then, while you ate, you gulped down ice water and coffee alternately, and when you got through you lit your cigar and went down town, glad you had done part of the work of the day.

"That's not breakfasting. It's loading up your stomach, and it's worse for you than if you hadn't eaten anything. Then you have a headache and feel bad, and wonder why it all is. It's because you don't pay as much attention to your stomach as you do to your office boy. Your stomach takes its revenge by making you wretched. To squelch it you pour a lot of liquor into it and gulp some ice water on that, with a cracker or pretzel and a bit of cheese. What sort of a mixture is that? Just imagine the cheese, and rum, and pretzel, and think that something inside of you has to get away with that. Your stomach ought to be your friend, but if you go to pitching into it it'll show fight, and you may as well understand that it will get the best of it.

"When you get up in the morning take a big drink of water. Your system wants water first. An engine isn't fired up and then some water let into the boiler. Clean your teeth and let the water run from the spigot while you're doing it. Then drink a pint of it. Use common hydrant water; no ice, no salt, no mineral water. Ordinary water is good enough for an ordinarily healthy man. Keep away from drugs and pills, and give your stomach a show.

"If you are in a hurry to read the papers read them before breakfast. When you sit down to the breakfast table be happy; you're going to do something pleasant. Breakfast isn't a penalty imposed on you or a task to be performed as soon as possible, but a pleasant, enjoyable occasion. Try and have somebody talk to you, and talk yourself. Laugh. Start off with fruit—some oranges, say. Then eat some fish and stale bread, or stale rolls, or toast. If you want anything more eat some meat. Take your time to it all. I stay at the table for an hour, and eat all the time Don't eat much, but take your time to it. If you haven't time, eat less. The time you spend at breakfast will be saved over and over again during the day.

"A man's stomach is his friend, and if he'll only treat it kindly the first half of the day, it will show its appreciation and stick by him at night."

Warranted Seed.

1888. GREGORY'S SEED CATALOGUE. 1888.

I have founded my business on the belief that the public are anxious to get their seed directly from the grower. Raising a large proportion of my seed enables me to warrant its freshness and purity, as see my Vegetable and Flower Seed Catalogue for 1888, FREE for every son and daughter of Adam. It is liberally illustrated with engravings made directly from photographs of vegetables grown on my seed farms. Besides an immense variety of standard seed, you will find in it some valuable new vegetables not found in any other catalogue. As the original introducer of the Eclipse Beet, Burbank and Early Ohio Potatoes, Hubbard Squash, Deephead Cabbage, Cory Corn, and a score of other valuable vegetables. I invite the patronage of the public.

Two Thousand Famous AUTHORS.

It seems almost incredible that a library fairly representing approximately two thousand of the most eminent authors of the world, of all lands and all times, can really be placed within the reach of ordinary homes. Yet this is what is accomplished 15 Vols. by Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature, Volume IX. of which is now ready. The work, completed, is to comprise from fifteen to twenty volumes, of about 480 pages each, in large type, really beautiful and excellent in all mechanical qualities, and yet sold at the phenomenally $7.50 low price of 50 cents per volume for cloth, or 60 cents for half Morocco bindings; even from these prices large reductions are made to early purchasers, and to clubs. The publisher will send a specimen volume to anyone on receipt of the price, allowing the privilege of return if not wanted. All lovers of good books should at least see the work, which should not be confused in the reader's mind with Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia—the one is a Cyclopedia of Literature, the other of Knowledge and Language.

The Literary Revolution Catalogue (84 pages) sent free on application. ALDEN'S publications are NOT sold by book-sellers—no discounts except to Stockholders. Books sent for examination before payment, satisfactory reference being given

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century."

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each, per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen, $2.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation, as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

A bill appropriating $5,000 to defray the expenses of the funeral of Chief Justice Waite was passed by Congress Monday. The burial took place at Toledo, Ohio, on Thursday.

A bill to amend the naturalization law so as to require would-be citizens to make oath that they are not polygamists, anarchists, or communists, was introduced in the House to-day by Representative Stewart of Georgia.

The Rev. R. W. Montgomery, representing the Home Missionary Society of the Congregational church, addressed the Senate Committee on Territories this morning in opposition to the admission of Utah and in favor of legislation to suppress the evils of Mormonism. He favored the Utah commission bill, or, if that could not be passed, then the Paddock bill, which vests the appointment of school officers in the hands of the Governor.

COUNTRY.

At the centennial at Marietta, Ohio, April 7, the principal address will be delivered by Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts. William Henry Smith, General Manager of the Associated Press, will also deliver an address.

The number of hogs packed in the West during the winter season is estimated by the Cincinnati Price Current at 5 900,000, a decrease from last year of about 539,000 head. The prospective hog supply points to a decrease of 13 per cent

The Northwestern Railroader, of Minneapolis, Minn , publishes a summary of the entire cost of the Western rate war now ending to the railroad companies involved. There have been just fifty working days since the first cut was made, and the loss has been $15,000,000 in that time. The loss on business in and out of the two cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis alone has been nearly half a million dollars.

Near Manchester, Conn., Wednesday morning, at the approach to the bridge over the Hockanum River, a locomotive drawing a New York and New England train exploded, killing the fireman and fatally scalding the engineer.

John D. Gillet, the cattle king of Illinois, father-in-law of Governor Oglesby and David T. Littler, had a second stroke of paralysis at his home at Elkhart, Ill., Wednesday, and is very low. Mr. Gillet is 69, and his wealth is estimated at $2,500,000.

Reports of a cyclone that devastated Ninnescah, Mo., Saturday evening have just been received. Nearly every building in the village was wrecked or damaged, the total loss being $30 000. One woman is reported killed.

The barks Emigrant, Vesuvius, and Mabel Stoddard, salt laden for Gloucester, Mass., have been given up as lost. Forty five men are supposed to have perished.

Another Negro-lynching epidemic has broken out. Theodore Calloway, a Negro murderer, was taken from jail at Sayneville, Ala., Thursday night, and hanged in front of the court house, the mob departing after riddling his body with bullets. John Wood was lynched at Denison, Texas, Wednesday, for abducting a white girl, Amelia Wilson.

The grand jury reported at New York, Wednesday, that the elections in the Eighth Assembly District were controlled by professional criminals, and that voters had been systematically terrorized. They had decided, however, not to indict the minor offenders, so as not to put the more prominent crooks on their guard, but advise that a more searching examination be had.

Four United States soldiers, of a party just recruited at Davis Island, N. Y., jumped from a train between Cleveland and Toledo, Wednesday intending to desert, and one was killed. Ten others at Toledo announced that they would desert, claiming that they were savagely treated and half starved.

Freeport, Ill., is excited over mysterious fires that have been breaking out spontaneously in the house of Louis Hildebrand, in the floors or walls, sometimes before the eyes of puzzled investigators, but no cause can be assigned.

Near Forrest, Ohio, Thursday afternoon the six children of Farmer Jacob Kraus found and ate some wild parsley, [parsnip] from the effects of which one died during the night and the others cannot recover.

Much alarm is felt in Brooklyn over the prevalence of contagious diseases and the number of fatal cases. The malignant form of diphtheria has broken out in several places, and no theory of its cause, whether it is due to sewer gas from the street, coal gas from furnaces, or the melting of piles of snow, seems to be accepted by physicians. Fatal cases have been reported in well ventilated houses, having no sewer or water-pipe connections.

FOREIGN.

The French Cabinet was defeated Friday before the Radicals in the French Chamber of Deputies. The issue on the revision of the constitution was squarely made, and the supporters of the President and Cabinet were outvoted. The fact that the President and ministry were a unit in opposition to revision and in disapproval of Boulanger may have unusual significance.

A number of calamitous fires occurred in Hungary during the prevalence of a gale. At Kikinda 1,500 persons were rendered shelterless, and are camping out in the snow. Thirty-eight houses were burned and many lives were lost at Mezo-Berenx.

Latest advices from China say that the crisis in Bo-Nan is passed, but that the distress of the people is appalling, 2,000,000 persons being utterly destitute. The nearest towns are invaded by hordes of naked and starving refugees from the flooded districts, who, like swarms of locusts, are devouring everything.

Disastrous floods in Germany have caused much destruction and loss of life. Half of the district of Luneburg is inundated and fifteen villages are submerged. Eight persons have been drowned, and 900 are homeless.

The river Save has overflowed its banks and laid waste many villages. Baron Arnold May was drowned while assisting in the rescue of the inhabitants of Tisalok. It is estimated at Berlin that 75,000 persons have been rendered homeless by the floods. The damage to property is estimated at 400,000,000 marks.

"What ye sow, that shall ye also reap." If we sow good seed, we may confidently expect good results; hence, it behooves every man and woman to carefully consider where the best seed may be obtained. Seed that is warranted pure, fresh, and raised on his own farms, is what the veteran seed-grower, James J. H. Gregory, of Marblehead, Mass., offers the public, and his well-known integrity makes his warranty a valuable one. Send for his 1888 catalogue.

EPPS'S COCOA.
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,
The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000.000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.

ROBERT G. PATTON.

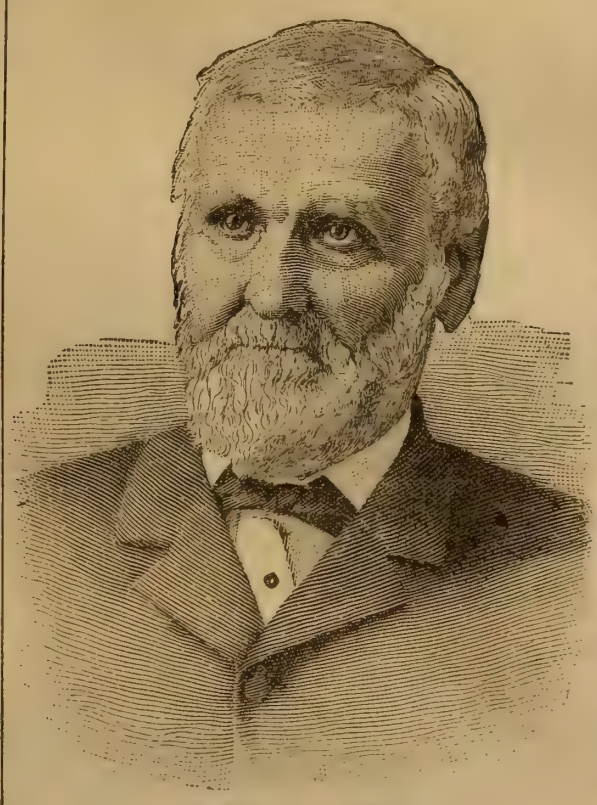
It was early in September in 1884 that this venerable, yet stalwart, man came to the office of the Cynosure for a long consultation with the editors upon the political questions then ranged in battle line for the approaching election. As member of the National Committee of the Prohibition party, and an earnest opposer of the lodge, his interest amounted almost to anxiety respecting the co-operation of the American party. His interview resulted in mutual confidence. It was no small satisfaction to know that such a friend was among the Prohibition advisers; and he was gratified with our confidence in St. John and Daniels. Mr. Patton died at his home in Monmouth, Illinois, on the 9th of February last. The following sketch was prepared by his son for the Christian Statesman, to which paper we are also indebted for the portrait:

"Born at Cherry Fork, Ohio, March 17th, 1808, the subject of this sketch was of Scotch-Irish descent, and was reared in the Covenanter faith, to the early teachings and discipline of which may be due much of the strength of purpose that characterized his after life. He early connected himself with the Covenanter church presided over by the Rev. David Steel—at that time little known to the world of letters—and at once became the staunch friend and supporter of his pastor in the church controversies of the time; this friendship lasted throughout life.

"Trained to a rugged sense of manliness in men, he was a reformer in the best sense of the term and was quick to espouse the cause of the oppressed. Once his convictions led the way, he never wavered in his devotion to the cause he served, nor flinched from the responsibility of his chosen position. To the courage of his convictions were added rare physical bravery, strength and endurance, and the opening scenes in our national tragedy which ended at Appommatox, furnished the opportunities for the early development of those splendid qualities that distinguished his whole life.

"In the dark days of 'ante-bellum' times when few had the courage to voice their sentiments if opposed to the slave aristocracy of the South, he openly and boldly declared himself an Abolitionist. He was connected with the Underground Railway in Ohio for the assistance of fugitive slaves to Canada and freedom, was co-worker with, and the trusted lieutenant of the noted John Rankin, and was of the party who furnished safe escort for the woman 'Eliza' whom Harriet Beecher Stowe gave to the world in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'

"In the public affairs of life he was a central figure in the community in which he lived, a ready and forcible debater, and a dangerous adversary, for he dealt only with facts and was always equipped with the necessary data to sustain his position. A natural leader of the people, he never sought public honors for himself, for he cared nothing for the plaudits of men; possessing in a remarkable degree the endowments of a great leader he preferred rather the kindergarten of politics to the leadership of the masses, believing that primary education on all subjects of importance was essential to thorough conviction and the intelligent use of the franchise. Had he chosen politics as a profession, however, he would undoubtedly have been heard in the councils of the nation.



ROBERT G. PATTON.

"He was openly and avowedly opposed to all forms of secret societies and courted the fullest publicity of his attitude. To him the existence of secret organizations was a standing menace to church and state and the well-being of society. His religious views, on all questions of public polity were of the rugged wholesome type and he carried them into every walk of life. While he did not impose them upon others at inopportune moments, no one could be long in his society without feeling intuitively that he was in the presence of an earnest, fearless and faithful Christian gentleman.

"Although a Covenanter, he afterwards connected himself with the Associate Reformed church and later with the United Presbyterian denomination. Always a strong churchman, these changes were made, no doubt, at the time because of the fact that no church of his original faith was maintained in the communities in which he lived after removing from Ohio.

"He was married to Melinda McIntyre in 1827, and in 1847 he emigrated to Illinois and settled with his family at Peoria, where he immediately joined hands with Mark Aikin, Jonathan K. Cooper and others of anti-slavery proclivities and may be said to have been literally in at the birth of the Republican party in that State. Through all its early struggles he was prominent in its councils, and when its triumph brought civil war, he lent his best efforts to the emergency and sent three sons to represent him in the struggle for the maintenance and perpetuity of our institutions. When the sword had forever settled the rights of mankind under our flag, he turned to the Social problems of the hour, and was among the first to espouse the cause of temperance. A believer in radical measures, he early saw the danger of compromise with the liquor traffic and at once declared for prohibition and the necessity of a third party movement.

"To the cause of prohibition he undoubtedly gave the best efforts of his life. To him it was the political child of his declining years, and kindled a sacred fire in his heart; to it he gave his best—the wisdom of his years, his most fervent prayers, his thought and his speech. His late years were entirely given up to its promotion, and he wished life prolonged only that he might witness its triumph.

Bismarck threatened to resign last week and Europe trembled as if from an earthquake shock. The new German Empress is supposed to have some influence with her sick husband. Alexander of Battenburg, last year driven from the Bulgarian throne, wants to marry her daughter. Next he will want a kingdom, and Russia will get ready for war. Anyhow Bismarck hates the affair, but he will get beyond his depth in diplomatic waters if he interferes with a mother in marrying off her daughters.

Now that the great railway strike is practically over, let every right-thinking man second Powderly's late proclamation that it is time to give up the strike and the boycott and pay some attention to education. Of course the chief of the Knights of Labor means the kind of education which he can direct; but there are sources of information which, happily, the lodge cannot control. It is an opportunity not to be lost, to turn the attention of employers to their obligations to God and man to maintain the sanctity of the Sabbath; and of the laborer to the fact that if he swears himself into a secret lodge he has put upon his neck the yoke of a despot.

The Chicago Times gathered from several States and published last Saturday the opinions of thousands—farmers, business and professional men—on the strike. An overwhelming majority condemned it, and sustained the Burlington company. Of the rest a very few only express themselves without qualification as sympathizing with the strikers and desiring their success. The most of them think that there is wrong on both sides, or that the company acted too hastily in terminating negotiations. The reader, says the Times, will be surprised to see that a large proportion of those expressing the warmest sympathy with the strikers are bankers and capitalists. A less surprising fact is the great unanimity with which the farmers condemn the strikers, and declare that the company should fight the battle to the bitter end, and thus settle the question, once for all, whether the owners of property or their employes shall control it. Farmers, as a class, are at once self-reliant and law-abiding, and have little patience with strikers and their peculiar methods.

There is much ado among the saloonists and politicians to find the evidences of the failure of prohibition, and to show how wonderful are the results of high license. Under restriction a few saloons have been closed in this city and State, but no one supposes there is less drinking—figures show an increase, rather. So also in Pennsylvania. But in Iowa, in a portion of the State where 3,000 saloons flourished before prohibition went into effect, there yet remain but twenty-four, which exist for a little longer in spite of the law. Why should not our restrictionist friends take notice of this fact—2,976 out of 3,000 saloons abolished in prohibition Iowa—and be as glad of it as the rest of us? On the contrary, they not only refuse to see, but even act as though they regretted the glorious fact. "Ye blind guides! who strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

IS THE RELIGION OF MASONRY SUFFICIENT?

BY REV. DAVID THOMPSON.

The question is not whether Freemasons are saved; for we believe that some of them are saved by faith in Christ as their Redeemer. These, however, are saved, not by the Masonic religion, but in spite of it.

That we may understand the question, it is necessary to know what the religion of Masonry is. According to some of its expositors it is a universal religion. If this definition has any meaning,it must signify such religious principles as are common to all religions, so that the members can all harmoniously work together in the lodge. As a matter of fact Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Mormons, Deists, Buddhists and Parsees can all unite in the mysteries of the order. The principles that are common to all these must be exceedingly few and shadowy.

It would be very interesting to the public if the expounders of this religion would tell us what these common principles are. A single principle is all that we are able to discover, viz.,that there is a god. But the Masonic oracle is silent as to the character of their god; whether there is only one such being or several; what is his nature and attributes; is he a spirit or is he material; is he limited in time and space, power, knowledge, etc.? What are his relations to the Universe? Has he created it or is it self-existent and eternal? Does he govern the various objects that exist? Does he require any worship from men? If so, where is that worship prescribed? Is it in the sky above, or in the earth beneath? or has he left it to the fraternity to devise it; and, if so, how do they know that it will be acceptable to him,and that he will reward them for it? Has the Masonic god given his devotees a system of moral government? If so, where is it revealed, and has it any sanctions, any rewards or punishments?

Let the admirers of this universal religion answer all or at least some of the foregoing inquiries. Let them give a reason of the hope that is in them, if they expect to make proselytes of thinking people. Surely they do not presume that sensible people will "go it blind," in renouncing Christianity and adopting this universal religion.

Waiting for an answer to the foregoing queries, we will now present some objections to this universal religion. We cannot adopt it because the Christian religion meets every want of the soul. It reveals to us the object of adoration as "a spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in his being,wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth,"and as the Creator and Preserver of all things,and the moral governor of all intelligent creatures. And while it reveals to us our fallen and ruined condition it does not leave us to perish in despair; but it further reveals a plan by which "mercy and truth meet together and righteousness and peace embrace each other,"—a plan by which God can be just while he justifies the ungodly who believe in Christ. Christianity differs from all other religion in providing an atonement for sin. We here take for granted that all men are sinners. The question then arises,"How shall mortal man be just with God?" Under a sense of sin and liability to punishment, the anxious inquiry is raised, "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first born for my transgression,the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?" No such costly sacrifices could make an atonement for the sin of the soul; and yet "without shedding of blood there is no remission;" but the blood of bulls and goats could not take away sin. Christ, by appointment of God, the Father,"bare the sins of many and made intercession for the transgressors." By this appointment he was "made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." He bore our sins in his body on the tree. These are some of the Scripture expressions employed in reference to the substitution of Christ for men.

But that men may be benefited by what he has done and suffered for them, it is necessary that they exercise faith in him as their substitute. God, the Father, hath set him forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood for the remission of sins. His blood is a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness; and such is its efficacy that it cleanses from all sin. Zech. 13:1; 1 John 1:7. By a Divine constitution Christ is made of the Father wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption to his people.

Thus we see that light and immortality are brought to light by the Gospel. The Gospel plan of salvation is exclusive of all others. Christ is the new and living way into the holiest of all; but there is no other way of approaching a holy God. John 14:6. "There is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." 1 Tim. 2:5. Again we are infallibly assured that "there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, neither is there salvation in any other." Acts 4:12. "If righteousness came by the law, Christ had died in vain. If a law had been given whereby we might have life, verily righteousness should have been by the law."

Between this religion of the Bible and the boasted universal religion of Masonry where can we find a single point of contact? The Christian religion saves by grace through faith in a Redeemer; but as the Masonic religion rejects him as the unbelieving Jews before Pilate cried out, "Not this man, but Barrabas!" it has no part or lot in the salvation of Christians. It is a religion of works. Now "by the works of the law no flesh shall be saved." "As many as are of the works of the law are under the curse, for it is written, Cursed be every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." This curse then must rest on Masons and all others who go about to establish their own righteousness. The works of Masons in their lodges are not such as are enjoined in the moral law, but unmeaning comments on mechanics' tools. What merit in the sight of God can there be in descanting on the uses of a mason's compasses, levels, squares, plumb lines, trowels, trestle-boards, etc.? What virtue is in them, more than in those of tailors,shoemakers, blacksmiths, coopers, carpenters, farmers, etc.? A lively imagination might discover great mysteries in the implements employed by these and many other pursuits. But what has this to do with the pardon of sin and acceptance as righteous before the righteous Ruler of the Universe?

Instead of going to the Word of God for their code of morals, they go to a chest of mechanics' tools. But even if they did take their code of ethics from the Bible, their obedience to it could not save them, since it is "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost."

In the same word of prophecy we are told that"he that honoreth not the Son,honoreth not the Father." John 5:23. Consequently they dishonor both Father and Son,and how then can they be saved? Again,we are assured that "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him? John 3:36. Does not the religion of Masonry ignore this worthy name, by which we are called? Is it so, then, that the Masonic religion in rejecting the eternal Son of God exposes its followers to the wrath of the Almighty? "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." "Who knoweth the power of his anger?" Will professors of the Christian religion add that Christless religion to the true? Will they thus risk their eternal salvation? It is for a lamentation that some of them are more attached to the lodge than to the church of God. The church contains the members of God's family, his servants and friends. What madness is it for any to leave it, or stay out of it, when its doors are opened for their admission?

The anti-Christian character of Freemasonry will further appear by considering the profane and bloodthirsty character of the oaths which the candidates for the different degrees are required to take. The oath of secrecy is profane, since it binds the candidate to "always conceal and never reveal"what may be immoral, but which the good of society requires to be made public and punished. God, to whom an appeal is made in swearing, requires that the juror "shall swear in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness." Jer. 4:2. In the Masonic oath the judgment is never consulted. The oath is consequently profane, and we are assured that the Lord will not hold him guiltless that takes his name in vain. It is further profane and superstitious as it is taken kneeling, with the right hand on a compass and square placed on a Bible, as if swearing by them instead of swearing by the Almighty.

We further object to the Masonic religion that it is intrinsically selfish. Were it not for this trait of its character it would not exist for a single decade. When members of the order wish to draw young men into the order, the appeal is uniformly made to the selfish principle of our nature. The young man is told that he will have friends to aid him wherever he may go. This term, aid, may be construed very extensively—to pecuniary aid, election to office, procuring lucrative employment, patronage in business, favorable decisions in lawsuits, etc. This aid is to be given not to Christ's disciples,or the deserving, but to members of the fraternity, who inviolably have kept their secrets, whatever their religious or moral character may be.

The benevolence of the Christian religion is a complete contrast to this organized selfishness. It requires us to do good unto all men as we have op portunity,"but especially to the household of faith." Masonry says nothing about all men; but merely those who can give the secret signs and passwords. The doors of God's house or church are open to human beings as such, regardless of age, or sex, or condition in life, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, bond or free—they are all equally welcome. How different is the invitation to enter the Masonic lodge? Its doors are fast closed against the great majority of the human family. It excludes the female sex, the young and the old, the poor who can not pay initiation fees and monthly dues, the diseased—the "withered, halt and blind." If it has any claim to be a benefit to men, why not admit all to participate in its benefits? If it is good, all should join the order; then there would be no secrets, since all would be in possession of them.

If any professing Christians who belong to the order should read this article, let them carefully consider their duty to withdraw from it. "O my soul, come not thou into their secret, unto their assembly,my honor, be not thou united." "Why halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God worship him; but if Baal, then worship him." "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler writes in the New York Evangelist: "We can say frankly to our temperance brethren, that if they attempt to lash the wise project of prohibition of saloons, and the foolish project of female suffrage inseparably together, they will encounter fatal opposition. They will repel tenfold more sensible voters than they will win. Their most eloquent and logical advocate, Dr. Herrick Johnson, is as intensely opposed to the Lucy Stone and Elizabeth Cady Stanton doctrines of woman suffrage as I am. Nineteen-twentieths of our Presbyterian ministers will never cast a vote which is nominally only for prohibition, and yet is really a vote for burdening womanhood with civil government. What is true of our church, is true of the Episcopal, Reformed, Baptist, Congregationalist and the most influential portion of the Methodist church."

A United Presbyterian minister in Iowa once said: "If the choice is between woman suffrage and the saloon, I will take the saloon every time." President McAfee of Park College, Mo., while kindly commending my lectures before the students, yet took occasion to strongly condemn woman suffrage. A Presbyterian minister of Greenfield, Mo., said to me recently: "If the time ever comes when my wife will go to the ballot box, I shall then immediately apply for a divorce." And a Presbyterian pastor at Springfield, Mo., was so prejudiced against woman suffrage that he refused to touch the local option question, if the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had anything to do with it.

Now in the name of common sense, what is there that bodes such frightful disaster to the country in allowing women to go to the ballot box. Ever since I have been able to think upon this subject, I have thought it would be a happy day for our government, when responsibility for its administration would rest equally upon women. When no oath is required to a Constitution ignoring Christ in government, there is no reason why women should not have the ballot equally with men. In the Covenanter church in which I have been schooled from infancy, I do not know a minister who does not believe in women's right to the ballot. The late Dr. J. R. W. Sloane and Dr. A. M. Milligan held strongly to this doctrine. Often have I heard the latter preach it from his pulpit while I was a student in Allegheny City. Bro. T. P. Stevenson and Bro. David McAllister, now the leaders in the National Reform movement, have always taught equal suffrage for women, and so do the active workers in our association.

We believe that in the Bible, God has given a form of government to the family, to the church and to the state; and that in neither is it good for man to be alone, but that God designs that women as well as men should share in the government of each. Those only who have neglected the study of the Bible as a text-book in government can deny this. In the republican government which God gave Israel, women took part in the election. Their elections then were by acclamation instead of by ballot, and we find the women shouting for David when he and Saul were running for President, and Mrs. Deborah was President of the United States of Israel during a term of forty years.

In forming political relations the ruled have the same right to give their consent, as the ruler. Voting is a subjective, as well as sovereign right, and women being subjects as well as men, have the same right to vote. The Declaration of Independence in saying that government is by and for the people, and that its power of administration is derived from the consent of the government, requires that women should have an equal voice in government with men, for are they not a part of the people, and a part of the governed? Does not the principle of no taxation without representation, require that women who are largely property holders should have a voice in the government? Does not the fourteenth amendment of the National Constitution, which declares that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens," etc., carry with it woman suffrage? Mr. Brigham, the author of this amendment, declares that the word "persons" was designed to include the women as well as the men. But women are as well, and even better qualified by intelligence, morality and religion than men, to vote. As members of our churches they outnumber the men almost two to one. The girl graduates far outnumber the boys in our schools and colleges. Their brains are not so benumbed and stupefied with whisky and tobacco. The men are in an overwhelming majority in our prisons, and almost all those in the dramshops are men. Where have we any record of a woman's brewers' association, of a woman's liquor or personal liberty league? Are they not greatly in the majority in temperance and all good works?

We have every reason to believe that if women could share the ballot with men, the death knell of the liquor traffic would be rung at the first election. Well do the liquor men know this, for they wage the most determined opposition against woman suffrage. Women are far less complicated than men with political ambition and intrigue and could be trusted to give a purer vote. It is more difficult for them to earn a livelihood and they have far deeper interests at stake, and their natural love of home is leading the very best women in our land to ask in overwhelming numbers for the ballot. Shall the request be granted is one of the vital and uppermost questions which the nation must take up and decide. And we are confident it will be decided in favor of God and humanity—on the side of equal suffrage for women.

SOME NATIONAL QUESTIONS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The discussions of the General Christian Conference held in Washington, Dec. 7 to 9, 1887, are reproduced in a book of 420 pages entitled "National Perils and Opportunities." Let me give your readers a taste of the good things it contains.

Dr. McPherson, on "The City as a Peril," quotes Carlyle's exclamation, "What a fermenting vat lies simmering and hidden in the city!" and Victor Hugo's words: "The history of men is reflected in the history of the sewers, and the Gemoniæ narrated the story of Rome. The drain in old Paris is the meeting place of all exhaustions and all experiments; political economy sees there a detritus, and social philosophy a residuum. It was in the sewer of Paris that Jean Valjean found himself." Then he adds: "The tenement is a kind of open cesspool, both material and moral; and we need take but two steps even from the refined parlor itself to the home of the deadly sewer gas. Christianity must never forget that the soul's destiny is closely linked with that of the body. Christ's mission included miracles of healing as well as preaching the Gospel to the poor. The peril of the city may thus fortify itself behind the complications of our two-fold nature."

Dr. Pierson, on "Estrangement from the Church," said: "A kid glove is a non-conductor. It will not answer to come into contact with the people unless you come into contact with them on their own plane. I can mention a man to-day who is conducting a colossal business and who is a man of great wealth, and yet, in a church for the people and of the people, he is absolutely on a plane with every other man, and you would never know that he owns a dollar from anything in his manner, mien, dress or habits to proclaim a man of wealth or the conductor of a colossal business. It is one thing for a man to build a chapel for the poor, and a very different thing to put himself in the midst of the enterprise and go there on a level with the poor man. And every poor man knows the difference."

Bishop Coxe distinguished between Ultramontanism and the Roman Catholic church. The former was the foe of our Republic. The Jesuits had been expelled from the kingdoms of Europe. "Even Pius the Ninth, in his better days, banished them from Rome." They are a menace to our civil and religious liberties.

Dr. McArthur began on "The Saloon" thus: "Going down Sixth Avenue, New York, a little time ago, I saw a door over which were these words, 'Saloon. A. Blessing.' This struck me as being somewhat inaccurate. A man named Blessing ought surely to be in some other business. Had the inscription read, 'Saloon, A Curse,' it would have been nearer the truth; had it read, 'Saloon, the Greatest Curse on this Earth,' the words would have been literally true. In another part of the same city there is a saloon which is properly named. Over its main entrance are the words, 'Hell Gate.' In connection with this title there might be given a part of the inscription which Dante places over the gate of his hell:

> " 'Through me ye enter the abode of woe;
> Through me to endless sorrow are ye brought;
> Through me amid the souls accursed ye go,
> All hope abandon, ye who enter here.'

"It is impossible to find language which will truly state how great a curse the saloon is."

Dr. Strong, on "Methods of Co-operation," said: "At Saratoga, a year and a half ago, President Seelye called attention to the fact that some great focal idea controls the thinking of the various ages; that for the first three centuries of the Christian era that idea was God; that during the fourth and fifth centuries that idea was man; that next came, logically, the doctrine of union between God and man, or the doctrine of salvation; that next came, naturally, the doctrine of human brotherhood, the relations of man to man and that this has been the growing question since the Reformation."

A former speaker used this illustration: "Robert Peel gave his daughter a magnificent riding habit on her nineteenth birthday, and attired in the embroidered gown she rode side by side with him in the parks of London. She had scarcely returned home before she was taken ill with the most malignant form of typhus fever, and in ten days was laid to rest in the churchyard. And the secret is a very simple one. The poor seamstress in a garret in one of the slums, while she was embroidering that garment looked upon a husband shivering in the paroxysm of chills and she took the half-finished garment and laid it over him; and the garment took up the germs of fever and conveyed them from the hovel of the poorest to the palace of the peer. And so, beloved friends, we are bound together in one bundle of social life; and if we neglect the poorest and the lowest, society will avenge herself in the destruction of the highest and the richest and the most cultivated."

The work is full of valuable instruction as an egg is full of meat. It would be valuable in every Christian home in the land. Every one should read it.

WORDS FOR THE HOUR.

Can perpetual oath-bound secrecy be defended from a social, political, or Christian stand-point? No. Let the most cunning and crafty man in the world enter the rotten hulk of any secret clan as its pilot and defender, launch it forth upon the open sea of agitation, free discussion, and thorough investigation, and he'll be sure, sooner or later, to find both himself and his rickety craft irretrievably swamped beneath the surging billows of righteous popular contempt.—Birmingham Free Press.

A LESSON FOR WORKMEN.

Thursday morning a special to the Republican from Lincoln gave an account of the suicide of D. Van Buskirk, a bricklayer. The dispatch stated that Van Buskirk was a good workman, but he had been out of employment for several months and became despondent. The dispatch added that "he was a member of the union, and because of some work he did on the side he was called a 'scab' by some of his fellow workmen. This depressed him seriously. He could have got work in Omaha at good wages, if he had not been afraid of being called a scab. This fear kept him idle until everything, even to his wife's sewing machine, was sold out of the house. His wife went East about Christmas to visit her parents, and since then he had lived in the most abject poverty, months without coffee or meat or potatoes, and days without a fire."

Now comes a second chapter, and sad enough it is. Yesterday a letter came to Lincoln addressed to Van Buskirk. It was opened and found to be from his wife, and dated at a town in Bradford county, Pennsylvania. When it was written her husband was still alive, and Mrs. Van Buskirk informed him that she had found a place to work, and would leave her boy with her mother; inquired if he had found employment yet; and said she would send him half she had, which consisted of ten cents in money and a sheet of writing paper. When the letter reached Lincoln the poor fellow had been two days dead by his own act.

Van Buskirk was willing to work, and able to support a family; but he was sensitive, and, bound by the ties of the organization of which he was a member, he let his family suffer and took his own life.

The Republican knows of no better comment upon this sad tragedy than to repeat the question asked in these columns two or three days ago: Do young men who organize strikes ever stop to think what a sacrifice they ask of men who have families when they call upon them to quit work? The man who loves his wife and children can know no deeper pang than that which wrings his heart when he sees them suffer want through any act of his. If he has the moral courage he will break the ties that bind him, and give his first allegiance to those to whom he owes it. Labor unions should think of these things, and only force the issue when all other resorts fail.—Omaha Republican.

ORGANIZED REBELLION.

The organized rebellion against the government of the United States, having for its object the seizing upon and control of property to which the lawless organization has no shadow of right, goes on apace, with the usual violation of personal rights and destruction of property incident to a state of war. This situation cannot continue. Either the government must vacate its prerogatives and turn them over to a self-constituted dictatorship, or it must see to it that the laws are obeyed and that the rights and interests of the people are protected. There will not be the least difficulty in obtaining any just legislation that may be needed to repress the tyranny of incorporations—especially of those which are entrusted with great national interests, like the railroads. There is no necessity within the limit of justice for these conspiracies to paralyze the commerce of the people. The demand which they make to possess and control what does not belong to them is incipient anarchism. This mischief is accomplished by a few social demagogues who fatten while their victims starve. If they were out of the way the sympathy of the people would turn ardently and decisively in favor of the workingman in any just demand which he could make. As it is his cause is contaminated with anarchy, defiance of law and contempt for the rights of the people.—Interior.

THE SLAVERY OF THE LODGE.

If one organization has a right to use violence in compelling men to desist from work at prices that are satisfactory to them, then an equal right must exist on the part of another organization to compel men to work at prices that are not satisfactory to them. The war put an end to the latter guilty fallacy; the former will never be allowed to make practical assertion of itself.

"The people perish for lack of knowledge." Two thousand years of experience has not educated the people up to the knowledge of that great truth which the Emperor Marcus Aurelius Antoninus expressed in homely phrase, "that which is not good for the swarm, neither is it good for the bee." What is not good for the nation as a whole is not good for any part, nor for any member of any part of it. The greed of capital, as now exemplified in "trusts," and once in combinations of men who held property in man, and now also in the greed of combinations of labor that seek to destroy or hinder the lawful operation of capital, are all and equally hostile to the general welfare, and therefore to the welfare of any separate man.

What a heritage of poverty and ignorance slavery has left to the South. What a heritage of poverty and ignorance government by a monopoly has left to Eastern India, and what a legacy of misfortune government for monopolies has left to Spain. What a dreadful bequest the brief government by a commune has left to France. It is not to be thought of that the United States will submit to a rule of faction. The courts are making this clear enough.

The questions of combinations of labor or capital are not to be considered as they affect each other, but as they affect the people. Trade is not to be crippled by "trusts," nor is the right of any man to accept work on terms that are satisfactory to himself to be abridged or interfered with by any organization of any kind whatsoever. Nor is any organization to be free to conspire against the public welfare in any manner.—Inter Ocean.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Nebuchadnezzer in his dream saw a great image; the height of it reached to heaven. Daniel gave him this interpretation of it: The head of gold meant the Chaldean Empire; the arms of silver represented the Medo-Persian Empire; the belly and thighs of brass the Grecian Republic; the legs of iron the Roman Empire in its Latin and Greek forms; and the ten toes the ten kingdoms of Europe. The king beheld until a little stone, cut out without hands, smote the image on its feet, and it became as chaff of the summer threshing floor and was carried away of a rushing mighty wind; and the little stone became a great mountain and filled the earth. This image represented the world powers. This little stone represented the mediatorial reign of the Lord Jesus Christ. As the stone smote the image and destroyed it, so the kingdom of Christ will overcome the world powers; and as the little stone became a mountain and filled the earth, so the kingdom of Christ will ultimately become universal.

"His large and great dominion shall,
From sea to sea extend;
It from the river shall reach forth,
Unto earth's utmotst end."

Last Sabbath was generally observed here as Easter. Flowers and music were generally provided in the churches. Dr. John Hall of the Fifth Avenue New York Presbyterian church was an exception. The crowds who went there expecting to see banks of flowers and hear a specially prepared program of music were disappointed.

DR. HALL IS RIGHT.

The church is committing a sin in these excessive Easter decorations. Every Sabbath is a commemoration of the resurrection of the Lord.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Central M. E. church, South Fifth street, Rev. Robert Crook, pastor. This is a fine congregation, and National Reform was received with a heartiness that did me good. I have lately seen a sight that moves my heart. A little congregation, all of whom are very poor except one man, and they depend upon him largely for support. They cannot keep a pastor when they get one, for this money king falls out with him. That congregation would be stronger without him. An editorial in one of our religious papers is suggestive in this connection:

"The meanest sort of a church member is the one who pays liberally and then wants to dictate the policy of the congregation. He holds his large subscription as a menace. The feeble folk hesitate to do what their judgment approves for fear of losing the fifty dollars which are welcome. So this petty tyrant enjoys his notorious dominion for a season and the cause suffers. Providence frequently removes the obstructionist to that place where the wealth of this world and its mischief are unknown. At times the people tire of the imposition and plainly tell the 'squire' that he has lorded it long enough over them. He is bidden to take his gold and keep it, or bow to the will of the majority. Generally he cuts off his grant, thereby showing that he was only purchasing influence with his money. The handful of earnest believers finds no loss for his departure. To their astonishment the income is greater, because the incubus is cast off. This one man power is the ruin of many a congregation. Grace does not always make the rich humble and willing to take a back seat. The oppressed ought not to be afraid to rise against their oppressor."

The Brooklyn Evangelical Alliance is not having smooth sailing in the evangelistic work undertaken. A protest has been raised because Universalists and Unitarians have not been invited to join in the work of house to house visitation. It is strange that such a protest should be raised. The evangelical churches could not be expected to give aid and comfort to those who are radically opposed to their testimony. As well expect the National Christian Association to unite with the Masons in getting recruits for the two societies which are diametrically opposed to each other. J. M. FOSTER.

The Rev. Edward Everett Hale said in a recent letter: "It is quite clear to me that there is less drunkenness, more disposition to purity, a higher tone of public sentiment about crime than there was en years ago,"

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 6, 1888.

The great International Council of Women has gone but its echoes linger, while friends and enemies speak respectively of its triumphs and failures. The representative women of America and Europe who attended are enthusiastic over the convention as a grandly successful affair in every way, even financially, and as one which gives promise of results which will be of historical interest and importance.

Fifty-three different organizations of women were represented at this council by eighty-seven speakers and delegates from England, France, Norway, Denmark, Finland, India and the United States. The subjects of education, philanthropies, temperance, industries, legal conditions, social purity, political conditions and religion were discussed. No restriction was placed upon the fullest expression of the most widely-divergent views upon these vital questions of the age. The delegates think that it is cause for rejoicing that the sessions, both executive and public, were absolutely without friction.

In the Official Statement made for the public it was the unanimous voice of the Council that all institutions of learning and of professional instruction, including theology, law and medicine, should be as freely opened to women as to men; that opportunities for industrial training should be as generally and as liberally provided for one sex as for the other; that in all avocations in which both men and women engage equal wages shall be paid for equal work, and that an enlightened society should demand as the only adequate expression of the high civilization which it is its office to establish and maintain, an identical standard of personal purity for men and women.

On Monday last the Senate committee on woman suffrage granted a hearing to various advocates of the cause who had come to attend the Council, and the ladies fairly raided the Capitol. The assemblage overflowed the commitee room and spread into the corridors, while those in the rear stood on chairs in their anxiety to catch every word that was uttered. The committee, composed of Senators Cockrell, Blair, Palmer, Bowen, Chace and Sawyer, seemed well entertained by this delegation of fair speakers, all of whom were in favor of immediate and unrestricted suffrage, the ladies from foreign countries urging that the United States lead in this progressive work by means of a Constitutional amendment.

The House of Representatives has defeated Mr. Crain's resolution changing Inauguration Day to April 30th, but the Senate has passed the bill providing for the celebration at Washington in 1889 of the Constitutional centennial. The House will doubtless do likewise, so that next year the Capital is likely to be the scene of a most interesting and important exposition by the representatives of the people and governments of the Western Continent. Senator Blair, the author of the Educational bill, thinks the District of Columbia ought to have a Senator and Representatives in Congress according to its population, and has proposed an amendment to the Constitution to this end. *

REFORM NEWS.

CHICAGO WORK.

Rev. Wm. Harrison is pastor of a colored Baptist church on the West Side, Chicago. He has a commodious house of worship and an intelligent, wide-awake people. He is not favorable to secret societies although I was told a number of his members belong. They believe in free discussion and are willing to listen to a fair presentation of the subject.

On Sabbath evening I gave them some account of the New Orleans Convention and the condition of the people and the work going on there in the line of anti-lodge reform. Some listened with little impatience, but the greater part were in sympathy with their brethren at the South who have resolved no longer to fellowship "the unfruitful works of darkness."

Among those who came forward to speak words of approbation was a lady who lived with Mrs. Stowe and furnished one of the characters in that wonderful book, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Her name is Emmeline Hall, the widow of a former pastor of the church, and apparently a lady of refinement and earnest piety. She knew Dr. Lyman Beecher well, and had seen all his children while living in Dr. Stowe's family at Walnut Hills, Cincinnati. She supposes herself to be a relative and perhaps the sister of Bro. Lewis Clark of Detroit, whose name she had seen in the papers, but whose address she did not know. Both her husband and herself were drawn into the secret lodge system, but soon became disaffected, as pious people are when they see "the mystery of iniquity." Thus God is raising up his faithful witnesses in every part of the land where the light is kindled and bidding us go on undismayed to victory. J. P. STODDARD.

DEAF EARS IN CHARLESTON.

Notes of the city—The evangelist Yatman—Avery Institute, A. M. A., stands by the lodge—A welcome among Methodists and Presbyterians at Orangeburg.

ORANGEBURG, S. C., March 31, '88.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There are three natural divisions of the State of South Carolina, quite unlike each other in climate and productions: the mountain belt, adapted to grasses and grain-growing; the great corn and cotton region of the center; and the low-lying rice country of the coast. In this last the country is flat, the rainfall is great, and Spanish moss, palmettos and live oaks are abundant. The wealth of this region is largely in the phosphate beds, out of which are exhumed great numbers of shark's teeth (some of enormous size) and other remains of the period when this was but a part of the sea.

Charleston has the natural location for a city, but not for a large one. The space between Ashley and Cooper rivers is not large enough for a great city, and the country lying back is too low. A few nice new buildings are being erected, but in the main the city but holds its own. It is a nice old city—at least some parts of it. The fine statue of Calhoun, with its great granite pedestal, in which he is represented standing above in the attitude of pleading for a bronze image of South Carolina, is beautiful and appropriate. The monument stands near the center of "The Green," which is green only in part; the most of it is covered with asphalt.

Just now the religious world of Charleston is all engaged in Holy Week and preparations for Easter. The effect is not quite so demoralizing as Christmas, but it is the same in kind. All religious institutions which are simply of human invention are pretty sure to be used for worldly and selfish ends rather than the honor of the Lord. We have enough to do in observing those things which the Scriptures command.

Mr. C. H. Yatman, the evangelist, is laboring in the city with varied results. I heard one of his discourses and was more impressed with his ability than the excellence of his methods. I heard also Prof. J. C. Price on "The Plague Spot of the Nation," which he defined as the use and traffic in intoxicating drinks. That his speech was able and eloquent goes without saying, but surely it was not logical, for he indicted both of the old parties as being controlled by the liquor interest, and yet he deprecated the formation of a new party and thought all temperance effort should be non-partisan. He seemed to forget that moral convictions on any great question of public interest must necessarily crystallize into political action.

I found some warm friends of our reform in Charleston, but among that number was not the principal of the Avery Institute, the school of the American Missionary Association. As the sole exception, so far as I know, he takes the ground that secret societies are legitimate and useful, and to oppose them is pernicious folly. I was greatly surprised to find an employe of the A. M. A. who was so sensitive on this question.

Finding that the time for work was not opportune I left for Orangeburg, about eighty miles northwest and about 500 to 600 feet above the sea. It is a pleasant town of 3,000 inhabitants and the seat of Claflin University, the excellent school of the M. E. church. I was most kindly received by Pres. Dunton, who thanked me for the work I did here last year and wishes more in the same line. Two of the professors who a year ago were favorable to Masonry were convinced by the books sent by the N. C. A. and now are in hearty sympathy with our work. The school now has over 600 students and has some peculiarities. The students are enabled to board in a common hall at a cost of but seventy-five cents per week each. They do not complain either of the quantity or quality of the board. As it is a State Normal school there is especial attention given to methods of teaching. The more advanced students teach night schools made up of the younger, and thus have practice as well as theory. This work of teaching is divided so that all can bear a part, and yet all is under careful supervision. This plan requires a great amount of labor, but is fruitful in excellent results. I also visited the Presbyterian school under the care of Rev. Mr. Johnson, Mrs. Johnson, and one other lady teacher. They expressed their hearty sympathy with my work,and by request I addressed the school on the lodge question. I am expected to speak this afternoon to the assembled students and to preach twice to-morrow.

THREATENED ASSASSINATION.

OUR NEW ORLEANS AGENT ASSAILED AT AMITE CITY, BUT FORTUNATELY ESCAPES.

New Orleans, La., March 27, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—I attended the Bethel Union, A. M. E., Mount Moriah, Colwell, and St. Matthew Baptist churches last Sunday. Rev. A. A. Price, the A. M. E. pastor, is both an Odd-fellow and Mason. He has not been inside an Odd-fellow's lodge for ten years, but he is "financial" in the Masons. He is an intelligent man but does not think it wise to do away with the lodges altogether. They should be revived and reformed. After conversing with him, he said, "Well, yes, secret societies are in a great measure wrong."

I next visited Mount Moriah Baptist church. The pastor and his deacon are both strong anti-secretists. The pastor has passed 33 degrees

I next visited the Colwell Baptist church and found the pastor, Rev. Spoils, a high Mason. He very strongly denounced Odd-fellowship and Pythianism, but could see no harm in Masonry. His deacon, though a seceder, could see no harm in secrecy. But Bro. J. W. Womack and I went through the Fellow-craft and Master's obligations and quoted several Scriptures. He said, as did also Rev. Price,that he had never given secrecy a careful consideration, but promised to look into the matter. Deacon J. B. McClellan subscribed for the Cynosure, and I am invited to preach at this church Thursday evening.

I met Rev. J. W. Hilton, pastor First St. M. E. church. He had heard of the convention; but thought secrecy all right. However, he subscribed for the Cynosure. I next visited St. Matthew Baptist church at 7:30 p. m. The church was in deep mourning for its pastor, Rev. J. W. Anderson, an out-and-out anti-secretist. His church very decently buried him without lodge help. Now on Tuesday the deacon of this church, Bro. Isaac Powell, also an anti-lodge man, lies awaiting burial. The lodge thought to boast, but the church is prepared to bury him also.

Mr. Humes, a member of a prominent Baptist church and a high Mason, informed me to-day that the Masons believe I was the cause of the late N. C. A. Convention being held here, and they intend to put me out of the way. I am in receipt of an interesting letter from a seceding Odd-fellow of Bayou Goula, La., requesting me to come that way with reform books and tracts.

March 31st.—I preached at Colwell Baptist church Thursday evening. The pastor, Rev.Milton Spoils, though a Freemason, said to his congregation, "Bro. Davidson has certainly told you the truth. He has preached the Gospel, and you can't dispute it; and if we want to constrain sinners to come to Christ, we must clear up the road." Rev. A. D. Johnson followed my sermon with a hearty endorsement, after which an earnest appeal was made to the sinners. Three came forward and desired to be prayed for.

The Freewill Baptist District Association met today; Rev. Dr. Manning of Michigan called the meeting to order. The sentiment of this association seems to be one against Baal-worship. Dr. Manning thinks the lodges are foes to the church.

The First District Quarterly Conference of the Freewill Baptists of this State met March 30. Rev. Dr. E. S. Manning of Michigan was moderator. I attended the conference on Saturday, the 31st, and was introduced as the representative of the N. C. A. The moderator gave me a few minutes to speak of our reform work South. I spoke of the object of the N. C. A. and how the secret lodge system was injuring the churches. There were about twelve churches represented by their pastors and deacons, and every one very heartily endorsed what I said against lodgery by a rising vote. Dr. Manning gave some startling thoughts of the murdering of Morgan and spoke of his hatred of Masonry ever since, although he said many friends had tried to get him to join a secret lodge as they thought it would help him in his traveling, but the doctor thought Jesus excels all the secret lodges. I distributed tracts and Cynosures to all present; yea, and they were gladly received, many receiving them never having heard of the N. C. A.

Hammond, La., April 2.—I left New Orleans Saturday for Amite City, sixty-eight miles north. Rev. R. Kendrick, who extended me invitation to preach at his church Sabbath evening on the "Religion of Masonry," was detained at Ponchatoula sick, and could not be with us; but his hospitable wife and his deacon very kindly received me. I attended Sabbath-school at Union Freewill Baptist church at 9 a. m., and preached at the Little Zion M. E. church, Rev. S. Thomas, pastor, at 11 a. m. Bro. Thomas, is an out-and-out anti-lodge man. Here I met Rev. Riley Vernon. Bro. Thomas desired me to say something against the lodge. So in the closing of my sermon I spoke of the troubled state of the churches, because of the lodge taking the money of the people and turning away their heart from the truth, and besought those present to walk in the light and have no fellowship with iniquity. A member of Odd-fellows present thought I had insulted his lodge.

I attended covenant meeting at Union Baptist at 3 p. m., and preached there at 7:30 o'clock—or at least I attempted to preach. At 7:30 p. m. as I entered into the pulpit, the following letter was handed to me:

LETTER OF WARNING.

Amite City, La.

My Dear Friend:—We heard you preached a splendid sermon to day, but we think you went a little too far. We are living very peaceful and would not like to be disturbed here. A minister should not know anything when he is in the pulpit but Christ and him crucified. We (the lodge) do not profess to be a church, and if you have ever been in an Odd-fellow lodge you know that if you obey the laws that you are not wrong. This is something I do not like to do, but it disgusts me (us) to hear a good sermon and then kill it off denouncing other orders, when we all know that the church of the living God is ahead of all. Please preach the holy Gospel and leave us alone.... (No name signed.)

On receiving this letter I read it and asked the Christians if it was right for the world to dictate to a minister what he should preach. I stated that I had said nothing to offend them. My appeal was to my Christian brethren to come out from worldlings and be separate; and I could not see as a minister where I had a right to desist preaching the true Gospel and preach to gratify man. I had said nothing only what I could prove by God's Word.

The lodge members here became so disorderly I had to sit down. Rev. R. Vernon spoke a few words, that Paul and other apostles were persecuted for the truth, yet he did not say one word about the lodge. The secretists were all astir. There was not standing room for the people. One young man had his pistol out in church. The deacons asked for a collection. Loud and many were the cries, "Come again, brother, and tell us the truth." The lodgeites became more and more boisterous, but Bro. Brown, Revs. Thomas and Vernon and a number of sisters surrounded me so the angry men could not shoot me. Some one opened fire, and I barely escaped being shot. Although some of the angry lodge Negroes rumored it that I was a Warmoth politician, not one white man would join them in their inhuman acts. Bud Williams, a blasphemous young fellow, and a Methodist Negro preacher with a company searched Amite City for me. I had to walk fifteen miles to take the train at this place, as the secretists had sworn that I could not take the train at Amite.

I am resting here with Rev. Levi Thompson, pastor of a Baptist church here. He belongs to two lodges; but thinks they treated me wrong in Amite. This is a beautiful town of some 800 inhabitants with two white and two colored churches, and three colored lodges. No liquor is sold here.

New Orleans, April 3rd.—I arrived at 4 p. m. Conductor W. P. Marrette on the train said he heard of my troubles in Amite City this morning, but he says the white people there are too genteel to pay attention to those Negroes, although they are trying to make the whites believe you are a Warmoth politician; but I did not believe them. If some of the whites had been in the church last night they would have protected you.

Amite is a splendid summering place for Northerners. There is one Baptist, one Methodist, one Episcopal, one Presbyterian and one Roman Catholic church, all white; two Zion M. E, one Baptist, colored; six saloons, four white secret societies, three colored lodges and one benevolent association, colored. If the good citizens of Amite will clean out lodgery and the saloon Amite City will be Louisiana's paradise, but if those good Christians will allow a set of young roughs at the mouth of revolvers and point of dirks to drive a minister out of their quiet little city it will discourage rather than encourage strangers. I distributed about three hundred tracts and Cynosures in Union Baptist church Sabbath evening despite lodge cruelty, and obtained several Cynosure readers.

Francis J Davidson.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SWEDISH EVENTS OF INTEREST.

Rock Island, Ill.

Editor Chaistian Cynosure:—In your issue of March 22d you have a short article about Prince Barclay de Tolly, how he was persecuted by the Russian government. The story is somewhat old. I have just seen in a paper from Sweden that the higher authorities since then have suspected that this step was taken by some hyper-orthodox dignitary, and have given the prince to understand that he, by a petition of grace, may have his grade in the army back, and that his old father may also be advanced. The notice can, therefore, now be corrected.

I will let you have an interesting item about the Good Templars in Sweden. An old, renowned champion for temperance, in speech and writing, well acquainted to all Swedes both sides of the ocean, General Consul C. A. Berg, at Stockholm, had united with the order; now he has quit it, declaring that he cannot pray with a society which will work for a good purpose but denies the divine truth. His example will probably be followed by many upright Christians in Sweden, ministers and others. The reason is, that the head chief of the Swedish branch of the order, Mr. Wrawrinsky, has declared that "if the God of the religious people is the true God, he, Wrawrinsky, is a God-denier." Several papers formerly supporting it, now declare against it, saying that the secretism is only a bait on the hook to entice plain people. "What is won?" the papers ask, if one is turned from alcoholism, but in the place of it is to take a poison that will make his case ten-fold worse. The Swedish branch of the Good Templars also intends to separate from the English and American part, more than 27,000 kroner having, in small gifts, been taken out of Sweden, the most of it from the poorer classes, to be used for the order elsewhere.

Another thing: I suppose you know that the second son of King Oscar II.(also named Oscar)is about to marry a pious lady of the English nobility, a Miss Munck. It has taken the Prince two years—in which he avoided the company of his beloved one—to win over on his side his parents and his oldest brother, the Crown Prince. He, himself a pious man, working personally amongst the soldiers of the Royal Guards and the destitute people, first won his pious aunt, the Princess Eugenie and the consent of his mother. A year ago, when that pious lady, who is very sickly, was to undergo a dangerous operation, she took a farewell, as if dying, from her husband and children; but she lived, and the parents since tried to persuade the young Prince not to fulfill his purpose, but in vain. The wedding is to be performed in a plain way at Barnemouth, England, where the Queen and the two young people have been for a month or more. They are to be wedded by a Swedish minister, Rev. Beskow, in whose private school the Prince once was instructed. Oscar will lose his title of "Royal Highness," his appanage and inheritance right to the throne by his step. He will be now a common citizen of Sweden, and an officer of the Marine or Fleet which he was from his youth. He will take his residence, when married, on a little estate with a very plain building in the neighborhood of Carlskrona. His Aunt Eugenie, many years ago, built a residence at Gobland with an orphanage attached, where she lives every summer. This estate she has bequeathed to her nephew, that he, after her death, may continue her benevolences. That the Scandinavian people both sides of the mountains are very glad of the step of Prince Oscar is easily understood.

When all monarchs and dignitaries—Emperor William, Queen Victoria, President Cleveland, with the Shah of Persia, adorning the Beast, presented their gifts to the Pope at his jubilee as priest, King Oscar II. of Sweden was one amongst two or three exceptions. He, being semi-officially reminded to be one in the row, answered with dignity, that a sovereign of a Protestant people could have nothing to do with the Pope at this occasion. Yours in Christ,

Andrew R. Cervine.

UNITED BRETHREN FATHERS AND SONS.

Eshcol, Perry Co., Pa.

Dear Cynosure:—I cannot tell you how much I appreciate your visits. You are always welcome to my humble home, bringing me cheer, comfort and blessings, for which I am truly thankful. You keep me posted in reference to the battle going on betweeen light and darkness, truth and error, secret lodge night and open day light. You encourage me to continue the fight in the rank and file of the increasing army, and assure me that victory will be on the Lord's side, though it may require a terrible struggle; but with Jesus as our leader we will certainly win, for he has never lost a battle. Praise the Lord, O my soul, for the prospect, in waiting the grand result, when this demon secrecy will be conquered to the glory of God.

Encouragement comes once in a while, when we meet a man saved to Christ and from the lodge. Being in Hagerstown, Maryland, I .took the opportunity to visit the United Brethren Conference then in session, and part of two days I looked in upon its workings. What a change has come over this U. B. church in thirty years in more than one way. Many of the fathers having died, the sons have gone to housekeeping,and as a rule a new order of things has been brought about; the simplicity of olden time has measurably departed, so that one who used to take part in conference work finds little now to interest and profit; formality, money and popularity are with many the leading features. How this state of things makes one enquire for the old paths in which our fathers trod.

I called on and spent some time with my old friend, Dr. Shade. I made his acquaintance several years ago, and learned to love him. The Lord converted and sanctified him,saved him from the lodge, tobacco and the world. I find him well saved. Thank the Lord for a salvation that saves to the uttermost! He maintains his Christian dignity on all these points, and especially secrecy.

Is it not remarkable that the U. B. church, especially the Commissioners, who have the "brains," should fall back into darkness, when hundreds who have been hoodwinked are coming out and declaring against the orders. I spoke of the Cynosure to this brother, but he had not so much as heard that it had an existence, but desired to see it. Please send him a copy. Very truly, I. C. WEIDLER.

SHALL WE SUPPORT THE PROHIBITION PARTY?

MONTMORENCI, Ind., Apr. 2, 1888.

On the 26th ult. it was my happy privilege to hear the Hon. Jasper G. Hughes of Irvingville, Marion county, Indiana, lecture on prohibition in the city of LaFayette. He is Prohibition nominee for governor of the State. A few of us had met that day in W. C. T. U. Hall, where he lectured at night, to organize against liquor men or parties. Not a dozen did we have at the meeting, but by a liberal distribution of handbills we had a full house at night.

I don't know how to speak well enough of Mr. Hughes or his lecture. He has a resemblance to Charles Sumner. His logic is like that of John Stuart Mill; his religion and politics like a Paul of Tarsus, reasoning about temperance, righteousness, and a judgment to come with the cogency of a sunglass that burns with the light of truth right through a man's soul.

Spending the evening with him I learned that he is a Christian minister, never having joined any secret organization, and emphatically in heart against all lodgism. His lecture was a public coming out for God and Christ and righteousness in all politics and all things with which we have to do.

Now a word to my Anti-masonic friends about supporting the Prohibition party. Let me say, it has the same God in it—pleading for the right against the greatest national wrong—as our American party. And if all the friends of Prohibition are not educated by the Cynosure and other means up to our standard of right we cannot consistently refuse to join them when they are right as far as their knowledge goes, and if they are thus far right, it is evidence to us that they will ultimately reach our standard of truth and righteousness; for if God is with the party (and I know he is, for it has declared for him in its very first plank) he will bring it to the acknowledging of the truth in due time. Let us not hesitate a moment about supporting the Prohibition party, for in doing so we are supporting the main support of our own American party.

L. D. BROWN.

LODGE POISON.

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 30, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last evening, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., the public was entertained by a literary treat from an old pioneer, N. P. Langford, Esq , relating to events of a quarter of a century ago transpiring in the then far West concerning the murder of Lloyd McGruder and his party, the capture of the murderers and the vengeance of awful justice in their execution.

In the course of the narrative the speaker, in an occult and mystic way, alluded to the part played by Masonics in the capture of the outlaws. I did not hear him utter the word Masonry. Indeed the word Masonry in the estimation of respectable, thoughtful, intelligent people is coming to be regarded as a synonym of rascality. But the Masonic venom injected by the devout allusion of last evening into the minds of the morally oblique and Masonically inclined ought to be met by an antidote—the rascally principles of the Masonic institution. By virtue of the Masonic murder of Captain William Morgan, William Miller of Belfast, Ireland, and many others; and by virtue of the sworn murderous character of Freemasonry every Freemason carries in his own heart the stain of murder. And unless that stain is removed by repentance, confession, and the blood of Christ, and a renewal of heart, he, too, will meet the vengeance of awful justice in God's day of doom. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 7: 21. W. FENTON.

PITH AND POINT.

THE VETERANS.

I cannot do without the Cynosure. I think I have taken it from the first, or nearly the first, number. It has become a necessity to me, and I don't want to do without it. I bid you Godspeed in your labor of love for the race. God bless you.—THOMAS C. RADABAUGH.

ANOTHER OLD FRIEND.

I have been a reader of the paper nearly ever since its first publication, and I am well satisfied that the cause advocated is just and most worthy, and one that should interest every Christian church and every honest man on earth, wherever Christ's Gospel has been proclaimed. I was living in Yates county, New York, at the time Morgan was abducted and murdered. I well remember the great excitement caused by his untimely death. A part of the people took sides for justice and humanity, and part with the secret fraternity.—O. C. M. BATES.

ANOTHER.

J. M. Stevenson has been a subscriber to the Cynosure since its first existence; has done much work to extend its circulation; at different times has sent clubs of ten and under, paying for a number of them himself. He thinks the paper one of the best published on the reform and would not like to do without it.—J. T. S., Washington, Iowa.

BETTER DAYS IN ARKANSAS.

We have some twelve Protestant Christian churches here with a membership varying from 1,300 to a church down to seventy-five. All the churches are in a prosperous condition. The white Methodists South are building a fine church edifice, to cost over $15,000. Our city schools are run on the order of the city schools in the East. The colored schools are filled with able teachers. There are many reforms recently commenced among the people, and on a whole we are looking for better things. When Bro. Clark was down at this place I promised him to start a reform paper if he would aid us. We launched our little journal August 20th, 1887, and we have no reason to complain. Our subscription list is good and home advertisements are better. Our paper is chaste in its language and Republican in its politics. I would like our Northern white friends to read our sentiments. The Cynosure is our welcome visitor and is read with much interest. Many changes are coming among the colored ministry of the South, and we are pleased to say they are for the better.—A. M. MIDDLEBROOKS, Pine Bluff, Ark.

THE BOSTON COMMON CASE.

William F.Davis has been confined for several months in the jail in Boston ("the cradle of our liberty") for peaceably preaching the Gospel on the Common of that city—a right inherited from the time of the Pilgrim Fathers. He has had a small volume printed which gives the facts and the legal bearings of the injustice which he suffers for his faithfulness to Christ and the country. Paul appealed to Cæsar; Davis appeals to the sovereign people of this favored land against the wrong done them in his person by the powers of Anti-Christ, which now rule the city of Boston through Romanism, Rumism, and their tools. Will the people shut their eyes to the facts until convulsions again torture our whole country? The small volume concludes with these solemn words of warning: "Against the free public preaching of God's Gospel to the common people on the common lands of this Commonwealth there is and there can be NO JUST LAW!"—T. H.

ENCOURAGEMENT FROM MEN WHO KNOW MASONRY.

An old man on hearing the tract read entitled, "History of Masonry," said of the author of a statement therein, "Don't you know he is liable to have his head taken off?" Later he said that Freemasonry (the first three degrees) is like three trunks; the third or smallest within the second in size, and that inside the largest. The Entered Apprentice in Freemasonry only discovers the second trunk; the Fellowcraft the third, and the Master Mason the emptiness of the third. At another time, on hearing my report of a colporteur trip, he said, "Praise the Lord, the day of his glory is coming!" Another man who at first said I better quit circulating anti-secrecy documents, said later, "If you can do any good, do it." Both these men were Freemasons, the former, one of those who withdrew after the Morgan abduction.—R. D. NICHOLS.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IV, Second Quarter.—April 22.

SUBJECT.—The Ten Virgins.—Matt. 25: 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut.—Matt. 25: 10.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Peloubet's Notes.]

THE MARRIAGE CUSTOMS OF THE EAST. The parable of the ten virgins is based upon the marriage customs of the East, to which many allusions occur in Scripture. The essence of the marriage ceremony consisted in the removal of the bride from her home to that of her future husband. The bridegroom proceeded, late in the evening, attended by his friends, or "groomsmen" (see Judg. 14: 11; Matt. 9: 15; John 3: 29), to the bride's dwelling, where she awaited him, attired in white robes (Rev. 19: 8), embroidered with gold (Psa. 45: 13) and perfumed (Psa. 45: 8), adorned with jewels (Isa. 61: 10), and attended by her "bridesmaids" (Psa. 45: 14). The whole company then went in procession by torchlight to the bridegroom's house, being joined on the way by parties of invited guests (the virgins of the parable), all carrying torches or lamps.—Stock.

The ten virgins symbolize the whole professed body of the followers of Christ, including the true disciples and those who have made the profession without the possession of true religion. As Abbott says: "The parable represents the virgins as they appear to the bystander, the disciples as they appear to the world."

"Which took their lamps." In the utterly dark streets of an Asiatic city every one who goes forth at night is expected, and in modern Jerusalem is strictly required by the authorities, to carry a light.—Broadus.

The lamp, with its flame, symbolizes whatever is outward in the profession of Christianity.—Trench.

"And five of them were wise, and five were foolish." The whole church at the time of Christ's coming (as it is at all times) will be divided into these two classes, nominal and real Christians.—Rev. Com.

"Wise:" prudent, intelligent, foreseeing, with good judgment. To be an earnest Christian, doing the Lord's will, busy in his service, filled with his spirit, and thus prepared for his coming, is true wisdom.

"Foolish:" stupid, lacking in discretion and forethought, without good judgment and common sense. Such is a true description of those who are merely professors of religion, who have no real spiritual life, but content themselves with the husks of religion, without its inner blessedness or outward usefulness.

"But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." Observe that in the outset no distinction is visible between the wise and foolish virgins; both have lamps burning, but the wise have the lasting supply of oil (grace), the foolish have not. So in the church no visible line separates those whose light is fed by their own resolution from those whose dependence is a continual supply of daily grace from God.—Abbott.

Observe that the wicked servant in the parable (Matt. 24: 48) thinks the Lord delays, so watches not for his coming; here the foolish virgin thinks he is coming immediately, so makes no provision of oil; an indication that a sinful heart can find, in directly contrary beliefs, excuses for the same real neglect.—Abbott.

The foolish virgins, therefore, are those who have had some feelings of attachment to the Lord Jesus, and certain impulses Christ-ward, to which they yielded at the time, but they are not constant. Their emotion was a real thing, and when they were acting upon it you could not call them hypocrites; but it was not the right thing. They were animated by impulse alone, not by principle and conviction. Their religion was a thing of the surface. In the parable of the Sower they are represented by the seed which fell upon rocky ground. "The same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it; yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for awhile; for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended" (Matt. 13: 5, 6, 20, 21). They are represented also by those who built a tower, and were unable to finish (Luke 14: 28-32.—Wm. M. Taylor.

The wise virgins are, of course, true Christians, whose hearts have been renewed, who are filled with the love of Jesus, and live in the spirit; who, "in their union to the Holy Spirit, formed by their faith in Christ, and maintained by their constant study of his Word, their habitual dependence on him in prayer, and their continuous obedience to his commands, have that unfailing supply of strength by which they are sustained in every duty and prepared for every emergency."

THE COMING OF THE BRIDEGROOM. This parable will obtain a wider application if we keep in memory that, while it is quite true that there is one great coming of the Lord at the last, yet not the less does he come in all the great crises of his church, at each new manifestation of his Spirit; and at each of these, too, there is a separation among those who are called by his name, into wise and foolish, as they are spiritually alive or dead. Thus at Pentecost, when by his Spirit he returned to his church, he came; the prudent in Israel went in with him to the feast; the foolish tarried without. Thus, too, he came at the Reformation. Each of these was an example of what shall be more signally fulfilled at the end. Trench. He comes to us at every great crisis of our lives: at the opening of some great opportunity, in the hour of great trouble, in the hour of death.

CHARACTER REVEALED BY EMERGENCY. It is in moments of surprise that a man's true self comes out to view. Nothing will more correctly reveal what is in a man than the coming upon him of some crushing and unlooked-for crisis (as peril of army to general, or storm to mariner, affliction, commercial crisis). It was a shrewd remark of Andrew Fuller, that a man has only as much religion as he can command in trial. In mercy the minor surprises have been sent to show ourselves to us before the last and greatest one.—Wm. M. Taylor.

"But go ye rather to them that sell:" to the only and true source of supply. In the interpretation this can only be to God and Jesus Christ, who alone can give the new heart and the true preparation for heaven. "The true interpretation is found in Isa. 55: 1 and Rev. 3: 18."

Spiritual Qualities not Transferable. Personal character cannot be given by one man to another. You cannot give me your patience to support me in the hour of my anguish. I cannot give you my courage for the discharge of dangerous duty. There is much, indeed, we can and ought to do for each other. But we cannot give to any one the qualities which we ourselves possess, but in which he is deficient.—Wm. M. Taylor.

And the Door was Shut. 1. There are abundant opportunities and pressing invitations to enter the kingdom. 2. There comes a time when it is too late to enter. 3. This is a fact of nature, as well as a truth of the Word. There is a tendency to fix the character, so that one will not change. In the misuse of the body there comes a time when it is impossible to ward off disease. Age comes on, and it is impossible to learn music or a new business. 4 We shut the door against ourselves. No one but ourselves is to blame for our not entering. 5. We shut the door by neglecting to be prepared to enter.

"I know you not:" I do not recognize you as belonging to the procession and to the guests. They had not obtained the oil; they were not prepared to enter. To the marriage feast (heaven) none are admitted without light (holiness), which can be sustained only by oil (divine grace) (Eph. 5: 5; Heb. 12: 14).—Abbott. The door was shut as much for the security and joy, without interruption, of those within, as for the lasting exclusion of those without (Gen. 7: 16; Rev. 3: 12).—Trench.

"Watch, therefore," etc.: for in a very important sense the Son of man is coming to us every hour of every day. Each new hour brings us new duties and new responsibilities from him. Have we risen to the occasion? There is a constant process going on within us, either of invigoration or deterioration; and if we meet Christ continually, as he comes to us in the common duties of a common day, we shall not be dismayed at last, when he comes in state, with the flaming outriders of his Majesty.—William M. Taylor.

THE ACIDS OF FRUITS.

Mr. George W. Johnson, in Chemistry of the World, in describing the vegetable food of the world, says the grateful acid of the rhubarb leaf arises from the malic acid and bin-oxalate of potash which it contains; the acidity of the lemon, orange and other species of the genus citrus is caused by the abundance of citric acid which their juice contains; that of the cherry, plum, apple and pear, from the malic acid in their pulp; that of gooseberries and currents, black, red and white, from a mixture of malic and citric acids; that of the grape from a mixture of malic and tartaric acids; that of the mango from citric acid and a very fugitive essential oil; that of the tamarind from a mixture of citric, malic and tartaric acids; the flavor of the asparagus from aspartic acid, found also in the root of the marsh-mallow; and that of the cucumber from a peculiar poisonous ingredient called fungin, which is found in all fungi, and is the cause of the cucumber being offensive to some stomachs. It will be observed that rhubarb is the only fruit which contains bin-oxalate of potash in conjunction with an acid. It is this ingredient which renders this fruit so wholesome at the early commencement of the summer, and this is one of the wise provisions of nature for supplying a blood purifier at a time when it is likely to be most needed. Beet root owes its nutritious quality to about nine per cent of sugar which it contains, and its flavor to a peculiar substance containing nitrogen mixed with pectic acid. The carrot owes its fattening powers also to the sugar, and its flavor to a peculiar fatty oil; the horse-radish derives its flavor and blistering power from a volatile acrid oil. The Jerusalem artichoke contains fourteen and a half per cent of sugar and three per cent of inulin (a variety of starch), besides gum and a peculiar substance to which its flavor is owing; and lastly, garlic, and the rest of the onion family, derive their peculiar odor from a yellowish, volatile, acrid oil; but they are nutritious from containing nearly half their weight of gummy and glutinous substances not yet clearly defined.

SUNFLOWERS AND MALARIA.

The sunflower has long been popularly supposed to be a preventive of malarious diseases. The opinion is well founded, and for the reason that hairy, soft-leaved plants are supposed to greedily take up malarial gases. The sunflower has broad leaves, and in relation to the size of the plant a large leaf surface. The leaves of the sunflower were long considered to be a specific for asthma, when dried and smoked in a pipe. The value in this direction has not yet been successfully controverted. We recommend the planting of the sunflower freely about the house in all regions where malarial emanations are likely to be found. This is always the case in all prairie regions, or those when the original sod is turned. The seeds are produced in profusion, form a fattening food for poultry, and may be fed to all farm animals occasionally with profit. The stalks broken up make excellent kindlings for fires, and thus every portion of the plant may be put to good use.

When raised in regular field rows, plant four feet apart between rows by twelve inches in the row. Cultivate precisely as you would Indian corn. When the heads are ripe cut and carry to the threshing floor, or, cut partially off and let them hang down on the stalk until dry and then thresh. The stalks may be cut next to the ground and stacked up until wanted for fuel.—Farm Field and Stockman.

HOW TO TRAVEL SAFELY IN AFRICA.

Professor Oscar Lenz has just returned from Africa, and looks none the worse for his long and fatiguing journey. He has remained in excellent health since he left Europe, and this he attributes to his observance of dietary rules. He never ate raw fruit, or drank unboiled water. He lived mostly on rice, chicken, and tea. Wine and spirits he did not touch. He was also careful to avoid bathing in the rivers and pools of clear, cool water, so tempting to travelers, but which so often give deadly chills. He dressed in flannels, and exposed himself as little as possible to night air. In this way he passed unscathed through regions infected with marsh fevers, ague and small pox.

Almost the whole of his journey across the African Continent was performed on foot. In general the demeanor of the natives in all regions was most friendly. He always made it a point to avoid anything that might alarm them. He exhibited no weapons, and endeavored to show by his manner and language, and by the ready offer of presents, that he came as a friend. It is his boast that he has never had to use a firearm for defence against a human being.

HOW HE SAVED A CHOKING CHILD.

A correspondent writing from Reno, Nev., to the Sacramento Union, tells how he saved the life of a child. He writes: "I was engaged in hauling wood from a timber ranch to Austin, Reese River, Nevada. There was a house over the summit from the above place, where resided two families belonging to the wood-choppers, and on arriving in sight of the house a woman came out and beckoned me to make haste, that something was wrong. I did so, and just in time, for the other woman came out holding a child in her arms, apparently dead. It was black in the face. She told me the child had been eating pine-nuts, and had got a shell in its throat, had choked, and was dying. I immediately got a piece of board about four feet long and placed it across the door-sill. She sat the child on one end and I tipped the other, making a sudden jar which caused the shell to pass downward, and gave the child immediate relief. No person can imagine how overjoyed that mother was for saving her only child. I know of several cases in which this process has proved successful."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1888.

NEW ORLEANS LEADS THE LIST.

To no postoffice in the United States are so many copies of the Cynosure sent as to New Orleans. February 1st fifteen names were on our list there; two-thirds from our ministers' fund; now there are a hundred and over, and nearly all subscribed for on the spot. Bro. Davidson sends a list every week, and the reform goes on from strength to strength. The ministers' fund sent about twenty copies during 1887. They helped to the National Convention; the Convention helped to this grand list; and this will help the churches out of the lodge rut. This work we must continue to our utmost ability. As fast as the fund grows (see page 13) the Cynosure is sent on to the colored pastors. Let us put the paper in the hands of a thousand before June.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW IBERIA, La., March 29, 1888.

I have not only conversed with the city officials and leading citizens here, but have been shaved by five different barbers to get ideas and information from the bottom of society as well as from the top.

My hopes for the future of the United States increase as my acquaintance with the South is enlarged. There is less difference between the people of the two sections than I had supposed. There are patriots and philanthropists here as well as in the North, but the debris of slavery and the war have given the South far more difficulties to surmount; and there are as well as white here.

About a year since, a worthless Negro near where I write, had a wife who supported him by her labor, while he spent his time gambling. He had not even the excuse of drunkenness, but cruelly beat his wife to make her give him money to gamble with. She had 75 cents, and he wanted it. She refused to let him have it, as she wanted bread for the family. He went home from the gambling hell, broke and crazed with the gambling furor; and, as she refused to get him the money, he got a rope and heavy rawhide, tied her up and cut her up horribly. As she was either stunned and senseless by the scourging, or resolved not to get him the money, (none but their little girl was present) he got a razor and cut her throat from ear to ear. The neighbors found her in that ghastly condition, dead, and the rope, razor and rawhide lying on the floor in her blood. He is now in States prison under sentence for life. Why he was not hung does not appear. But it is noticeable that people, where human life is cheap, and murders and lynchings common, shrink from inflicting death when demanded by justice and the law of God, when there is no popular or personal rage to urge to do it. Then Louisiana is the only State whose laws license lottery gambling; and the lesser gambling hells are still open here. To hang their victims would reflect on the mills which turn out such demoniac work.

This wife-murderer is not the only specimen of Negro depravity. Many go to the saloons as soon as they get a shilling for their labor, and white men sell them liquor. I have been in the court-house an hour or two for several days and most of the cases tried, while I was there, were against blacks for petty larceny. The Negroes work for liquor and steal for bread; and it would be instructive to compare the license money paid by the saloons, and the criminal expenses paid by the parish (county) to punish their thieving, hunger-bitten customers.

WHITE ROUGHS.

A gassy, swaggering barber, who passes for a white man, said to me: "A white man took a nigger to a soda fountain, and called for two glasses of soda. The clerk told him niggers were not allowed to drink soda there. Had I been there, I should have given the Negro a glass of soda, and broke the glass over the white man's head." (The white man was Mr. Jerome Howe, and the colored man was a respected minister of the Gospel.)

As the barber got under way in talk he said: "We went down to Thibodeaux parish last November and put a parcel of them niggers where they never'll come back to trouble white folks."

"What had they done?" I asked.

"They struck for wages."

"Did you kill them for striking?"

"D—n them, we killed them for fun," said he. "They are reptiles: there's nothing human about them."

A night or two afterward a Baptist missionary woman called on us, who said she had been all over the parish of Thibodeaux, and had held meetings among the people and knew them well. This was her story: She said the planters in that parish had worked the Negroes, as when they were slaves, for what they chose to give them, thinking it beneath them to bargain with Negroes. The planters made their own terms among themselves. An agent of the Knights of Labor initiated them and their "Master" ordered them to strike. The poor creatures obeyed; quit the plantations and went to the village; and outside Knights sent them supplies to live on. The planters felt or feigned fears of an insurrection, though not one Negro of them all had a gun. The planters applied to Gov. McEnery, who ordered out the militia to "quell the insurrection." A force was gathered from Iberia and up as far as to Shreveport, and went down to Thibodeaux, seized colored people in houses, unarmed and unorganized, singly, and by twos and threes; took them into the streets and told them to "run;" and shot them as they ran. And once at it, they shot every colored man they met till, our missionary said, no one knew how many were killed. They would have killed more, but humane white people secreted and saved many. She knew one white woman who secreted and saved eleven, and those who were saved fled the parish. Others went back to the plantations to work under the planters.

This Baptist missionary woman is sustained by a respectable missionary society in New York, and is reputed a woman of piety and veracity by a multitude of people of the various religious denominations. Her narrative confirms the story of the barber, given above, of his own exploits.

REMARKS.

1. The Haddock murder and screening of his slayers in Sioux City, Iowa, equalled in infamy, though not in extent, this slaughter of unarmed people in Thibodeaux parish. The Gambrell murder by Hamilton in Mississippi is a similar case.

2. There were humane people in Thibodeaux who abhorred that wholesale butchery; so there are all over the South.

3. The murdered were Knights of Labor obeying orders. And Mr. Powderly recognized black Knights at Richmond, Va., and says, "A wrong done to one is done to all." What have he and his Knights done for the families of these poor creatures? Have they even petitioned President Cleveland to send a marshall there?

4. How charmingly secret societies protect labor and laborers!

MISCEGENATION.

Hon. Fred. Douglass, reputed to be worth some hundred thousand dollars, married Helen Pitts, a handsome white woman, and Grover Cleveland, Democratic President of the United States, notified him of a diplomatic dinner, given to the ministers of the governments of the world; and that he (Douglass and lady) were expected to be guests, and they were. Some of us remember when Democratic mobs assailed Abolitionists with the hue and cry "Amalgamation!"—though a few years before, Richard M. Johnson, Democratic Vice President, had a family of colored children by his slave-woman, whom he recognized in public as his children. It did not injure Col. Johnson's popularity with the Democrats. Yellow Chinamen marry white women; and Major Bridger has, or recently had, daughters by a squaw of the Snake tribe of Indians, in the high schools of Missouri. Women teachers sent South by missionary societies to teach colored children were hissed and shunned if they "associated" with the parents of their scholars; and a Democratic justice of the peace dragged Rev. George Storrs from his knees while praying in an Abolition meeting, and good Democrats justified him with the cry of "Amalgamation!"

I am writing here in a town of intelligent American people who would turn pale if they were suspected or accused of "associating" with people called "colored," though it might be difficult to tell whether they were colored or white people. As people are, and of right ought to be, free to choose or refuse their associates, this State caste feeling would do no hurt if it was not carried to absolute persecution and proscription, and establishing a state of society conflicting with the law of Christ, whose kingdom forbids caste. An iron law or custom, as in Asia, putting one class or set of people above another, lifts up vice with one hand and strangles virtue with the other. In such society, a girl exalts her standing by prostituting herself to a man of the upper caste; and if the man has property, he does not degrade himself by the whoredom which is blasted by woe-trumpets from the beginning of God's Word to the end.

In my Southern travels I know of many cases where men have raised children by yellow or dark-faced concubines and lose no credit with women who profess to be Christian ladies; but if smitten by conscience and God's Word, those men attempt to remove the brand of bastardy from their guiltless children, by marrying their mothers, these would-be ladies brand the attempt to obey the law of God and mercy to the children with opprobrium!

If this matter is sifted to the bottom it amounts to this: When Douglass married Helen Pitts, every marriageable colored girl feared that if it became fashionable for black men to marry white women, their chances for marriage would be diminished, and every colored mother who had marriageable daughters, was enraged at Douglass, as one doctor hates another who gets his patients; and white women prefer to wink at whoredom with colored women for a like selfish reason. They do not wish persons now beneath them should share honorable marriage with themselves, lest if they should equal them in virtue and intelligence, a white face should cease to be a badge of superiority.

But this rage and rancor in white women or black, always defeats its own end. This violent hatred of colored complexion during slavery, has begun to whiten the faces of the colored race in the South, while in the North, in all the States where I have traveled and observed, where the law of Christ regulates society, people consult their taste and taste is so far governed by popular sentiment that such mixed marriage is exceedingly rare. "Godliness is profitable, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

AT HOME AGAIN.

If the readers of the Cynosure had seen and heard all that my eyes and ears have beheld and heard in the last two months, they would be filled with devout thanksgiving to God and hope for the country. We shall endeavor to lend them our eyes and ears. As the jar of car-riding night and day is still in our nervous system, we shall attempt but little now. Next week we will give them an address on Congregationalism; especially its decline from the first to the sixth denomination in the United States, read before the Louisiana State Congregational Association, New Orleans, April 4th inst; with other grave matters.

Had our readers been with us and affected by the "things seen" as we have been, these are some of the impressions they would have received:

1. Devout gratitude to God for the overthrow of slavery. There is now, in one town visited, a man who whipped a slave to death. The slave, to avoid the torture of a savage overseer, would run into the swamps, and live among the alligators and moccasin snakes. He was taken after six months absence. The owner's son told him he would kill him; took him to the stable, pinioned and beat him till he ceased to breathe. The murderer is now a member of the Episcopal church in good standing in the community!

2. You would still see indescribable and unspeakable oppression of the blacks still extant. Ku-kluxism still exists, and,

"Even in its ashes live its wonted fires."

The old French slave-holding custom of concubinage is still practiced by prominent whites. And when colored churches insist that such mothers shall marry or withdraw from their communion, if the white fathers yield to the law of God and love of their children, and consent to marry and so put their offspring within the protection of legal wedlock, they are threatened with notices to leave. And white women who wish to be considered "ladies" are among the most bitter assailants of such attempts to purify churches and protect children from the curse of bastardy—which children are often handsomer and better than their own! Yet those very "ladies"(?) have made no objection to associating with the men who practice this concubinage with the blacks. But thanks to God and the fall of slavery, the best and often the most prominent men gave us this information, and say that the law of God is displacing these evils of the old slavery regime.

3. Had you been with us, strange to tell, you would find in your heart an actual sympathy with and compassion for the persecuting whites. If you read Secretary Stoddard's information gathered from the book stands in New Orleans, you will see that the white masses South were dragged into the war by the Masonic lodges, which invented facts to inflame and deceive them—and that both armies, Union and Confederate, were ruled by the lodge till they came to a few men like Grant. And when these Confederate troops came home to poverty unutterable, they found the State and municipal governments in the hands of Northern men like Wm. Pitt Kellogg of Star Route notoriety, elected by ex-slaves who could not read their ballots! And the Union officers, who were Masons, helped drag the Southern whites into the war, and then put them under the power of their ignorant slaves. What would we of the North have done if we had found ourselves in their predicament? I could give names of Northern Masons, Generals in the Union army, who went into convention in New Orleans, and voted to justify the shooting of 400 Republican voters—which Gen. Sheridan reported to Grant as "premeditated slaughter!" "Every despotic system," said Sheridan, the orator, in the impeachment of Warren Hastings, "is twice cursed. While it exists, it is responsible for the misery it engenders; and when broken up, as it must be, it causes all the horrors which follow." The lodge hatched the rebellion, and waged the war. It took both sides in the war. And but for the Anti-masons, like Grant, would have swamped free government and given us Alexander H. Stephen's "Empire with slavery for its corner-stone." J. B.

THE WHEATON COUNCIL.

The senior editor of the Cynosure had no part in the two church councils lately held at Wheaton; wrote nothing, suggested nothing for either of them. He first saw the result of the second council in the New Orleans Times-Democrat, telegraphed to that paper. The councils were called to recognize the Wheaton College church. The illegal expulsion of the editor by a church, and his ten year's suspension by Elgin Association were not considered, and he is now a member of that body under suspension, and quietly awaiting its action.

The council itself was presented by the associate editor in last week's Cynosure. It was evidently called of God and conducted in the Spirit of Christ; and its moderator, Dr. Goodwin, has laid every member of the churches under obligations of gratitude for his fidelity and ability. The paper prepared to be signed as an end of strife had already, in fact, been signed years ago; but it was at once signed and returned again as requested by the Council. Now all that remains is to provide for a thorough visitation of all the churches and to seek a general revival of religion, without which no reform work or action of councils will do any permanent good.

REMOVAL OF THE "AMERICAN."

In the editorial notes of the American for April 4th, we read:

"The headquarters of the American, after May 1st, will be at 930 Pennsylvania Avenue, in the building of the Central Union Mission. We are now publishing three papers, the aggregate circulation of which is 10,000. We have in contemplation one more, of which we shall speak by and by."

We are in receipt of letters asking about the above removal. The above notes will explain the matter and answer the letters.

When Prof. Bailey left Wheaton College, where he was a popular instructor, he gave as his reason that he "felt called to the work of an evangelist," which work he followed for a time; and he is pursuing in Washington, as the above shows, the same line of labor. He is soon to issue four papers. He now issues three from the N. C. A. Washington building. He belongs to the Assembly Presbyterian church, which fellowships Masonry; and a few remarks against the lodge some time since by Bro. O. C. Bailey in the Central Union Mission produced an explosion. The American of late reports some favorable changes by a "silent revolution;" but there are no such reports of enthusiasm against the lodge as Bro. Hinman and Secretary Stoddard first sent from the capital, and if the Mission's gospel wagon should teach a lodge-excluding religion in the streets of Washington it needs no prophet to tell us that that wagon would cease to run.

Now the Washington building was bought with money entrusted to the N. C. A. Board to teach a lodge-excluding religion; to have religious meetings in that building where Free Methodists, Wesleyans, Covenanters, Quakers and others can speak and pray against the lodge and not be considered intruders or fanatics. This is the reason of the change. The Board of Directors last September notified the American Publishing Company that at the close of the present engagement, June 1, the N. C. A. would retain the income of the building. They have never ordered or requested Prof. Bailey to leave, but insisted that the work of the National Christian Association must be done in that building; and that work is a lodge-excluding Christianity. Prof. Bailey in "the building of the Central Union Mission" will be at home. The American will not cease to condemn the lodge, and the three other papers will seek to promote the salvation of men in union with Christians who fellowship Masons and members of other secret orders.

In brief, the change going on at Washington is merely the overflowing of our work into new channels. The Cynosure expects, as it always has done, to second and sustain Prof. Bailey's able writing against the secret orders. But it will also sustain the National Board of Directors in their endeavor to consecrate the Washington building as was originally designed to a religion at our national capital which will speak, pray and vote openly against the lodge.

Our Portrait for April was postponed, as noticed last week, expecting that the engraver would finish a fine likeness of the beloved Prof. Woodsmall in season for this number. He has not done so, and that portrait will not appear until the first May issue. The sketch and likeness of this week well represent the character and features of an earnest patriot, Christian and reformer, who, though not so well known to the Cynosure readers, deserves to be ever remembered by them for noble qualities of mind and heart.

Lodge Assassins at Work.—Since Bro. Countee's escape from lodge enemies in Memphis we have understood that colored members of the secret orders were ready to Morganize any one of their number who should separate himself from them, and oppose them. Bro. F. J. Davidson, whose voluntary efforts for over a year in Louisiana have been known to our readers, has, since the National Convention, redoubled his labors, and proves to be a dilligent and efficient worker. His late providential escape at Amite City is told in his letter elsewhere. In another letter, written on the 4th inst., he says he has received a letter from the white citizens of Amite City "denouncing the actions of the colored Odd fellows and requesting me to send printed notices to be placed up, and come back and they will meet me at the depot and assure me protection." Thank God for such friendliness. Let the colored brethren also stand by the truth and those who proclaim it, and there will soon be but one opinion in the town on the lodge.

Later.—A letter dated on the 7th, received as we prepare for press, is very hopeful. He says: "I have received a letter from Rev. R. Kendricks of Amite City, urging me to return and lecture on secrecy, stating that the good citizens have got the names of all the last Sunday would-be murderers, and intend to prosecute them to the fullest extent of law. Take courage, brethren, 'the battle is the Lord's.'"

Bishop Ireland of the Catholic church was brought from St. Paul to Chicago last week to give a free lecture in the finest hall in the city on temperance. The daily press, which has no love for the Prohibition movement, gave abundant free advertising of the meeting and printed the address next morning almost entire. Their conversion to temperance seemed astonishing, but was explained when it appeared the Bishop argued for high license. Who paid the several hundred dollars expenses of that meeting?

Last Friday, on the second day of the annual Mormon Conference at Salt Lake City, urgent calls were made for the payment of tithing to meet heavy church expenses. Rudger Clawson, who had been convicted of polygamy and pardoned by President Cleveland after three years' imprisonment, said he was convicted for obeying the law of God, and he saw 300 of his brethren come there for the same offense, and 200 go from prison. "But I feel first rate now. I am not one whit discouraged, and have just as much faith, yea, even greater, than four years ago; and if necessary I would offer my life for the Gospel's sake. When Christ's servants go to prison rather than obey an unjust law, Christ will be with them. The Lord has revealed to us the principle of celestial marriage, and by his help we will honor it, and not make a promise to abandon this any more than any other principle of our faith. One is just as necessary and good as another, and all should be honored alike. And this I ask in the name of Jesus. Amen." The voice of the meeting was for polygamy now and ever, Statehood, constitution, courts and Congress to the contrary notwithstanding.

—The good town of Wheaton rejoices in two victories in answer to prayer. The church council, by removing all the questions of difference of ten years ago, and removing the charges against the former administration of the College, was directed in answer to prayer. Last Monday at the village election the license party gave up the fight, and put up no ticket. Every vote was "straight." An ex-saloon keeper was lately fined $400 for selling hard cider. It was his second offense and the fine was big enough to stop him. The Wheaton friends must now move on to new victories for their faith.

—The last number of the Earnest Christian of Rochester, N. Y., has an able article by Rev. A. H. Springstein of Michigan on his "Induction into the Masonic Lodge," which would be a valuable tract for general circulation.

—Saturday last two staunch friends of the N. C. A. and liberal supporters of its work passed from earth—Peter Minton of Ohio and Evan Jones of Illinois. "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Among the delegates to the Illinois State Prohibition Convention soon to be held in Springfield are the Cynosure publisher, W. I. Phillips, and Rev. Wm. Morrow of Bloom, Ill.

—Darius Reynolds and his wife of Belvidere, Ill., are on their way home from Florida, where they have passed the winter. This remarkable old couple are filling well the measure of their days with good work for the Master.

—Rev. Dr. J. G. Carson has resigned his professorship in the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Xenia, Ohio. It is surmised by the friends of Monmouth College that President McMichael will be taken from them to fill the vacancy.

—Mrs. F. W. Capwell of Dale, New York, has been for several weeks quite low with fever, so that there were doubts of the result. Her daughter, a trained and skillful nurse, came on from New York city, and rendered most excellent service, so that entire recovery is now hoped for.

—Bro. A. D. Zaraphonithes, the Greek missionary, reached Chicago with his interesting family last Tuesday. They are spending a week in Wheaton with old friends, and on Sabbath Bro. Zaraphonithes spoke in the W. C. T. U. Gospel meeting and in the College chapel. Mrs. Zaraphonithes will remain with her relatives in Peoria county, Illinois, while he is raising a fund to establish an industrial school in Greece.

—A letter from Bro. W. B. Stoddard, Ohio agent, says that Peter Minton of Millville, who has for years been among the strongest supporters of the Ohio State Association, is very low with erysipelas, the disease affecting his head, and rendering hope of his recovery exceeding small. The brethren in Ohio will learn this serious news with genuine regret. God in mercy may yet turn back a disease that seems to baffle human skill.

—Rev. Rufus Johnson, who has been connected with the Midland ever since the removal of that journal from St. Louis in 1886, has retired, and John J. Ashenhurst of Wooster, Ohio, becomes associate editor and business manager. Bro. Johnson has had considerable experience in newspaper work, having published local papers at Blanchard, Iowa, and elsewhere. He has always been faithful to the testimony of the United Presbyterian church, against secretism, and can look back upon a good record for Christ.

—Mrs. Irene Stoddard, mother of our General Agent, celebrated her 93d birthday at his home in Wheaton on the 31st of March. In the afternoon she entertained a company of elderly women, Mrs. Prof. Baker, Mrs. S. B. Allen, Mrs. Dodge, and others, and in the evening walked half a mile to the College to a concert and back. Mrs. Stoddard came from Connecticut to Illinois in 1836 and has for over fifty years been connected with the Baptist church. She retains her mental faculties with great clearness and may be counted on the right side of every great moral question. She continues her habit of early rising and spends the whole day in reading, knitting and other useful employment, believing that it is a sin for any one, even at her age, to waste time in idleness or to indulge in "foolish jesting which is not convenient." The anti-secrecy and prohibitory movements have in her a warm supporter, and the colored people a true friend, and no worthy object appeals to her in vain for sympathy or aid according to her means; and she patiently waits for the time of her departure to be forever with the Lord.

The Home.

HYMN OF REST.

Come, all ye weary, worn, and sin-defiled,
The day of whose deliverance hath not smiled—
Who toil on, sorrow-laden, sore distressed,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest!

Come, ye who seek, through all the world of sin,
The precious treasure only found within;
Clasp your eternal jewel of the breast,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest!

Come, ye for whom the human love hath proved
A longing to be infinitely loved,
Whose hearts yet hover round some empty nest,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest!

Come, ye who suffer through the lone, long night,
And grope for day with sad, tear-blinded sight;
I am the sun that sets not in the west,
I bring you healing, and will bring you rest!

Come all who bear the cross where I have trod;
Who climb the same ascent to God,
Bowed down to see the prints my feet have pressed,
Come unto me, and I will give you rest!

When storms arise, and seas of trouble roll,
I will be near to save the sinking soul;
Each wave that breaks shall lift, dilate your breast,
And in their motion—I will give you rest.

THE WILLFUL GIFTS AND THE DISCONCERTED DEACONS.

It was a lovely June Sabbath, one of those days when we say with Lowell, "June, dear June, now God be praised for June!" To walk or drive to church was delightful through spicy country roads, under the arched ways made by the woven tree-tops. What an air of calm over the landscape, and how fresh were the maidens, and how strong were the young men who gathered with the old men and children at the church!

It was not long after the congregation had disposed themselves quietly, before a shade of disappointment might have been observed creeping over the assembled worshipers. An audience has its phases of expression no less truly than a human countenance, and sometimes shows its moods quite as unrestrainedly as a willful child. The disquieting element was the fact that a stranger occupied the pulpit, instead of the young and popular minister who had pleased them so much of late. Besides, the hymns and the prayer began to indicate the theme of the day—one not so agreeable to this congregation as it should have been.

When, arriving at the sermon, the speaker announced himself as the agent of the Foreign Missionary Society, the disappointment turned to dissatisfaction. The day seemed to grow warmer. Fans began to flutter. Some of the older, harder-worked brethren seemed to court repose in their attitudes as far as the unfamiliarity of their Sabbath suits and the unyielding uprightness of the pewback would allow. The speaker began to feel the loss of unspoken sympathy and quick responsiveness from his audience. In fact, an onlooker would not have imagined that the most inspiring theme on which a human tongue could utter divine and immortal thoughts, was the theme to which these people were listening. There is a dullness unconnected with a want of hearing in the natural ear. Had the inward ear of that people been open on this particular morning they might have heard sweet and wonderful notes struck, and listened to some spiritual chords, such as are for the most part alien to our earth; for he who spoke was a deeply taught disciple in the things that belong to our peace, though, like St. Paul, in presence he was base and contemptible among them.

Were there none who felt a thrill of sympathetic love as he pleaded for those who had never so much as heard that there were any "good things?" Some indeed drank in his words, and saw in each dusky, debased idolater a pearl for whom the great Merchantman gave his all—a soul that might shine like a star for ever and ever; but for the most part this church was uneducated in the wonderful science of world conversion, unaccomplished in the art of giving, unactuated by the knowledge that "giving is worship."

The sermon at length ended. The contribution plates were passed. Up to this time everything had been much as usual in the service, unless, indeed, there was a greater degree of apathy than sometimes prevails. Still the increasing heat of the day, and the matter, and the man, would explain that, but not the phenomena I am about to describe. As I said, the plates were passed. Deacon Jones came first to Mr. Blake's pew, one of the wealthy men of the church. This gentleman had taken from his pocket-book a two-dollar bill. He laid it on the plate, saying to himself as he did so, "I hope this will last one while. It is very uncertain where all this money goes to; but it will not do for me to let the plate pass."

What was his surprise, while the thought was in his mind, to see the bill, in the most mysterious manner, silently leave the plate and waft itself back to his pocket-book, still open in his hand. His first thought was; "Well, I am glad to get my money again." His next: "I wonder if anybody saw that?" Glancing around he saw no evidence that anybody was regarding him or his actions. The deacon went on as composedly as ever, and Mr. Blake felt intensely relieved. Still no bill was on the plate. Miss Blake, the eldest daughter, next deposited a fifty-cent piece, unconsciously thinking: "It's just so much gone," when a sharp rap on the rim of her porte-monnaie, and a metallic click revealed the half-dollar again in her possession. With a quick blush, she said, "I will not try it again; somebody might see me." So she quickly slipped it into the pages of the hymn book in her lap.

Miss Jennie, as youngest, usually brought up the rear in the matter of the family giving. Her's was a ten-cent piece. She put it in without a thought about the money or its destination—thoughts enough of a certain kind she had; just now they were so concentrated on a certain somebody in the choir, that she hardly noticed how quickly the little piece was her's again.

Now it was Mrs. Blake's turn, and a dollar to be sacrificed to the cause lay in her hand. "How often these collections do come! There's our Woman's Society, too, to which I am pledged."

"But what is this?" she thought, breathlessly, "Deacon Jones has gone by without my money; I was sure I put that money on the plate. Yet here it is in my hand."

As you see, at this rate, the plate was not filling very fast. Directly behind the Blakes sat Farmer Freeman. He had not had a very successful year. This past week a mortgage had fallen due, and he certainly had reason for feeling pretty poor. However, for decency's sake, he had laid hold of a very slippery quarter, and had just put it on the plate, when, seeing its emptiness, he said to himself:

"I had two minds about that quarter, and ef I'd a seen that Lawyer Blake didn't give anything, I'd a kep' it anyway! Ef he can't give, I guess I can't!"

While the thought was in his mind, back came the furtive quarter, as if in answer to his unspoken idea.

The mysterious connection between the inner, half-conscious thoughts and motives of these various givers, and the return action of the money, I did not immediately perceive. It was not long, however, before some old words seemed to revive in my memory. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." "Of every man that giveth willingly with his heart ye shall take an offering."

So far in effect there had been no offering. At least the plate was as bare as when the deacon began his round. I watched with some anxiety to see how he would fare as he went on his way. The farmer's wife came next, and she was ready.

"How little it is," she said, as she laid her modest ten cent piece on the empty plate. "And the first thing there, too. But it is my own earning for this very Sabbath, from that extra egg money. I want it to go for Bibles, and to help buy some of those 'Wonderful Books' the missionary told of. I am sure a Bible will comfort the heathen. It does me."

The diminutive disk of silver lay smiling up at the deacon, and he was cheered.

After passing several pews with varying results as to the aggregate sum, the surprised people feeling a sense of discomfort and embarrassment as their money promptly found its way again to their pockets, Deacon Jones came to a little bowed figure in black—not a blackest black, but a black from which time had drawn its darkest particles, and left it gray and weather-beaten. It was a hand in a poor glove that took a quarter out of a shabby purse, and when it came out, nothing was left, and it was quite possible nothing would be there for some time after, "for she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living."

What was that little halo that seemed to hover over that quarter of a dollar as it lay in a rest of undisturbed content on the not too-well filled plate? The halo began to glow and expand into letters of light, and I spelled out this sentence, "For the love of Christ constraineth me."

So the deacons passed on down the aisles. Astonishment, not unmixed with a kind of wholesome fear similar to that experienced by Joseph's brethren when they found their money in their sack's mouth, prevailed. Each individual who was so unexpectedly refunded was alone aware of it. Others saw but the generally meager look of the plate.

Now, on Deacon Smith's plate is deposited an envelope by an elderly man. No outward sign indicates to the curious how much or what it contains. Within is a check for $100. The envelope, with its generous inclosure, makes no movement to return to the kindly-faced gentleman. When he extended his hand the thought flashed into his mind: "What a bubble on the surface of my unspeakable gratitude is this! How impossible for me to pay in the most infinitessimal degree for God's great, free gift to me?"

And these old words rang in his ear:

"When I stand with Christ in glory,
Looking o'er life's finished story,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know,
Not till then, how much I owe!"

"Yes, I am his—body, soul, money, all belonging to my faithful Saviour. Stewards of the manifold grace of God, he calls us. Lord, use this money to thy own glory!"

I could hardly keep both deacons in view at once, and I had been watching the one nearest me. Now my eye was caught by the glitter of a five-dollar gold piece on the other side of the church. It had no sooner touched the plate, than it rebounded as by a secret spring to the hand of a very fashionably dressed young man, evidently from the city. He was a young and successful broker from New York, spending the Sabbath in his native town.

He had not been aware that this was Missionary Sabbath, and consequently had not been expecting to give.

"However," he said to himself, "I sha'n't feel it. That was a pretty large per cent I made this week."

"No," the money seemed to say in returning; "you will not feel it, for I shall not go."

In one of the last pews were two of the brightest, most eager little faces that ever watched for a contribution plate, and it did seem as if the deacon never would get to them! Their pennies almost flew into the deacon's eyes in their indecorous haste to reach the plate. Those were well-earned pennies, and more than that they were intelligent pennies, for the little people had somehow made them understand that they were to go far across the water, to buy the Book that tells how the loving Saviour had taken little children in his arms and blessed them to give to little ones who had never heard about the wonderful and beautiful things that he did. I thought then of that word of the apostle: "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity." So, again, the children proved another word, even that of the Lord himself, that we must become as little children, if we would enter in, even to the least act of giving in a way acceptable to him.

It had been a curious scene to me as I looked at the mysterious process, safe in my own obscurity. I was fairly fascinated with the desire to see how each particular piece of money would deport itself. These were all people I knew well, and although it was possible to say pretty accurately how each one's money would behave, yet there were some great surprises to me. And the number of thoroughly surprised people was not limited to one!

It usually went by families I noticed. If the father's and mother's money came back to them, so did the children's. But not always. There was Captain Prescott's family. While the gifts of the other members of the family flew back with alacrity to them, the money his daughter gave remained. Still that was natural. She always was different from the others, always thoughtful of others, while her father—well, my fancy darted back to the streets of Jerusalem, and the long-robed Pharisee that I saw standing on the corner of the street with his trumpeter before him, had exactly Captain Prescott's features under his turban.

"That they may have glory of men." "To be seen of men." "Their reward."

I certainly heard these words, but I do not know who could have spoken them.

At last the collecting was done. The final hymn was sung, and the congregation dispersed. There were some burning pocket-books and some burning cheeks, too, but each preserved a religious composure and kept his secret to himself.

But it was so good to get out where the air was stirring.

"How close it was in the church this morning."

"Intolerable! And then an agent!"

But I observed these remarks were made only by those who had something on their minds, like a secret that was too much for them.

Deacon Smith and Jones usually counted the money after service. A peculiar look passed between them, as the falling off in the sum became evident.

"We shall have to take up another collection to make our pledges for the year good," said Deacon Smith.

"Or else ask the Lord to make this go a good ways," said Deacon Jones.

The minister of the morning had come down from the pulpit and was standing near them.

"I believe the Lord always sorts his money at one time or another. Perhaps he has sorted this before it came into the plates," said he.

"What do you mean?" asked Deacon Jones.

"Only this. The bare material can never buy the spiritual. Gold and silver and bills must be transmuted before they can ever be the means of saving souls. That which is given without love, without heart and without prayer and consecration, without faith, may go to mission fields; but could we trace that money we should find from it no deep spiritual outcome. Could we trace a dollar of this kind we should see its fruitfulness.

"There are always two kinds of money in a contribution plate, the fruitful and the fruitless. I should not wonder if this were of the former kind."

It could not be possible that the heat of the day had overcome me, and I had been dreaming. At all events, just then I am sure I heard Deacon Smith say, as he handed the money to the minister:

"I cannot understand our having so small a contribution this morning. There was a good congregation, and our June collection is generally the largest."

The minister's reply made me feel sure that he, as well as I, had seen the whole occurrence, that I had not been dreaming; but that we had had the corner of an invisible veil lifted, and had been permitted a glimpse at those hidden and obscure mysteries of the mind, called "springs of action," and had seen their results in working.

He said, as he took the money: "Do not give yourself the least trouble on that account, Brother Smith. I sometimes feel about a small collection as I do about a small congregation on a stormy day, they are the chosen and picked ones, and I have pretty good reason to believe that this money is of the thoroughly assorted kind, and is going to do a work out of all proportion to its size."—Independent.

THE LITTLE SEEDS.

Tiny seeds, tiny seeds, under the ground,
Are you awake when the storm-winds sound?
How do you know when the snowflakes throng?
What do you dream of the winter long?

Little one, little one, warm is our bed,
Soft is the coverlet over each head.
Sometimes we dream of the birds and the bees,
The blue, sunny sky, and green, waving trees.

Spring may come early or late;
Through dark winter's blight
We'll creep to the light.
So we wait, little one, so we wait.

Tiny seeds, tiny seeds, do you not miss
The soft, sighing breeze and the sunbeam's kiss?
The chirp of the cricket, in noonday heat?
All that made summer fair and sweet?

Little one, little one, we are content,
We may not see, but the sky's o'er us bent!
Soon will the tap of the whispering rain
Tell that the Giver needs us once again.

Then be it early or late,
For each flake of snow
A flower will grow!
So we wait, little one, so we wait.

FAITHFUL FRIENDS.

Many a story is told of the noble St. Bernard having saved travelers while trying to trace their way through blinding snow, or of the gentle Newfoundland plunging into the water to rescue a little child from drowning. They have watched beside the cradles of babies and have protected households from burglars. The Newfoundland is famed for his affectionate and gentle nature, as manifested to those he loves, but if called upon to protect them he seems changed to the fiercest creature. One Newfoundland dog, which was a great pet in a household where there many little people, was given the name of "Danger," because of his watchfulness, not only at night, but in the day time as well. The home was in a retired country place, and as it was on the water's edge, strangers were very often apt to trespass. Danger would, perhaps, be lying quietly on the piazza asleep, but the sound of a step on the gravel walk aroused him at once, and if he found it to be that of one whom he did not know, but a supposed intruder, he would spring up with a ferocious growl, and was ready for action, but a word from those he knew and loved would calm him at once. Whenever the children went in bathing, Danger was also on hand, waiting on the beach for them, and he would bring them the sticks which they threw as far away in the river as they could. It seemed as if he dearly loved the water, and would never tire of swimming as long as it pleased his little friends to send him.

Another friend of these little people was a great English mastiff, and although devoted to the children, he did not so willingly allow them to pet and caress him. These huge mastiffs are of very ancient English origin, and there is also another species from Thibet. The dogs are large, powerful creatures, of ferocious natures; they, however, are very fond of their masters, but are not demonstrative.

The Newfoundland dogs are the reverse of the mastiff in disposition, for they are gentle, patient and very affectionate in their natures. They are thorough water dogs, and their power for swimming is very great. Besides the large, shaggy dog, with broad, noble head, and gentle, intelligent face, and black and white in color, is a smaller species, black, with smaller head.—Vick's Magazine.

TEMPERANCE.

RUM'S RUINOUS REIGN.

Hack! hack! hack! The dull, uncertain strokes of an unskilled workman's axe reverberated through the white birch grove, through the fiercely whirling snow of a winter's day. Strange, unwonted sight, in a land of boasted civilization! A woman swings the axe! A woman clad in a scant calico dress,ragged shoes, stockings with no bottoms, was essaying with queer little unskilled strokes, to fell the trees near the miserable wreck of a house. She worked as awkwardly as only a woman brought up to indoor work and laboring under the double infliction of pain and weakness can, sometimes stopping to press one hand to her side, and at others, to wipe her freezing tears from her blurring sight. When a tree fell she hacked till it was fitted for stove wood. Hack! hack! hack! till her children shouted again and again, "Come, mother, come; you've chopped enough; baby's starving, and we're freezing."

Despite their frenzied cries, despite the cold, despite the mortal anguish only a mother may know, she worked on till the sun went down on the short, dreary, freezing winter day. Then laying down the axe she loaded her frail arms with all they could hold of the lead-like, frozen sticks and slowly entered the house, well knowing she would not be able to leave it on the morrow. Here were her babes,her very life, one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten—each and every one dear to her noble heart as are your tender ones, favored mother, crouched over the dying fire in the black, cooling stove, bare-footed, half-naked, with hunger-pinched faces, and blue claw-like hands; some were crying vociferously, while some only moaned in low, plaintive tones of cold and hunger.

For two weeks these eleven had subsisted on the milk of one cow, and turnips. The cow had come so short of food as to be fed from their straw beds. After giving the starving children the milk and feeding the dumb giver the last armful of straw in their beds, she built a fire and sat down to warm her frozen feet. First, she took off one thin petticoat and pinned it about the shoulders of the oldest child and putting off her shoes and ragged stockings for its feet, sent it off to the wood pile to bring in the wood she had chopped.

The fire burned up bright and warm and the famished children cuddled down beside the stove under their scant bed-covers,and forgot their woes in sleep. Not so the tired, starving mother. She took a turnip and sat up to scrape it as she warmed her frozen feet. Ere the morning dawned another babe was added to the ten starving beside her.

Think of this true picture,mothers, you who have passed the fiery ordeal of motherhood amid the luxuries of warmth, food, clothes, comforts, husband, friends and physicians—think of this frail,starving, frozen woman alone with the rayless midnight and her mortal anguish. Have you forgotten with what grateful avidity you seized a cup of hot tea held by the hand of ministering friends? Contrast that moment of grateful refreshment with the empty,craving stomach of this long-famished creature, comforted only by the cold, scraped turnip,she would have perhaps given worlds for a taste of had it not then been frozen. Can you not drop a tear over this poor neighbor? My own flow like summer rain as I write.

You will ask where this "brute of a husband,"the father of eleven children,was at such a time. Hush! indignant matron! Name not one of the "lords of creation" in such a tone!

I'll whisper it in your ear; be careful your busy tongue reveal not the secret. He was only down to Passadumkeag on a little bit of a spree, lasting a couple of weeks or so! They can drink or let it alone, you know; so we must not say anything about their doing either, lest we get to saying it on the wrong side and pop over into prohibition. One of that heretical party is all this good Republican town can tolerate.

Two or three days after the new babe came to the poor woman a neighbor learned and reported her condition. A noble Scot came gallantly to her relief with food, clothes and firewood. The eager, starving children crowding about the hunger-queller could not be fed carefully enough to save them from the reaction consequent upon repletion after famine. Tears flowed so thickly over the cheeks, of sonsy Scoth build, that one poor, naked starvling got just a cake too much, and though the physician was called, its little life went out a sacrifice to the god Bacchus to whom the nations of earth deem it necessary to sacrifice so many human lives yearly.—Portland (Me.) Herald.

The consumption of beer in Germany is reported to have amounted to 41,325,000 hectolitres in 1885. This would give an average of ninety litres (about 200 pints) a year to every man, woman and child in Germany.

The Franz Brewery, at Sioux City, Iowa, managed by John Arensdorf at the time of the Haddock murder, was leased the other day to be used as a butter and egg depot. The soul of Haddock is marching on.

"A new use for the tobacco plant has been discovered. Its stem and waste, it is claimed, are equal to linen rags in the manufacture of paper." A California paper, commenting on the above, says, "Better take all the tobacco and use it in making paper, and there will be few people in poverty and rags."

There is no use in cutting down the day's labor from ten to eight hours, if the two hours gained are spent in a rum-hole. There would be no use in making arbitration compulsory, if one of the parties was likely to be kept from obeying the decision by liquor. There would be no use in handing over all the property in the world to laboring men, if they drink as they do now. They would soon dissipate it, and add nothing to the store.—N. Y. Nation.

Joseph Cook, of Boston Monday lecture fame, in "Recent Vindications of Total Abstinence," shows that Temperance Life Assurance Societies were first inaugurated in England in 1849, by Mr. R. Warner, and then gives us the history of the United Kingdom Temperance Provident Institution, the Scottish Temperance Company, the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, and others of a like kind. In each instance he quotes the official reports of these societies to show how favorable are the statistics of mortality to the total abstainer as against the moderate drinker. Just to give one instance,in the case of the first-named society above,"from 1886 to 1883 the number of expected deaths in the Temperance and General sections was 2,879 and 4,741; the number of actual deaths was respectively 2,035 and 4,-640, or about 70 and 97 per cent, showing a much larger death rate in the General section."

What habit is there more productive of laziness, improvidence, wastefulness and self-indulgence than the drink habit? We might quote this page full of testimonies on this point—testimonies from the keepers of almshouses, from officers of charity organizations, from prison officials, from police magistrates. But we prefer to leave it to every reader's experience. He must be a blind man who has not seen over and over again the results of drink on the moral qualities of men and women. No other habit can be named so utterly subversive of those qualities that win competence. Scientists like Dr. Maudsley in "Mental Diseases," Dr. Ribot of France, Dr. Richardson and Dr. Willard Parker have time and again pointed out that one of the most inevitable effects of alcohol is its impairment of the will. The money that drink takes from a man's pocket is the least of its robberies. It takes also his power to replace the money. Brain cells, nerves, tissues, muscles, are all impaired, and in the end the victim becomes physically, mentally and morally utterly incompetent as a wage-earner. It is because prohibition strikes at this cause of individual debasement that as a remedy for poverty it stands forth the unapproachable chief. The single tax will not do this. Free trade or protection will not. Government control of railroads will not.—Voice.

Religious News.

—The First United Presbyterian church of Monmouth, Ill., Rev. Dr. T. H. Hanna, pastor, will begin building a $25,000 church as soon as weather permits.

—Bro. C. R. Hunt, pastor of the Dayton Chapel Wesleyan church, Clarence, Iowa, rejoices in the favor of God upon his pastoral labors and the addition of a score or more to the membership.

—Rev. F. M. Spencer, D. D., late president of Muskingum College, Ohio, has been conducting a series of meetings in the First United Presbyterian church, Washington, Iowa. Nine members were received into the church at its last communion.

—Rev. S. A. Manwell, a graduate of Wheaton College and Theological Seminary, is located at Pittsford, Mich. He has had an almost constant revival interest in his church during the fall and winter.

—Rev. D. F. Shepardson, well known as an evangelist among the Wesleyan brethren, is now in San Jose, California. He is fitting up a hall in the city to open meetings for revival and holiness work.

—Rev. O. C. Bedford, of Viola, Ill., has had another extensive revival work, at which some forty or more have started for the kingdom.

—Messrs. Moody and Sankey conducted Christian conventions recently in Burlington, Ottumwa, Cedar Rapids and Sioux City, Iowa. Everywhere crowded houses were the rule, and no building was sufficiently large to accommodate them. Mr. Sankey went to Huron, Dakota, and held a meeting in the interest of the American S. S. Union, and had planned to do the same in Sioux Falls and other places, but the blizzards prevented the running of trains and interfered with the meetings which had been planned by E. B. Stevenson. Mr. Moody spent a few days in Nebraska, holding a meeting at Hastings, and went thence to Denver, where he held meetings for a week, and then went to Leadville for another week. Rev. C. F. Goss, of the Chicago Avenue church, Chicago, joined him at Leadville.

—A good degree of religious interest bas developed in the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, since the Rev. C. C. Kimball, D. D., assumed his duties as a sort of pastor there last fall. There are between four and five hundred resident students, and on a recent Sabbath evening about twenty-five expressed their purpose to begin a Christian life.

—It is said that negotiations are being opened with the Treasury Department at Washington with reference to the admission of the Chinese delegates to the Methodist General Conference. Says the California Christian Advocate: "The Rev. Sia Sek Ong, the ministerial delegate, is an able, polite, Christian gentleman and a minister of many years' service. He is also a graduate of the Government University, having won the degree of sau-ts oy, or 'excellent tallent,' which gives him a position among the literati of the country. Mr. Tiong-a-Hok, the lay delegate, is a wealthy merchant. He was a contributor to the late Paris Exposition and to the Centennial at Philadelphia. He has a large business. He has a native and an English residence most elegantly furnished, in which he has entertained all the foreigners, mercantile and official, in Foochow in royal style. Before he united with the church he gave $10,000 to our mission. He has since given $1,000 to support the mission to Corea. As a heathen man he supported a foundling asylum of 100 girls. His purse is always open in all times of public calamity, floods, famine, or pestilence. Mr. Ahok gives a certain percentage of his profits to every worker in his establishments, from head clerk to office boy."

—Rev. George Greenfell, lately returned from the Congo, reports "Christianity spreading even where missionaries have not labored. As he approached one town in which no Baptist missionary had ever labored, he saw a band of native evangelists coming out of it to preach the Gospel to their native brethren, and that town, a few years ago, was sunk in heathenism."

—The first church has been organized in Corea in connection with the American Protestant mission. Fifteen members are enrolled, and others are calling for baptism. Though contrary to Corean law, the government is reported as raising no question. It is but a score of years since the organization of a Christian church in Japan was not only contrary to the law, but would have been visited with severe punishment, yet to-day there are more than 15,000 church members in that empire.

—At this time, says the Inter Ocean, there are twenty-six Women's Foreign Missionary Societies in the United States, with 15,867 auxiliary societies, besides 3,454 bands of girls and young ladies engaged in the same work. The statistics of twelve of the societies only are at hand, but they show that from 1860 to 1886 they have sent in money to the foreign field $8,571,706. If the record of all could be had, the showing would be one to which the Christian women of the nation might well point with pride. In 1880 in the foreign field there were 1,792 ordained missionaries. In 1887 there were 2,395, with 13,398 native workers. In 1880 there were 205,132 communicants in foreign mission churches; in 1887 there were 332,060. In 1880 there were 65,825 scholars in mission schools; 1887 there were 151,914. This gathering into schools of the boys and girls is one of the most encouraging signs of progress in mission work, as by far the largest class of pupils are in the most hopeless districts, 100,560 of them being in Asia and 26,214 in Africa.

—The students of the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Allegheny, Pa., have secured the Rev. John Hall, D. D., to preach the annual missionary sermon before them in May.

—It is now definitely decided that the next National Convention of the Society of Christian Endeavor will be held in the Armory Hall of Battery D, Chicago, July 5–8. Though the date and city of the Convention were fixed at the last Convention at Saratoga, it was proposed at first to hold the meeting in Union Park Church, which had been kindly offered. The societies, however, have increased so rapidly during the past year that it is thought that no church in the city can hold the expected delegates, and the trustees have been obliged to engage Battery D, which in many respects is admirably suited to such a convention.

—Two Chinamen, one a Christian, the other a heathen, had their eyes operated upon for cataract. After the bandages were removed and they were allowed to be in dim light, the Christian held a praise meeting with his fellow Christians. His eyesight was restored, and he became a preacher. The other held a feast, drank whisky, and ruined his eyes beyond recovery.

—The representatives of the Methodist church in Washington are not satisfied with the recent letter of President Cleveland, which seeks to justify the policy of the administration in its prohibition of the use of Indian languages in the schools. Dr. Swindell says: "The letter of President Cleveland will not satisfy the church, for in a free State the church will not brook any interference with its religious instruction whether it be German, Latin or Dakota language, and this interference with the rights of Americans, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, will not be tolerated. The church will not take kindly to a plan that makes the church subservient to a government agent and gives him discretionary powers to decide how many native ministers shall be allowed to minister to the spiritual needs of their people. These new rules have caused much trouble already, and will no doubt hamper the missionary work of the church, and to a large extent. Where a mission school is maintained by the church independently of the government, it should be allowed to teach as it best sees fit accordingly to the needs of the people. This is now denied us. The government treats the Indians as if they were a criminal class. They are not that."

Not Baal Worshipers.—There are those in the church who will not worship Baal—they are the unconquerables. And we rejoice to believe that the number is not inconsiderable. Neither specious reasoning, persuasion or denunciation can get them to bend the knee at the unholy shrine. Heap upon them opprobrious epithets, such as "cranks," "fanatics," or "fools." Ostracise them, rule them out of your genteel circles, denounce them from the pulpit, but still they are invincible. They have no railing to return for railing; they will, with a Christly spirit, do good to those that despitefully use them—but they will not participate in the modern revelries. They cannot be persuaded that to play "A Divorce Case" in a church, as has been done, is equal to a prayer meeting or class meeting. No, no! hands off—such people will not worship Baal! They are God's elect ones.—Guide to Holiness.

An item is going the rounds of the press, to the effect that whisky is now manufactured out of old rags. We see nothing remarkable about this. Every one knows that nearly all the old rags now in the country are manufactured out of whisky, and there is no apparent reason why the process of conversion may not work as well one way as another; from whisky to rags and from rags to whisky. What a beautiful business it is!—N. Y. Observer.

Literature.

Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia of Knowledge and Language. Vols. 4 and 5. Price, cloth, 50 cents; half morocco, 60 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

These volumes carry this popular work from "Baptism" to "Brave," and bring down historical and statistical topics to date. In dealing with controverted subjects there is a fairness of statement which is not always found in works of this character; and we are often surprised at the fullness of explanation and the apparent exhaustion of topics. At the same time there is an occasional disappointment when titles readily found in other cyclopedias do not appear in this. The fifth volume more than sustains the good reputation of the previous issues, being, especially, more full in its vocabulary, and the entire workmanship, both literary and mechanical, apparently being of a higher grade. It is certainly not only a wonderfully cheap, but an excellent cyclopedia for almost any conceivable use. The publisher will send specimen pages free to any applicant, or specimen volumes may be ordered and returned if not wanted.

The Thoughts of Marcus Aurelius. Translated by George Long. Pp. 188. John B. Alden, New York.

The student of philosophy will need no introduction to this work which has been often published, but never in so popular a form. The Emperor Aurelius was the flower of the Stoic philosophy. He was born in A. D. 121, became Emperor of Rome in 161, was initiated into the Masonic mysteries of Eleusis about 175. Though a moralist whose excellence surprises all ages he was a persecutor of the Christian church, and Polycarp was one of the martyrs. A fine biography accompanies the translation, which will always be an interesting study.

The first article in the April Century is by Edward L. Wilson, the well-known photographer, and is descriptive of the natural and other features of Palestine "From Dan to Beersheba." A great number of illustrations, mainly from photographs, are presented and will be of special interest to the teachers and students of the International Sunday-School Lessons. The article in the important series on Prussian politics and despotism is on the Russian Penal Code, the severe provisions of which are here briefly explained, and are an astonishing revelation to free-born Americans. The proscriptive laws governing religious matters as here represented are such as might have been promulgated by a pope of the 14th century. This paper is the last of Mr. Kennan's introductory series, and will be followed in the May number by the first illustrated article in the main series, which will give the results of the Century's expedition into Siberia. The present installment of the Life of Lincoln is on "The National Uprising" for the preservation of the Union; the political and military relation of Baltimore to the situation is also fully described. A further chapter is devoted to the condition of things in Washington itself at the outbreak of the Rebellion, in which occurs a most pathetic passage describing Lincoln's anguish of mind at the extraordinary dangers menacing the country and the capital. The "Round Up" on a cattle ranch is described in a graphic way by Theodore Rosevelt and is illustrated with spirit. An illustrated article on the "American Inventors of the Telegraph" tells the inside story of the invention, especially bringing out the services rendered to the enterprise by Alfred Vail. Mr. Vail's extremely important connection with the invention is here for the first time fully and authoritatively told. The article will be a surprise to the larger part of the public.

The April number of the English Illustrated Magazine contains an article on the "Spanish Armada" by Mr. W. H. K Wright, with reproductions of John Pine's engravings after the tapestry hangings in the House of Lords. Miss Balch, continuing her "Glimpses of Old English Homes," gives an account of Arundel castle, which has been revised by the duke of Norfolk, by whose permission the historical portraits are now for the first time published. Prof. Minto's story of the great uprising of the commons in the time of Richard II., tells of crude signals used in gathering their secret meetings.

Science (weekly) has recently added two new departments,—one on electrical science, in which every week is given a resume of the progress in the application of electricity in the arts. This is conducted by one of the able electrical engineers of the country. The other new departure is in giving each week information of the progress of the scientific work carried on under the direction of the United States Government. This news is collected by an experienced correspondent at Washington.

The first number of America, a new Chicago weekly, is just out. It presents a distinguished list of contributors, and the matter is varied in interest, well written throughout, and distinctively American. It promises to be a journal worth reading. It is published by the American Publishing Company.

The Swiss Cross, the popular science magazine which contains the reports of the Agassiz Association, in its April number gives an illustrated article on "Who were the Goths?" and another on "The Geology of the Sea-Floor."

Literature, an illustrated weekly magazine, has certainly successfully taken the field as the popular literary journal of America. Its great variety of contents, handy form, and choice illustrations, make it exceedingly attractive. Foremost American authors are among its contributors. Mrs. Susan E Wallace, wife of the author of "Ben Hur," and quite as charming a writer as her husband, has papers in two current issues on "The Poetry and Music of the Arabs." For a specimen copy (free), address John B. Alden, publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York.

The Pacific Health Journal of Oakland, Cal., besides its general department which is well filled with useful and practical matter, has a temperance department in which radical ground is taken against narcotics as well as stimulants.

LODGE NOTES.

The founding of the Grand Army of the Republic on April 6, 1866, was celebrated on Friday evening at Decatur, Ill., by a reunion of Decatur Post, No. 1, the first post instituted.

The Patrons of Husbandry have organized a "trust" in Tuscola county, Ill., under the agreement that all shall trade with one merchant, who shall charge a profit of not over ten per cent of the invoice price.

The labor organization of Jefferson county, Alabama—Knights of Labor, Wheel, Alliance, Trade Union and other societies—met in convention in Birmingham on Saturday and nominated a full county and legislative ticket. The Democratic County Convention will meet on Saturday next.

Minneapolis, Minn., has ten Grand Army posts, with a membership of about 1,400. It is estimated that at least 6,000 ex-Union soldiers are residents of Minneapolis; less than one-fourth are, therefore, sworn into this secret lodge. This proportion will probably hold good throughout the country.

District Assembly 24, Knights of Labor of Chicago, it was announced a few days ago, had given up their headquarters owing to lack of funds. The district machinery was captured by the anti-Powderly faction at the election, and the membership has fallen off rapidly. There are now but little over 1,000 members, while in 1886 it had 22,000.

Some time ago Bakers' Union 49, the Swedish Bakers' Union and the Central Labor Union of Chicago declared a boycott against John Koessler. They issued a circular in three languages, saying Koessler employed scabs and warning people to beware of his bread. George Sims belonged to the unions and was arrested while distributing the circulars. The unions employed counsel and fought Sims's case through several hearings in the police court. The justice delivered quite a lengthy opinion, and went fully into the facts and the law of the case, citing similar cases from other States, and winding up by holding the accused over to the Crimiual Court upon the charge of criminal conspiracy.

When Low Yete, leader of the chief highbinder society on the Pacific Coast, was buried in San Erancisco lately, 1,500 men turned out in martial array and gave the dead chief the most imposing Chinese funeral seen in this city. The procession included 300 hacks and fifty express wagons, all crowded with Celestials. There were several bands that played native music, and two bodies of armed men with shields and banners. A picture of the dead man was borne before the hearse, which was drawn by four black horses. Low Yete was over eighty years old, and for thirty years had been chief of the Chee Kong Tong Society, that has 15,000 members. He fled from China when the Tai Ping rebellion collapsed, and had never dared to return.

Catarrh, when chronic, becomes very offensive. It is impossible to be otherwise healthy, and, at the same time, afflicted with catarrh. This disagreeable disease, in its most obstinate and dangerous forms, can be cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Talks
ON THE
Labor Troubles,
BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Master's Carpet.
BY
E. Ronayne.
Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 42 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

FARM NOTES.

DWARF APPLE TREES.

A pretty thing in a garden is a nicely trained young dwarf apple tree, or a row of them. They can be led into any desired shape, and it is lasting amusement and recreation to the amateur gardener to guide them into fanciful forms which does not debar them from giving him enjoyable fruit, always handsomer and finer than is usual on large trees. The sap has not far to travel painfully through thousands of cells and against gravity to reach the leaves from the root points, and so the leaves are completer, and the fruit better fed than on the big trees.

It used to be common in the neat French gardens, and probably is yet, to see rows of dwarf apple trees trained like low horizontal fences at the back of flower borders, separating them from the vegetable ground. In other places they would stand here and there at intervals in the borders, their shoots pinched into pyramidal form or left long, but reduced in number and trained to wires, giving them the shape of letters or figures of different kinds. To an admirer of handsome fruit nothing of the kind can be more delightful than the products of these trees. —Vick's Magazine.

ARBOR DAY.

Fifty years ago there was a springtime holiday known at Williams College, Massachusetts, as "Tree Day," when the students betook themselves to the Berkshire hills and woods, and came home laden with trees which they planted in the college grounds and the village streets. The custom survived until a few years ago, and may still survive. It resulted in making that beautiful valley a very forest of foliage. Similar customs prevailed in many other New England towns. "Arbor Day," known to the laws of so many States, had its origin not merely in the idea of beautifying hamlets and homesteads, but in increasing the forest area. The Nebraska Agricultural Society first set the ball in motion in 1874, and it is claimed that the people planted twelve million trees that year, and that now the State has more than a hundred thousand acres of planted forest. The same year the Iowa Horticultural Society recommended the planting. In Minnesota the work began in 1876, and more than one million five hundred thousand trees were planted. Michigan fell into line in 1881; Ohio in 1882; West Virginia in 1883, and later New Jersey, New Hampshire, New York, Vermont, Georgia, Idaho, Pennsylvania, Florida and several other States. In all of these the practice is popular, and is resulting in great good, with the promise of greater. At the present session of the New York State Legislature a bill has been presented which is designed to give a fresh and vital interest to "Arbor Day" as a children's festival. It provides that the children of the public schools shall be assembled on the first of May, and that their teachers shall encourage them in the planting, preservation and protection of trees and shrubs, and instruct them in the best methods. Already "Arbor Day" has proved to be an educator. The school children are interested in its observance, and they learn much concerning the uses and the growth of trees. These beautify country and town, and pave the way for a bonanza in lumber before many years. Let the good work go on, and a perpetual supply of timber will be maintained.—American Agriculturist.

FREE VS. SLAVE LABOR.—Attention has been recently directed to the fact that the revenues of South Carolina for the past year from agriculture, manufactures and mines have been nearly twice as great under free labor as they were under slavery. Such testimonies as this convince even former slave holders of the advantages of free labor, and causes them to rejoice that slavery is abolished. And yet the coffee planters of Brazil are opposing the abolition of slavery on the ground that it would be impossible to compete with other countries under other conditions.

A POINT AS TO FARM ANIMALS.—The temper of a farm animal is an element in determining its value that is rarely given the consideration it merits, wisely observed a writer in the Western Plowman. The value and usefulness of such an animal, he adds, depends almost as much upon mental as upon physical characteristics. A horse may be muscular and active, but if it uses its muscles and shows its activity by kicking the other horses, by running away with the wagon or plow whenever the opportunity offers, or by getting over the best fence on the farm, it is of less value than a horse with less muscle and activity, and more religion.

A young man in Battle Creek, Mich., named Stevens struck a horse a slight blow on the mouth with the back of his hand six months ago, making a trifling abrasion of the skin by coming in contact with the horse's teeth. His hand and arm soon became swollen, and a sub-cuticle channel about two inches in width soon formed, extending in a zigzag course from the hand to the elbow. An occasional eruption occurs from which a watery pus trickles forth. The case has received the attention of the best physicians in the city, but to no avail. It has the appearance of a genuine case of glanders reproduced in man by inoculation from a glandered horse, and creates much interest among the profession.

"I lost forty thousand dollars by a periodical attack of nervous sick headache," said a Chicago capitalist to a correspondent, pointing across the street to a hadsome corner lot. "That lot was sold for ten thousand dollars at public auction five years ago, and I intended to buy it, but was too sick with headache to attend the sale, and it is now worth fifty thousand dollars." If he had known of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets they would have removed the cause of his headaches—biliousness—and he would have made the money. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets cure sick headache, bilious headache, dizziness, constipation, indigestion, and bilious attacks; 25 cents a vial, by druggists.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

"I wonder Grimes has any friends—
His manner grows so surly:
No matter where we chance to meet,
Or whether late or early,
'Tis just the same: he cannot stay,
And barely answers a 'good day.'"

Now this is a sad case of misconception. It is not Grimes's disposition which is at fault, but his liver. He can't appear jolly when he feels miserable. If he would take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the great liver, stomach and bowel regulator, he would soon be the same happy fellow as of old—agreeable to himself and the world generally.

NEW BOOK.

THE STORIES OF THE GODS is not only a new book, but a unique one. It embodies Mr. I. R. B. Arnold's lecture on the lodge given in connection with his sun pictures. Whoever has heard Mr. Arnold will enjoy this story of the gods of different times and nations. It places the god of the secret lodge in the right catalogue. The price is only ten cents postpaid. 32 pages. Illustrated.

Ask For Ayer's

Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier.

With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The fore-runner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far excel those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the youthful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each: per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages: cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE STRIKE.

Last week Tuesday a local election gave a quiet day among the anxious railroad managers, and the worst was expected next day. The Milwaukee and St. Paul road had temporarily laid off 5,000 men until the strike in their Chicago yards was settled. The Lake Shore road, which changed off a large part of its force for non-union men in the strike of 1886, only felt safe. Tuesday afternoon a large meeting of 1,200 strikers was held. Cooler heads from points outside the city advised them, and after some conference with the road superintendents there was an unconditional surrender. Business has resumed its usual tone. The Burlington road has no further trouble except from an occasional attempt at violence, and its engineers are beginning to come back.

Owing to a falling off in business caused by the strikes, 500 freight employes on the Western division of the New York Central have been suspended.

The official statement of the Southwestern Railway Association for the first and second weeks of March shows that the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy earned in that period less than $1,000 on through and competative business between Chicago and Kansas City and common points. It is estimated that the gross earnings of the road will fall off over $1,200,000 for the month.

Railway employes at Clinton, Iowa, are threatening to boycott all merchants who ship goods over the "Q" railroad, and it is whispered that the merchants will boycott the "Q."

COUNTRY.

United States Judge Jackson decided Friday at Louisville that Kentucky can keep and try the prisoners from West Virginia involved in the Hatfield-McCoy murders.

A call for a convention is to be held at Topeka, May 1, for the purpose or organizing the farmers' trust. Circulars have been sent to the governors of all the States west of the Mississippi, and to Illinois, and to Wisconsin, to send delegates to the convention.

As a result of the liquor prosecutions in Concord, N. H., every saloon has been closed, the proprietors refusing absolutely to make any sales.

Heavy floods have been experienced in Wisconsin and Iowa. The Shell Rock river, swollen by heavy rains, overflowed its banks at Rock Falls, Iowa, Thursday night, and carried away a mill-dam and a barn and three houses were demolished by floating ice. The occupants were all rescued Friday morning.

Mrs. Mary Sharp of Wanemic, Pa., was engaged in manufacturing whisky, when the pot containing it toppled over into a hot fire. The fluid blazed up, setting fire to her clothing, and she was burned to death. Three of her children, who tried to save her, were also burned, and will die. The husband and father, John Sharp, who was at work at the time, is reported to have become insane.

The nitro glycerine mills of the Fowler Company, situated at Miller's Station, Ind., a small town on the Baltimore and Ohio and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroads, exploded with terrific force Friday forenoon, while the men were drawing the mixture into the vats, killing the three men who were in the building at the time. The explosion was caused by friction in moving the vats. The shock was felt in Crownpoint, twenty-five miles away.

The Mexican authorities are erecting dams on the Rio Grande, opposite El Paso, Texas, the effect of which will be to deflect the current of the river and wash away a portion of El Paso. The citizens of the latter place will enter a formal protest.

The river at Des Moines, Iowa, was higher Sunday than for seven years, and still rising. It was feared the entire south part of the city would be sub merged. The Diagonal railroad bridge was moved from its foundation and will likely go down. Hundreds of men and teams were at work raising levees.

At Albuquerque, N. M., Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Reynolds were walking along the street, Mr. Reynolds carrying an overcoat on his arm. A loaded revolver fell om one of its pockets, struck on the hammer and was discharged. The ball entered Mrs. Reynolds's body on her left side, ranged upward, passing directly through the heart, killing her instantly, and came out at the right shoulder.

FOREIGN.

The Manitobans have gained their point in the matter of the railway, the Canadian government having finally yielded. The indemnity to be paid to the Canadian Pacific for the damage to this infringement upon its charter, it is said, will be from six to eight millions of dollars The Manitobans will at once proceed with the building of their road, which will connect them with the American roads

Queen Victoria is now in Florence, Italy. The Emperor and Empress of Brazil visited her Friday. Queen Victoria and Prince and Princess Henry of Battenburg afterward partook of luncheon with the King and Queen of Italy at the Pitti Palace.

A recent Oriental mail to London brings some particulars of the earthquake in China just before Christmas. Fifteen thousand people perished in the course of the four days, during which, at uncertain intervals the shocks continued. The capital district of Yunan is said to be absolutely one mass of ruins. More than five thousand persons were killed by the falling of houses. At Lainon, another Chinese town, the effect on buildings has been nearly as terrible, with the additional horror of the earth yawning till a frightful chasm was produced, from which red colored water was ejected. The shaking of the earth seems to have been followed by a subterranean convulsion of the most awful kind. Further north, at Lo Chan, where ten thousand met their doom, the aspect of the country has been completely changed. Large tracts of land suddenly disappeared in the course of the visitation, and in their place lakes formed.

The repressive policy of the British Government was given a vigorous trial in Ireland Sunday. At Kilrush an attempt to hold a public meeting brought out the military and police, and ten persons were seriously injured with batons and bayonets. At Loughrea the redoubtable editor, William O'Brien, was advertised to make an address, but his audience was dispersed by force, Mr. O'Brien's challenge to the police to arrest him instead of maltreating the people being disregarded. There was also a disturbance at Ennis, in which several people were hurt and fifty arrests made.

The German Emperor's condition gives rise to serious alarm. The cough is augmented, and he suffers from nervous excitement. The Empress has gone to Posen to inquire into the condition of the sufferers by the recent floods. It is said that 250 villages are submerged, and 15,000 people shelterless. The giving away of the dykes at Darshe caused a large loss of life. A famine is threatened in Posen, Pomerania, and Silesia, and the number of persons emigrating to America will soon be enormously increased.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

The CYNOSURE represents the Christian movement against the Secret Lodge System; discusses fairly and fearlessly the various movements of the lodge as they appear to public view, and reveals the secret machinery of corruption in politics, courts, and social and religious circles.
There are in the United States
Some 200 different Lodges,
With 2,000,000 members,
Costing $20,000,000 yearly.
This mighty world power confronts the church and seeks to rule and ruin every Christian Reform.
No Christian Reform Movement of the day is so necessary, yet so unpopular and beset with difficulties, as that which would remove the dark pall of oaths, dark-lantern meetings, secret signs, mysterious and pagan worship about altars condemned by the Word of the Living God.
No other paper gives the best of its correspondence and editorial strength to this vitally important reform. The CYNOSURE should be your paper in addition to any other you may take.
Because it is the representative of the reform against the Lodge, with ablest arguments, biographical and historical sketches, letters from lecturers, seceders and sufferers from lodge persecution. The ablest writers on this subject from all denominations and all parts of the country contribute. Special departments for letters from our metropolitan centers, on the relation of secret orders to current events.
The CYNOSURE began its twentieth volume September 22, 1887, with features of special and popular interest.
TERMS: $2.00 per year; strictly in advance, $1.50. Special terms to clubs. Send 2-cent stamp for sample copy.

THE THOUSANDTH MILE POST

in the fund for sending the Cynosure South is passed, as appears from the following report of donations from Treasurer Phillips:

DONATIONS.

To Cynosure Ministers' Fund:

Burdett Fuller	$ 1.00
S. C. Taylor	2.00
N. P. Eddy	50.00
Before reported	970.41
Total	$1,023.41

That sends 682 papers for a year to the colored ministers. Read elsewhere how these brethren are leading for Christ against his foes in Louisiana. For next week there waits more good news of the same kind. We bless God and take hope.

Last week we noted some features of the annual Mormon Conference at Salt Lake City, and that the spirit of the meeting was full of rebellion and strong for polygamy. The conference closed Wednesday last. President Woodruff, in behalf of the twelve apostles, read the usual epistle from them, which did not differ materially from those of former years. The late John Taylor, in presenting the epistle, used to interpret it with a vigorous advocacy of the hateful Mormon doctrine; but Woodruff adroitly avoided reference to that subject. His remarks were in strong contrast with the rantings of Clauson, and evidently were an attempt to keep up a fair show in a line with the movement for Statehood.

An English prophet has discovered that the numerical value of the letters of the name "Boulanger" in Greek is just 666, and prophesies that the spectacular French General is to play a leading part in affairs between this time and the Second Advent of Christ, which is to occur at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of March 5, 1896. The number of astonishing predictions that have been figured out to this numerical result is fabulous. In the same way Freemasonry has been proved to be the fulfillment of prophecy. If our indictment of the lodge depended only upon such arguments we might well be about other business.

The workmen in the breweries of Chicago and New York have caught the strike fever, now that the railroads are quiet. Oscar Neebe, the anarchist now in penitentiary for life, organized these men in Chicago, and connected their order with the Central Labor Union, which was a hot-bed of anarchy. The brewers claim that their business has been virtually taken out of their hands and managed by this Union. The demands of the anarchists finally caused a protest and the men quit work—that is the German-speaking part. The men were satisfied with their wages; their only fight was for their lodge. The rejoicing of the temperance people is deep, but may not be long, as the English-speaking men refuse to strike, and the brewing of death goes on.

A union meeting of Chicago pastors of different denominations met in Farwell Hall Monday morning to discuss the question of Sabbath desecration. Dr. E. P. Goodwin presided and made a strong speech in favor of the movement, in which he held the radical ground that all stores, shops, manufactures, railroads and street cars should cease to transact business on the Lord's day. Drs. Little, Ridgeway, Edwards, Pres. C. A. Blanchard of the Illinois State Sabbath Association, Hon. J. B. Grinnell and others spoke upon various phases of the subject. Resolutions were adopted asserting the moral obligation of the Sabbath, urging the discussion of its supremacy in pulpit, press and ecclesiastical gatherings, and appointing a committee of fifteen to wait upon railway and newspaper managers and others who employ workmen seven days in the week to protest against this violation of the law of God. Another meeting will be held on the 27th inst., when it is expected that Secretary Josiah Strong of the Evangelical Alliance will give an address.

Andrew Carnegie is well known as proprietor of great iron works about Pittsburg and a writer of force and ability on political and economical subjects. His views of the labor question have seemed much in sympathy with those of workingmen. When, therefore, it was lately announced that he was about to adopt profit-sharing in his works, there was much interest and a general approval of the decision. His proposition, however, was not so liberal, though sufficiently generous for an experiment. The employes of his steel works are on a strike. He proposed that they be paid on a varying scale proportioned to the profits of the business, such profits being estimated by mutual representatives. A minority of the men are Knights of Labor, who claim that "the fundamental laws of their order will be violated" by such an arrangement. They have refused it, and are able, by their secret organization, to prevent the unsworn majority from accepting the offer. Mr. Carnegie has, therefore, closed his mills for several months, and refuses to have any dealing with the Knights as a body. From Mr. Carnegie's prominence in politics and society this strike has much importance. He is a man of ability and wealth, and has leisure to plan for workingmen something better than a sworn, secret cabal with Terence Powderly for its despot.

The prolonged and expensive dead-lock in the House of Representatives, which was broken last Friday, was over a bill to refund from the Federal Treasury the direct tax levied on the States and Territories in 1861, to raise money for carrying on the war. The act of 1861 provided that a tax of $20,000,000 be apportioned among the inhabitants of the several States and Territories. Of this amount about $17,500,000 was collected, leaving a balance due, mostly from the Southern States, of about $2,500,000. In some of the Southern States then in rebellion, collections were made in some instances from the property of individuals. The theory upon which the proposal to refund is based, is that the uncollected tax still stands on the Treasury books as a debt, which must, in justice to all concerned, be collected or else the tax already collected should be refunded to the proper States and Territories. The opponents of the bill take the position that as the levies were made on individuals in the Southern States, the only fair course would be to find those individuals and reimburse them directly. They also oppose it because the cotton tax, which drew nearly $70,000,000 from the Southern States, the constitutionality of which is still hotly disputed, has never been repaid.

The report on the Washington building, voted to be printed in these columns, was prepared to meet an inquiry which arose in the minds of several members of the National Board, who were not familiar with the opening of the Washington enterprise. They wished to be satisfied respecting the question raised by some brethren, whether the National Christian Association, after raising the money and paying for the building, had any further right therein or control of the property. The investigation was most rigid, was perfectly satisfactory, and we hope will answer the objections made by a few brethren to the resumption of the plan upon which the fund was raised and the building secured. They have perhaps forgotten in the lapse of years the circumstances under which the fund was raised, and that it was a trust which the N. C. A. has no choice but to fulfill. The National Board cannot, therefore, abandon the original plan, though it has for two or three years been postponed in order to assist in starting the American with the money received from rents. That the Board simply postponed this work might have been shown from the records of several meetings in 1885. Last August the Board requested Bro. E. D. Bailey of the American to devote his time entirely to the reform, but he did not wish to leave other engagements; and the Board then published its purpose to resume the agency in June, 1888, when the income of the building will again be applied to the purposes for which it was purchased.

The notable features of the late Woman's International Council in Washington have been mentioned in our columns with approval, but we do not propose that a worm in the apple shall be eaten with the rest. Elizabeth Cady Stanton was, next to Miss Anthony, the moving spirit of the meeting. In one of her addresses she is reported to have said in these exact words: "The time is not far distant when, if men do not do justice to women, the women will strike hands with labor, with socialists, with anarchists, and you will witness the scenes of the French Revolution acted over again in this Republic." This violent and unwomanly threat was not from a Parisian "petroleuse." Perhaps Mrs. Stanton did not mean what she said. We hope she did not. It is not a beautiful picture—American women striking hands with Most and Spies. One foolish and willful young Chicago woman failed in the attempt. But Mrs. Stanton may have meant it. She tells a characteristic story of herself when she was a girl of twelve. She used to see her father, Judge Cady, administer law from the bench, and refer to his books to form his decision. She thought to help these decisions to a proper end, therefore, by going through his law library and tearing out and burning those pages containing principles or decisions that displeased her. She discovered much that was offensive to her youthful taste, and nearly ruined the library before she was discovered and her efforts to reform the world were checked. It is well known that Mrs. Stanton is the author of sentiments that border on infidelity and deride the church. We doubt whether, in her old age, she is a more safe guide for our mothers, wives, sisters and daughters than she was for her father's court when a child.

VITAL POINTS OF DIFFERENCE BETWEEN MASONRY AND CHRISTIANITY.

BY REV. J. K. ALWOOD.

God said, "My people perish for lack of knowledge." This is doubtless the case with many in this age of learning. They start well in religion, but are drawn away with decoying secretists, run a useless career, and end in ruin. There are several vital points of difference between our holy Christianity and Freemasonry, which may easily be known, and ought to be known and constantly remembered by all. Note the following important points:

1. In Christianity Christ is the light. Not so in Masonry, nor any other secret order as such. True, Robert Morris in his Dictionary of Masonry informs us that the Bible is "termed the first great light in Masonry." But he also informs us that the carpenter's "square is termed the second great light," and "the compass, the third." This shows us that the Bible is put on a level with the carpenter's square and compass in the lodge, and the three are used simply as emblematic furniture. This will be clear when we read on page 208 of Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, that "Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was, it would not be Masonry; it would be something else." Albert G. Mackey in his Masonic Lexicon, page 402, says, "The religion of Masonry is pure theism." That is, it is unmixed deism. This was the religion of Thomas Paine, who fought the Bible and Christianity with all his might, and of Charles Darwin, author of the theory of evolution. We know that nearly or quite all the eligible Jews in this country are Masons; and all Jews reject Christ. Thomas Smith Webb, in his standard monitor, pages 14, 15, informs us that Masonry "unites the distant Chinese, the wild Arab, the American savage, the Briton, German and Frank, and men of the most opposite tenets and the most contradictory opinions in one indissoluble bond of affection." It is absurd to suppose that Christ can be the light of savage, pagan, Jewish, deistic rejecters of the Son of God. Mackey says: "The Persians consecrated fire, as containing the principle of light, and the Druids worshiped the sun as its eternal source. Freemasons, too, travel in search of spiritual light which can be found only in the East, from whence it springs." All Masonic "light springs from the East" end of the lodge, where the despotic Master rules. "Theism" accepts no light from Christ. The Jew spurns it, re-echoing the voice of his ancestors: "Let him be crucified." "The wild Arab," Mohammedan, "the savage," the Paines and Darwins ridicule it. Yet all these are delighted with the Masonic light "in the East." Thus any one can see that the two systems do not walk in the same kind of light. With Isaiah, "Let us walk in the light of the Lord."

2. Christianity builds all its hopes on the blood of Christ. But Masonry, by proclaiming the transit of its departed "deists," Jews, and other rejecters of Christ "to the Grand Lodge above," proclaims also that the blood of Christ has nothing to do with the salvation of souls, but is a futile, unholy thing, and the apostles were foolish in talking of salvation through that blood.

3. The bond of Christian union is "the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." But "theistic," that is, deistic Masonry, having "nothing whatever to do with the Bible," and suited to the tastes of all rejecters of Christ, cannot possibly possess "the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost." Morris tells us: "It is the obligation that makes the Mason, and the only difference between one Mason and another consists simply in the fact that one keeps his obligation better than another." "The Masonic obligation is of a nature scarcely distinguishable from oaths." "Every Mason is under an obligation to obey the laws of the lodge and the Grand Lodge." (Dic., Art., Obligation.) "An affirmation is not esteemed equivalent to an oath in Masonry, however it may be in common law, and is not legitimate in the workings of the lodge." (Art., Affirmation.) Here it is made perfectly clear that administering the oath is a part of "the workings of the lodge," and that "every Mason is under an oath to obey the laws of the lodge and the Grand Lodge," all of which laws were entirely "hid from him" when he took the oath to obey them.

But our present point is that, so far from the love of God being any part of the bond of union in Masonry, "it is the oath that makes the Mason," and holds him in obedience to laws, known or hidden, and clans him with men who may be intensely hateful to him. "The oath," with its penalties, is the bond of union.

4. In Christianity Christ is "the life." Not so in Masonry, as attest the large Jewish and other anti-Christian elements, and many of the wickedest men in our country. Jesus said, "In secret have I said nothing." "What I tell you in darkness that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear that preach ye upon the house tops. And fear not them which kill the body." There is no secrecy life in Christ: no life for secret societies. His rule here quoted would destroy them all suddenly if applied. Clanism is its life.

5. Christianity courts investigation and seeks publicity for every item there is in it. Masonry conceals all but its few good deeds. By its delight in proclaiming these abroad, it tacitly confesses that it would proclaim all if all were of the same character. It publishes its good acts because they are good. The others belong to its "Esotery." Jesus said, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light." These have an "Esotery." Jesus had none; for his deeds were all good: hence he needed none.

6. Christianity borrows no drapery from any other system. Masonry, though it "has nothing to do with the Bible," and though "its religion is deism," yet it borrows the cloak of Christianity, on all its funeral occasions, installations, in its monitors, lexicons, and general literature. By this means it deceives the unwary, whose consciences are yet tender, and gains reputation among Christians. In Turkey it borrows the cloak of Mohammedanism, and the Koran "is one of the three great lights." Farther east it borrows of Buddhism.

7. Christianity requires every one at all times to do right only, and never consent to wrong in any way. But, according to one of the monitors, and many seceders, the Royal Arch requires the assistance and keeping of secrets for one another by companions, "whether they be right or wrong, murder and treason not excepted." (Richardson's Mon. p. 70, and Bernard's Light.)

8. Christianity excludes none because they are young, or old, or black, or too poor to pay fees and dues, or defective in body or limb, or are ladies. But the "Ancient Landmarks" of Masonry excludes all these; no matter how pious, or learned, or wise they may be. Their room is reserved for those who need no help, though they are very wicked "Jews, Mohammedans, or savages."

9. Christianity never takes away the freedom of conscience by putting a man "under an obligation to obey laws" that are "hid from him." All secret societies do this, in plain violation of God's law, which declares, "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these. And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." (Lev. 5: 4, 5.) No man, or set of men, has a right to give or take such a promise as the awful Judge here prohibits. And right here all secret combinations and all their adherents and apologists are guilty every hour.

DECORATION DAY.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

I see it is proposed by chairman Dickie, and heartily endorsed by the Voice, that the National Prohibition Convention at Indianapolis shall celebrate Decoration Day by a reunion of the "Blue" and the "Gray," and a common consecration to the united interests of the whole country, and especially to the suppression of the liquor traffic. Such a union, for such an object, is certainly most desirable. Everything that tends to the abatement of past animosities, the promotion of a truly national feeling, and especially whatever tends to exalt the interests of morality and humanity above mere devotion to party, is certainly of great utility.

Such a celebration of Decoration Day might be a real good, and if, as proposed, it takes on this character it will indicate a long step in the direction of a purer national morality. But such is not the usual manner of celebrating this anniversary; very largely it is used to glorify war and the deeds of warriors. It has tended rather to promote than remove the old hatreds and the sectional strife. Above all it has been used to glorify the bravery of men who rushed to the shock of battle, and to lead those of unstable minds to think that this kind of courage was a crown of glory, and a passport to heaven. Ministers of religion, as well as others, have in their grandiloquent oratory represented the fallen soldier, who made not the slightest pretensions to faith in a Divine Saviour, and who died in the endeavor to kill as many as possible of his enemies, as being a martyr and as transferred to the realms of eternal bliss.

Now I would by no means detract from the honor of those who from truly patriotic motives (even though they were mistaken as to the rightfulness of their methods) responded to the call of their country. There were men in both the Union and Confederate armies, who, in their general and private character, were not simply brave, but were truly noble and excellent. The sad thing is, that such men should have been engaged in the business of killing each other, and that they should, because of difference of opinion, have appealed to the arbitrament of war. War is barbarism. It cannot be civilized, nor conducted on Christian principles. Like human slavery, its abuses are inherent in the system. Like the liquor traffic, all attempts at regulation but perpetuate the evil. There is but one remedy for war, and that is abolishment and the substitution of peaceful methods of settlement. But one of the greatest obstacles to the abolition of war is the glorification it receives at the hands of writers and orators. The false glitter that is thrown over its horrible cruelties makes it possible to keep up the terrible system under which the nations are groaning with burdens that are unspeakable.

By all means let the soldiers of the Blue and the Gray come together and clasp fraternal hands, but let it not be to glorify war. Let them rather, like the sons of Noah, weep with mutual contrition over their past sin; and walking backwards cast the mantle of oblivion over the nation's folly and shame.

McLeansville, N. C.

SEVENTY-SEVEN.

TO REV. C C. FOOTE ON HIS BIRTHDAY.

"The hoary head is a crown of glory, if found in the way of righteousness."

The years have passed with noiseless tread,
Till numbering seventy terms and seven,
Since tenderly a mother said:
"To me a little child is given.

"As life at best is but a span,
My baby shall be trained and taught
That man must toil for brother man;
That life has battles to be fought."

From the safe shelter of her arms,
Tears chasing smiles in soft surprise,
At childhood's joys and swift alarms
He looked with large and wondering eyes.

In youth, on noble deeds intent,
He vowed the giant, Sin, to slay;
And as the cycles came and went,
They found him foremost in the fray.

The hapless, hunted, fleeing slave,
Would stoop to kiss his garment's hem;
For like the Christ who died to save,
He ventured all to succor them.

When travel-stained, and spent, and worn,
Despairing, though his cause were just,
His faltering steps were still up-borne
By woman's love and hope, and trust.

Not here the story of his life
Can be unfolded—nor is mine
The pencil to portray the strife,
Victorious by help Divine.

To others though it now be given
The sword of Gideon to wield,
No sweeter boon he asks of Heaven,
Than strength to till the Master's field.

To-day, upon his silvered head
We see a crown of glory rest,
For long his steps with steady tread
"The way of righteousness" have pressed.

Yet in the radiant "Morning Land"
More glorious far that crown shall be,
When with the ransomed he shall stand
And sing the song of victory.

Miss S. E. Adams.

Detroit, Mich., March 30th, 1888.

But what about secret societies? Will we let them in? What, with their foresworn oaths, their dangerous promises, their sun-worship, their naked deism, their secret combination of heterogeneous elements of Christians and pagans, of deists and pantheists, accustomed to fall down together before the shrines of Baal and Ashteroth, and sit side by side with them, knowingly and approvingly, at Christ's table? I for one have not got that far down the ladder yet, whose foot rests in the filthy mire of demon-worship. I know Satan with a lie in his mouth stands ready to offer all the kingdoms of the world to the United Presbyterian church if she will only bestow this homage on him. But he is as much a deceiver now as when Jesus was upon earth, and not any more of a landlord.—Rev. J. H. Leiper in Christian Instructor.

LETTERS FROM THE CONGO.

SKETCHES OF PERSONAL OBSERVATION AND EXPERIENCE IN THE AFRICAN INTERIOR.

I am just reminded by a salutation from a "Houser" (soldier from Lagos Island) that this is New Year's morning. A. D. 1887 with its record has fled and our Father deigns to trust us still with time, precious time. Taking a retrospective view of 1887 I have much to regret but more for which to be thankful, because of God's mercy. Praise the Lord!

I am just rallying from a run of fever. In this country we have no doctors near to whom to run, but we who know how run to God for help, and put in good time, especially when we get sick. The weather is not too hot nor too wet. At present it seems like early June weather in America. I have two Bangalla spears, and expect to obtain more on my trip.

The natives take no interest in a change of religion, which means to them a change of mode of living, with their grass huts without chimneys or windows, furniture or crockery, with the privilege of going when and where they please. The native considers himself better off in his present state. I have visited the villages at all hours of the day and some in the evening to ascertain whether the people worshiped at all or not. The nearest to a discovery I have made was on this wise: At Ki-Gambu, joining Kinchessa on the West, one evening as I sat with the chief I saw women come from their huts and go to a certain bush and pluck a few leaves, muttering the while and closing the left hand so as to form a hollow. They pushed these leaves one at a time down between the thumb and forefinger and then popped them with the right, and walked back to their huts and lit their pipes. I have been particular in my investigations so far and have not found a man yet that prayed to anything.

Games of chance are participated in by all, and at all times children are to be found around the "Elna" board. This, to look at, reminds me of "Debbs," which we used to play for diversion. Here it is always for money, which may be Mataku (brass rod), shells, beads, cloth or handkerchiefs. "Boi-li" is very popular. They form of clay either an oblong or round vessel with a small earthen vessel imbedded in the center, but the rim is left perhaps the eighth of an inch above the surface. Now, with a large bean, they smooth the surface until it shines. Each player puts up a certain number of beads and they are so arranged as to obstruct an entrance to the earthen dish in the center. A small bean, round and polished, is now taken between the thumb and forefinger, and from the rim of the clay vessel it is sent rolling down over the beads to the center. The player clasps his hands sharply as if to secure success, and if it fails the expression of disappointment is quite evident. This is repeated by each in turn until some one succeeds in securing the prize. Gake is very similar to our dice, and as they make the throw they clasp their hands and wait the issue. These and other games are constantly going on in all the villages.

The elder women are hoeing or watching the stalls in the market. The babies are thoroughly smeared with a red pigment and grease from head to foot, and this being kept up gives the skin a beautiful tint; and this is how I account for the variety of skin among the African tribes.

Jan. 28.—Seeing I am nearly through with my job of putting the steamer with its apparatus together I thought I ought to write and correct statements made in my last letter. My loss of hearing was a detriment to me as an engineer, and I am not going to the Kasia river. I am not at all sorry now, though I felt a little bad at first. I have seen all of Africa—yes, all of the world, I care to see and shall be glad when the time comes to say, Good-bye, Congo.

The steamer I am putting together is thirty-seven feet long, seven feet broad and 3 feet deep. It is a flat-bottomed craft and what is called a stern wheeler or driven by a paddle wheel behind. I never did such a job before, but I am prospering finely. The engine may bother me some, but God can and does help me. My health is good and my courage does not fail. Praise the Lord. I work eight hours per day as follows: rising at 6 A. M. I take my bath of tepid water. I then set my men to work and take breakfast. About 7:30 or 8 I get to work in earnest and continue until noon. I then bathe and put on all clean clothes for dinner. We rest until 2 P. M., then put on our working clothes and at 4:30 get a cup of tea; then work until about 6. After work my boy has the bath of tepid water ready, and I put my working clothes to air out doors, and put on a light suit, which consists of a flannelette shirt, a pair of light print pants, clean socks and white shoes, with a checked print short coat and a native grass skull-cap. At about 7 P. M. we dine, and I assure you our food is of the best imported stuff with a small mixture of native food. Eight of us white men eat together, but my being deaf keeps me from hearing much that would be neither pleasant nor profitable. I am not at all at home, nor can I settle down to a secular life. If God spares me to get again where people can understand me, I shall preach as I never have. I am happier in the vineyard than anywhere. Oh, it is painful to see the things I see and yet be powerless to help. Pray for me that God will give me the privilege again of preaching his glorious Gospel.

IS THE G. A. R. AN OATH-BOUND SOCIETY?

We notice an article in the Midland of last week under the above caption, by G. R. S. The question I wish to raise is this: Can ministers, elders and members of the United Presbyterian church consistently unite with the secret fraternity of the Grand Army of the Republic without violating their profession and vows? We believe it must be evident to every intelligent member of the United Presbyterian church that membership in this secret order is a violation of her standards, as understood and interpreted when they were adopted by the church at her organization. Membership not only in oath-bound societies, but where a promise or pledge is required, is equally a violation of the law of the church and the law of Christ. The oath-bound has the additional aggravation of profaning the ordinance of an oath. G. R. S. seems to assume that membership in a secret order is no violation of his profession as a United Presbyterian unless it is oath-bound. If this is his view he ought to learn at once "that his assumption is wonderfully wide of the truth." The Fifteenth article of our Testimony declares "That an oath, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, is inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity." Please examine the argument and illustration as published under this Fifteenth article in the Testimony, which was adopted to "serve as a guide to the meaning of the article;" see last paragraph of the Introduction to the Testimony.

This is in accord with the deliverances of the General Assemblies of '83 and '84:

"Resolved, That this Assembly do most earnestly and affectionately exhort all the members of this Church to abstain from connecting themselves with any secret associations," etc., on account of their injurious effects on society, and "they do especially urge ministers and elders of this Church to use their influence to keep our members from an incorporation with them." Vol. 3, page 539, Minutes of 1883.

"Resolved 2. That our people are hereby most earnestly entreated to remember that by their profession they have come under solemn obligations to Christ to oppose Secret Societies." Vol. 5, page 40, Minutes of 1884; page 190 of U. P. Digest.

I give these quotations to show that it is a new departure in the United Presbyterian church to take the position that the secret order must be oath bound for membership in it to be a violation of our standards.

Now, as to the G. A. R. At this writing I hold in my hand the "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, Headquarters Omaha, Neb., March, 1883." This is not "a myth," or "a fanciful imagination." This ritual came into my hands through a grand soldier of the Grand Army, who was induced to apply for membership in the so-called G. A. R., and went so far in the initiatory course as to be satisfied that joining it was a violation of his profession; and, being a loyal United Presbyterian, he declined to go through the process. On the third page of the ritual, "Directions to Post Commanders": "Should any officer or commander who has been intrusted with the rituals or cards allow the same to go into the possession of any person not duly authorized to receive them, it shall be sufficient cause for dishonorable discharge." "5th. No one shall be admitted during the opening muster in, or closing exercises." (c.) "Commander, we meet in Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty." "The chaplain will now invoke the divine blessing." Then follows a long prayer that winds up as follows: "And at last receive us into that grand army above where thou, O God, art the Supreme Commander." This prayer has no reference to Christ, or a Mediator. It is just like the Mason's speaking of the Grand Lodge above.

We now come to the initiation, or "muster in," of new members. After some formality the O. D. addresses the applicants: "Are you ready to take upon yourselves a solemn obligation, which will not interfere with your duty to your God, your country, your neighbor, or yourselves?" They answer, "I am." This explanation of the nature of the obligation is in keeping with, and modeled after, Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, and not yet known to the recruits. Now after considerable formality, such as you find in all secret orders, the new members, or recruits, are conducted to the altar and receive charges from the Commander. "C. to recruits:" "You stand at this altar, where you have listened to solemn prayer to the Great Father of us all. I beg you to reflect that this is no unmeaning ceremony, but that the obligation you now assume is a pledge which one comrade gives to another, solemnly calling upon God to witness the sincerity of his vow." Again: "We bid you welcome in Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty, until the assembling of the Grand Army of the Republic above." "You will receive from the O. D. the grip, signs, and counter-signs of our order."

Much more might be quoted, but it would occupy too much space. I ask, will G. R. S., of the Midland, or elder Ralston, of Hayesville, either of them, come before the public over his full signature and say that I have misrepresented the ritual from which I quote? It won't do, brethren, to use the old Masonic argument, "You don't know anything about the G. A. R." I do know many among the "grand" soldiers that served in the war, who have refused to connect with the G. A. R., it being a secret order. I don't wonder that G. R. S. suggests at the close of his article to quit agitating the order, and let it alone. We never fear agitation only when we are on the wrong side of a question. I am very sorry that a United Presbyterian Presbytery has of late taken action in favor of the order. But we need not be surprised at this, when we find that some pastors have Masons in their churches, and make no effort to remedy it. When one important landmark of the church is removed it seems to cause a disregard for the remaining laws. My earnest suggestion to all my brethren is, that we stand aloof from all secret orders, and be loyal to our church, to our solemn vows, and to Christ. Yours in open fraternity.—James Dawson of Washington, Iowa, in the Christian Instructor.

GRAND ARMY FRAUDS.

Reports are current that government officials here have discovered a conspiracy among certain members of the Grand Army to rob the government by false pension claims. An investigation of certain Grand Army posts discovered a wide-spread conspiracy. A prominent member of the G. A. R. was interviewed by a reporter of the New York Times. He said:

"Some of the worst scums of the earth managed to get in some posts and their element grows strong, while respectable members who do not care to associate with them stay away from meetings. This feeling has led to the state of affairs in a certain lodge in this city. The bad element controlled it and were linked together to work the pension 'racket' for all it was worth, stopping at nothing to accomplish their purpose. Furthermore, they even furnished money to defend Darling, Coleman and Stephens, arrested for presenting fraudulent claims, on the ground that they were being persecuted, and by this claim good men were compelled to assist in carrying out the scheme. The public was appealed to in the name of the 'old veterans,' but nothing was mentioned about a defense fund, and honest men's money was given, but not for the purpose for which it was used."

Another highly-respected old soldier said:

"I am heartily glad that this thing will be investigated. It is rotten to the core, or at least it appears to be, and the men that are into it do not show anything else. I have had suspicions for a long time, but the tracks were so thoroughly covered that I could not see the crookedness. I understand that the government has sufficient evidence to make the wholesale arrests, and that many of the persons implicated are being continually shadowed, and will be arrested after the Patterson case is concluded."

This case presents a phase of lodge history very common throughout the country. Evil-minded men, crooked men, rascals, in fact, "scums," get into the lodges from Masonry down to the G. A. R. Honest and decent men get disgusted with such affiliations and quit attending the meetings, but keep up their membership and pay their dues. The "scums" are in their glory then. They can run the lodge to suit themselves, they have the character and good standing of these stay-at-home members to back them up, and they also have their dues to help them keep in running order. The result is quite frequently just as the G. A. R. men quoted say it has been in certain G. A. R. posts. "Good men were thus compelled to assist to carry out their schemes."

We do not blame the decent men for getting disgusted and staying at home, but they should renounce their membership under such circumstances and quit paying dues. Their skirts would then be clear of being brothers in the iniquity and the lodge would be weakened in reputation and financial standing.

While men retain memberships in lodges they ought to attend, for a man ought to be faithful in all good works. If it is not a good place, he ought to withdraw his name and remove his obligation. While he remains a member he is still yoked and is responsible for the evil done by the lodge as a lodge. He only is free when he renounces his membership and his covenant.—The American, Washington.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

The Board of Directors met on Saturday morning in Carpenter Hall and transacted an unusual amount of business. Rev. George Warrington, being present, was invited to sit as a corresponding member. The report of a committee on the Washington Building, appointed some time since, was read. The committee who examined the records and prepared it were Pres. L. N. Stratton, Rev. Alexander Thomson and Secretary J. P. Stoddard. It was adopted unanimously with no material change, and voted to be printed.

The Secretary and General Agent was instructed to go to Washington to take charge of the property and interests of the Association at the proper time. The Board voted a series of brief instructions to agents presented by the Treasurer. Bro. M. N. Butler, having signified his readiness to again engage in lecture work, the General Agent was instructed to make a contract with him.

On account of ill health Dr. J. E. Roy felt constrained to resign, with kind words for his relations to the Board. T. B. Arnold of the Free Methodist, Chicago, was appointed by vote to take the place. A paper addressed to the secretaries of the American Missionary Association upon the Southern work of the two societies was read and referred to a committee. The members of the Board and others signed a request to Mr. F. W. Capwell, chairman of the American National Committee, to call as early as possible a meeting of all voters who could not support lodge men at the polls.

The report of the Washington committee is as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE WASHINGTON BUILDING.

To the National Christian Association Board of Directors:—Your committee, to whom was referred the matter of the tenure and occupancy of the property at 215, 4½ St., N. W., Washington, D. C., known as the "Washington Building," beg leave to report as follows:

We have consulted the N. C. A. records and the current literature concerning the progress of the Washington movement. The first mention of the Washington matter, found in the records of the N. C. A. Board of Directors, under date of Nov. 29, 1882, is as follows:

"The General Secretary read letters from Senator Pomeroy on a headquarters in Washington D. C., for this reform. The Secretary also reported his obervations there.

"Voted, That in the judgment of this Board it is expedient to secure property in Washington as a headquarters for this reform.

"Voted, That the General Secretary be instructed to take such steps as in his judgment are best in reference to securing such property for headquarters in Washington.

"Voted, That the General Secretary be instructed to call the next annual convention in Washington if it be deemed expedient.

"Voted, That the Board of Directors of the National Christian Association tender a vote of thanks to ex-Senator S. C. Pomeroy and Milton Ford, Esq., for the attention given to our proposed purchase of real estate in the city of Washington, and request them to co-operate with Secretary Stoddard in securing such a property."

Report of the General Agent, adopted at the N. C. A. Annual Meeting, June 21, 1883, on "Washington Enterprise:"

Rev. H. H. Hinman, by request of a few friends, visited Washington, D. C, immediately after the Batavia Convention. He began his work by distributing tracts among the people on the streets and holding meetings wherever places could be secured.

"Under his able and judicious management a movement was inaugurated which has already attained to unexpected success. At Bro. Hinman's request, and with the approval of your Board, I visited Washington, looked over the field, made the acquaintance of valuable friends and assisted Bro. Hinman at meetings held in the City Hall. The importance of Washington as a strategic point, and the strength of our opponents in their concentrated force there, were two things that deeply impressed me. It was also clear to my mind that by no human possibility could our reform obtain a vantage-ground under the guns of the enemy and maintain its position without first possessing itself of a location and b uilding suited to its needs."

In the Cynosure of Oct. 19, 1882, Agent H. H. Hinman writes from Washington as follows:

"By invitation I addressed them (the Washington Christian Association) and some time was spent in considering ways to promote our reform. Two things were suggested: That we have an agency here like that in New England, and that one or more colporteurs be employed to distribute the publications of the N. C. A. It is believed that a considerable part of the expense could be raised here. In view of the great influence that Washington exerts as a moral and political center, it seems to me most eminently desirable."

To the Cynosure of Nov. 2, 1882, General Agent J. P. Stoddard writes:

"A brief call on Senator S. C. Pomeroy was very satisfactory. His counsels and those of Mr. Gibson and a few other practical business men whom I have met, have been of great service to me. They enter heartily into our plans and I hope to report matters of interest before the week ends. My own conviction and that of Bro. Hinman and all the friends I have met here is, that we should take a permanent stand and maintain it. Much care is required in laying foundations, but it will pay in the end."

From the General Agent in the Cynosure of Nov. 9, 1882:

"A few men of means here are willing to co-operate with the National Christian Association in establishing permanent quarters, and they, with others who will be found, would contribute quite a sum in support of any judicious plan based on 'rock bottom' that gives reasonable promise of healthy growth, however slow. In my judgment there is not another point in the whole land at which so many can be reached from all parts of our own and other countries."

The General Agent writes to the Christian Cynosure of Nov. 16, 1882:

"Shall we plant a standard in Washington? To do this, in my judgment, two or three things are indispensable:

"1. The fees-simple of suitable headquarters must be secured, so as to avoid the possibility of being driven from the field or seriously annoyed by timid or unfriendly landlords.

"2. The people away from the center must be reached and constantly informed of what is going on at the headquarters of the nation and of the secret empire.

"3. Prof. E. D. Bailey, or some other capable judicious man, must be stationed and equipped where he can gather facts and report regularly every week through our Chicago organ.

"The first may be secured by the safe investment of a few thousand dollars; the second by the circulation of the organ of our reform, and the third by the appointing and the anointing of a man whom God shall choose."

From the General Agent in the Cynosure of Jan. 4, 1883:

"* * * Its readers will be pleased to know that arrangements for a Washington department of the National Christian Association are well under way, and that movements at our nation's capital will be noted and reported by a live man already on the ground." This referred to Joseph Bowes, Esq.

In the Cynosure of Jan. 11, 1883, the General Agent writes:

"God has opened an effectual door and thereby indicated his will. A house and lot, less than three blocks from the capital * * * is within our reach. The title is said to be perfect, and it can be bought for $7,000 cash.

"Where is the money to come from? I answer: Five thousand dollars have already been provided for, on condition the whole sum is raised.

"Who will own the property? You ask the question as a business man, and wish to know who will look after the property if purchased. I answer: It will be deeded to the National Christian Association, to be used for a branch office and quarters for the Washington department of its work, and will of course be controlled as other property of the Association is."

Joseph Bowes, Esq., Washington, D. C., to the Christian Cynosure, Feb. 22, 1883:

"The friends of the cause here are greatly encouraged by the action of the National Association in purchasing this property. It is to them the signal of succor in a struggle that has been sustained against overwhelming odds. It will bring many to our aid who are now hid away discouraged, and will be the commencement of the work of raising such a beacon light as will be seen from the utmost corners of the land. It is felt here that we work on a vantage ground such as is presented by no other city of the Union, for if we only can get the minds of those who congregate at the capital strongly leavened with the principles of anti-secretism there is no point from which it will operate more quickly throughout the whole mass of the people than this."

Action of the Board of Directors, April 13, 1883:

"Voted, To request Mr. Gault to prepare such legal papers as are necessary to enable the N. C. A. to secure the Washington property as soon as a sufficient amount has been paid for the same.

"Voted, To instruct the treasurer to pay to the General Agent any money contributed for the Washington Building as it shall be needed."

Action of the N. C. A. Annual Meeting, June 21, 1883:

"We recommend: 1. That the General Secretary make a deed of the Washington property purchased for the use of the N. C. A. to said corporation and that said corporation assume the General Agent's obligation to Vice-Admiral Rowen for said property.

"2. We recommend that there be established in the city of Washington a paper, to be published by a joint stock company, and that so soon as may be the various State American party papers be consolidated in the same.

"3. Respecting the care of the building in Washington we recommend: (a) That such rooms as are required be set apart to the uses of the Association by the General Agent. (b) That such other rooms as may be in the building be rented at current rates. (c) That the Board of Directors be instructed to employ some competent person or persons to take charge of the building continuously, and that at such time as they may see fit they send President J. Blanchard to Washington to act for the cause, paying him therefor at the rate of one thousand dollars a year and expenses, unless he be paid for his services as editor, in which case he shall receive his expenses only."

Editorial letter in Cynosure of March 1, 1883:

"Mr. Stoddard has requested me to correspond with papers in several States and to confer with ex-Senator Pomeroy on the organization and interests of the American party. We are receiving letters proposing a newspaper company to start a 'National American' paper at Washington."

From the General Agent in Cynosure of March 1, 1883:

"Is it wise to agitate the question of a political organ at Washington, and the organization of a stock publishing company there in a building on which there is a mortgage?"

Editorial letter from Washington in Cynosure, March 8, 1883:

"This house is purchased to give the country news from Washington, which is not strained through Masonic sieves; to put the platform of the American party before the American people; to extract the lodge-virus from every church in this city which does not fully worship 'the god of this world.'"

From Report of the General Agent adopted at the N. C. A. Annual Meeting, June 21, 1883:

"To meet the increasing demand for information on this subject, not furnished by the general press, a number of small monthlies have been started in different States devoted to the advocacy of the American party and its platform. These have each a local and limited circulation, and I would respectfully suggest an expression by this body of your opinion as to the feasibility of an effort to unite these several papers as the basis of a national organ to issue from political headquarters at Washington, under the management of a joint stock publishing company, organized for that purpose, which shall be independent and self-controlling."

Action of the N. C. A. Board of Directors, Oct. 13, 1883:

"The General Agent read a paper upon the permanent agency at Washington. The paper being considered, article by article was adopted as follows:

"Whereas, It is the judgment of this Board that E. D Bailey is a suitable and most available man to take charge of the building purchased for the N. C. A. at No. 215 4½ St., Washington, D. C.; and,

"Whereas, There is an unpaid balance on said property which it is desirable to cancel at the earliest possible date; and,

"Whereas, A number of friends of the N. C. A. have signified a willingness to unite in a joint stock company to publish a paper advocating the principles embodied in the platform of the American party; and,

"Whereas, The time has come for a more thorough and systematic organization of the anti secrecy friends; therefore,

"Resolved, That we appoint Rev. E. D. Bailey to co-operate with the General Agent in the Washington department of our work, (1) In taking charge of our interests and renting such portions of the Washington building as are not required for the Association's use. (2) To solicit funds to pay the indebtedness remaining on the said property. (3) That he be authorized to co-operate with such friends as may be enlisted in the formation of a joint stock company to publish a paper advocating the principles of the American party, to lecture, organize and do such other work as the anti-secrecy cause may require, and further,

Resolved, That when such joint stock company is organized and ready to enter upon the publication of a paper as above stated, we recommend that the said company be allowed the use of rooms for composition and office free of charge until the annual meeting of the N. C. A. in June, 1884.

"Resolved, That we deem it highly important that E. D. Bailey enter at once upon the work of raising funds to clear the building of debt and the organization of a joint stock company, and that he make his headquarters in Washington as soon as arrangements can be made to accommodate the parties interested.

"Voted, That the above paper is adopted with the distinct understanding that this Board assumes or expects to assume no authority whatever in or over the joint stock company when it shall be formed; our only purpose being to assist in the formation of the company."

Agent E. D. Bailey reports from Washington in the Cynosure of Nov. 8, 1883:

"In accordance with the request of the Board I came here as soon as prior engagements would allow. My enthusiasm has arisen ever since my arrival.... There are more good things to be noted than I had supposed. We held a consultation meeting last evening and organized a Washington Executive Committee to oversee the work here and push on the organization elsewhere."

The American Publishing Company of Washington, D. C., was organized December 25, 1883, and obtained its charter from West Virginia, January 2, 1884, as reported by E. D. Bailey in the Cynosure of January 3 and 17, 1884.

Action of the N. C. A. Board of Directors, Feb. 9, 1884:

"The General Agent reported the condition of the Washington fund and the amount already paid on the Washington building.

"Voted, That the Board appropriate the amount necessary to complete the payment on the Washington property and authorize the General Agent to draw on the treasury for the necessary funds."

Mr. Bailey became the agent of the American Publishing Company and his official relations with the N. C. A. ceased.

In February, 1884, the General Agent rented the unreserved portions of the Washington Building to the American Publishing Company.

At the next meeting of the N. C. A. Board of Directors, Mr. Bailey's last statement of claims against the Association, as its agent, was allowed. At this Board meeting, June 12, 1884, the following vote was also passed:

"Voted, That the arrangement with the agent of the American Publishing Company to rent him the Washington building for $50.00 per month for four months ending with June, 1884, be ratified."

AID GRANTED TO THE AMERICAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

The first grant by the N. C. A. was office and composition rooms free of rent.

At the annual meeting in June, 1884, prominent members of the American Publishing Company, as well as of the N. C. A., asked the Association to help the American Publishing Company during the year to come to the amount of one-half of the net income of the Washington Building, which was granted, and the Board of Directors were instructed as follows:

"Voted, To instruct the Board of Directors respecting the Washington building that, after reserving the use of one room for the N. C. A. and such others as are necessary for the publishing work of the American Publishing Company, the net income of the building be then equally divided between the treasuries of the N. C. A. and the American Publishing Company."

At the annual meeting in June, 1886, the agent of American Publishing Company asked the Association to grant the whole net income of the Washington Building for the coming year, as the life of the American depended upon it. This request was also granted.

In June, 1887, the N. C. A. Annual Meeting received a report from the agent of the American Publishing Company, in which he says:

"If in the judgment of the friends who hear this report the American shall continue to exist and be unhampered in its mission, I would respectfully ask that the same arrangement about the Washington Building which prevailed last year be continued. Nothing less than this will suffice. If you think the building and income can be better used, I shall submit cheerfully to your judgment, but the fate of the American hangs upon your action."

Action of the Annual Meeting June, 1887, on the above request:

"That we are not, without further information, able to say whether in our judgment the work done by the American is the best possible return for the amount of money invested in the building or not.

"We advise that the present arrangement with Bro. Bailey be continued until otherwise ordered by the Board of Directors, to whom we advise the question as to the disposition of that building be referred."

In pursuance of the foregoing instructions the Board of Directors have made careful investigation of the matter committed to them; the report of this committee being a part of their labors in this matter.

In view of the facts above recited, we believe it the duty of the N. C. A. to use the Washington Building for the purposes originally intended.

We recommend that our Washington representative be empowered to contract through Rev. E. D. Bailey with the American Publishing Company for space during the coming year to the amount of two hundred dollars, on condition that the American continue, as now, to assist in the mission of the N. C. A., and give to said representative space not less than fifty columns, during the year, to be used in promoting our work.

THE SONG MISSIONARY IN TEXAS.

Dallas, Texas.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Rev. George W. Clark of Detroit, Michigan, delivered three of his celebrated lectures here, one at the Baptist church Saturday night, March 31, and two at the Congregational church during the Sabbath following.

Bro. Clark is now seventy-six years old, yet he can hold an audience spell-bound for hours. He assailed intemperance, secret societies and the caste spirit. He exhorted the colored people to save their means and buy homes, educate themselves and build up their churches. Let nothing come between you and your duty to Christ, said he. He showed that the lodge and whisky were the greatest foes with which we colored people have to encounter. He illustrated by his charts the evil effect of tobacco and whisky upon the internal organs. He took a glass of pure cold water and held it up before his audience, illustrating the principles of temperance. With a voice as resonant as a bell he sang some of his "Reform Melodies."

The result of his visit and labor here is beginning to be realized already. Several persons have given up smoking and drinking. We wish Bro. Clark abundant success in his grand work, and bespeak for him a cordial welcome among our people throughout the South. Yours truly, (Rev.) J. W. Roberts.

AMONG THE CAROLINA COLLEGES.

The Cynosure Read and Appreciated and Bro. Hinman Welcomed by Presbyterians and Baptists.—The Union of Presbyterians, North and South.

Concord, N. C., April 6, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—My stay at Orangeburg, S. C., was most pleasant and, I hope, profitable. The 660 students of Claflin University constitute the largest colored school I have seen in the South. I spoke nearly an hour in the crowded chapel. At the conclusion Prof. Townsend gave his experience as a Mason, confirming all I had said about the order, and expressing deep regret that he had ever been beguiled into its covenants. I also addressed the students of the Presbyterian school, preached in the Presbyterian church Sabbath afternoon, and at night spoke on temperance to a full house in the M. E. church.

Monday morning I left for Columbia, and on reaching there went directly to Benedict Institute, the large and excellent school under the patronage of the Baptist Home Missionary Society. I was most cordially received by Pres. C. E. Becker, who invited me to stay until next morning, when I could have an opportunity to address the school. They have had a prosperous year, with over 300 students and a considerable theological class. They had been pleased with the Cynosure and the books sent by the N. C. A., which had been read by the students to much profit. The ample and fine grounds and the large and commodious buildings make it one of the most desirable places for a school I have seen. Mrs. Benedict, a Christian lady from Rhode Island, through whose munificence the school was planted and the buildings in part erected, was there. She had been spending the winter in Columbia. I hope there may be more Christian women who will be equally large hearted.

I spoke to the assembled school for about fifty minutes and had excellent attention. The president added a few words of approval. Afterwards I attended his theological class, and was much interested in the discussion of the question of natural and moral ability.

At noon I went across to Allen University, the school of African M. E. church, under the care of Pres. Morris. There are none but colored officers and teachers in this institution. It has had a prosperous year, and has now about 250 students, including a theological department. They are doing an excellent work, but are greatly in need of more and better buildings. I was cordially received by the president, who assembled the entire school in a long hall, where, for want of seats, they remained standing, and gave excellent attention during the forty minutes in which I presented my indictment of the lodge. Among them were a number of pastors from the city and vicinity, some of whom were Masons; but I think all received my talk pleasantly. The Cynosure is appreciated here and is doing good.

At 2 P. M. I left for Winnsboro, N. C., thirty miles north. Here I was disappointed in not finding Rev. Mr. Richardson, and in learning that his school has been given up. I called on two of the pastors. Rev. J. T. Watkins, Presbyterian pastor, is in hearty sympathy with us. He has had experience in Odd-fellowship and is thoroughly tired of the whole system. The A. M. E. pastor is a Mason, and was disposed to be very reticent.

I stayed over night, and went next morning to Chester, where is Brainard Institute, the excellent Presbyterian Seminary under the care of Rev. S. Loomis. It has a beautiful location, good buildings, and a new one in process of erection. They enrolled last year 326 pupils. Dr. Loomis was, as PROHIBITION AND REFORM IN TEXAS.

Anderson, Texas, April.

Dear Cynosure:—Since last writing, I have visited Huntsville, the site of one of the State prisons. Huntsville is forty miles away, and I stopped over at Prairie Plains. Here I met Rev. G. B. Ovis, who was initiated an Odd-fellow more than two years ago. Like every other pastor who is ready to tell the truth, he admitted the wickedness of the whole business. He said he had paid more than $75 00 into his lodge,—more than he had paid in the church during all the years he had been a member. He wiped his hands and regrets that ever he stooped so low as to unite with men to hold midnight meetings and swindle his brothers of their earnings. He has a large family and says he feels that he ought to be punished for swearing to keep secrets from his wife and children whom he prizes above every other earthly thing. Bro. Ovis says, God helping him, no one will ever blind-fold him with another lodge. He is above the average of our pastors. Though he lives here, he preaches at Huntsville. He accompanied me on to that city. I preached twice on Sabbath, April 1st, and spoke on prohibition on Monday night.

I ought to say here that no one sends me to speak, nor does any one pay me. The subject of reform is very unpopular, but out of love for a people who need instruction as much or more than anything else, in God's name I go, and have been going for thirteen months.

In this time of quietude the people hear many, who were shouting against prohibition in our State campaign, say they will not vote for General Fisk. I called to see several white men who were strong Prohibitionists last summer, who say they will have nothing to do with it any more. They are going with their respective parties. The city election came off while we were there, and a Christian gentleman, one who gave money and worked to carry prohibition last year, was elected mayor, and a preacher was elected recorder, though each are Democrats now. There are few saloons here, and they seem to do a poor business. Huntsville is one place where the liquor lords did not elect the city officers. There are few lodges there, but Freemasons have recently organized.

I visited the prison; it was a pitiful sight. In the superintendent's office I met a colored woman whose time was out and a certificate of release given. With tears of joy she exclaimed, "Thank God, I am free again!" We are working and praying that the cause of crime may be stopped, and if the cause is stopped the effect is sure to follow. Of all nations who need prohibition, I think my people need it most. Every other nationality seems to get a hold in the soil quicker than we, though we felled the forest and uprooted the stumps.

I read with great regret Bro. Countee's troubles. God alone can heal the wounded heart. We shall not forget him in our prayers.

It will soon be time for the meeting of our associations; there are twenty-five of them. With a good agent in Texas an abundant harvest can be garnered for the Master. I shall do all I can, and hold up the arm of any one who will come. We are getting ready for the State and National Prohibition Conventions. The former meets in Waco on the 25th inst. I shall be there, if it is only to show which side I am on. God bless all our efforts for good.

L. G. Jordan.

PERIL AND SALVATION.

Kingston, Ill.

Dear Cynosure:—In view of the perilous times that are upon us as a nation, as seen in the war of 1861, and specially since the great Cincinnati riot a few years ago, originating in the hailing signs of distress from the Masonic and other secret societies, I am constrained to a few words for your consideration.

This secret empire power is developing to an alarming extent. (See Jer. 9th.) There are many prominent cases where the secret societies have been emboldened to screen men guilty of the greatest crimes. The power of this hailing sign of distress must be considered and acted upon promptly, else we find ourselves as a nation in the same state as was the house of Israel, if Adonijah had been allowed to keep the reins of government in place of his brother Solomon. These facts give the ignorant and the low, base and vile, opportunity to take a position hostile to the welfare of the best government on earth. All the disasters that are growing out of strikes, boycotts, anarchists, etc., are traceable to the hailing sign of distress.

There is no other way for us to do as a people but to put on the brakes of prohibition to stop the downward course. Thank God, this can be done as easy as the putting of Solomon in possession of the government instead of Adonijah. I imagine that the rule in Absalom's hands represents Masonic rule, Adonijah the Odd-fellow rule, and that of American principles is like Solomon, put in possession of the government by the prayer to the king with corresponding effort. The prayers and efforts put forth, I trust, with repentance for the past negligence, this nation can be saved from ruin within the next six months. What will be the harvest of the secret lodge sowing if it be allowed to grow a few seasons longer? May God help us, who have "tasted the good word and the powers of the world to come," to consider the fiery billows in depraved hearts that are rolling beneath the best interests of family, church and state!

The lodgeites have no more interest in our government than Absalom had in securing power over the house of Israel. I feel that our ruin is as sure as was the city of Nineveh, which was saved by the preaching of one man, if we fail to show repentance within the next six months. The word of the Lord is coming to this great nation through the mouth of his servants of the N. C. A., and may be as grand in its results as in the two cases above mentioned if we work, pray in faith, and vote right. Yours for the glorious cause of truth and righteousness,

M. L. Worcester.

DON'T PAY FOR MORE SWINDLING.

Colby, Kan., April 10, 1888.

Editor Cynosure:—If you, for instance, attempt to sell me forty bushels of wheat for a certain sum, and then deliver me forty bushels of oats instead (of half the value), is there not a law by which I can be made to pay you under our contract? If not, then if you agree to communicate to me certain things as secret as the grave (you say) for a stipulated sum, of which I shall have the benefit; and if the pay comes regularly every quarter; and then I find out that the world in general knows all about this secret, and cease to pay the stipulated sum, do I in such case defraud? and where is the law in the book of God or out of it?

I paid thirty-one dollars for such secrets in Illinois and soon after could buy the same on the streets for twenty-five cents,—verbatim, as the lodge gave to me. To be strictly honest in the sight of God, the lodge would pay back every dollar it takes, or swindles, out of the unsuspecting. In the Cynosure of March 29, a brother says the Free Methodists said he ought to pay up, then leave the lodge. I am a Free Methodist and I wrote to him that the lodge is the one to pay. It is the one that swindled. I don't believe in paying Satan's agents.

In the Berean Lesson leaf for April 8 is a picture that looks so familiar. I wonder how it came about that it was put there. Every Odd-fellow in the churches, using the leaf will know it. It is a picture of the blind every member puts on when he is initiated. The lesson leaf truthfully calls it, "Hypocrisy."

An ex-Odd.

PUBLIC PROFESSION, SECRET DENIAL.

Duarte, Cal.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—You have been sending me the Cynosure now for a few months, for which I return you my earnest thanks. I esteem it as one of my best papers. It harmonizes with the Gospel, and with all just moral convictions of truth. Ever since the Morgan tragedy I have entertained a deep aversion for those secret lodges so prevalent in our land, especially so for the Masonic lodge. If this lodge be not anti-Christ, pure and simple, I do not know what anti-Christ is. They ignore the only Mediator between God and man. They turn him out in the cold and lock the door on him. Jews and pagans can do no worse. How any Christian can enter such a place is something I cannot divine. They either don't think, or they possess very strangely elastic consciences. To deny Christ secretly and acknowledge him publicly is bare-faced hypocrisy. Herein is Christ "wounded in the house of his friends." Can Christians intimately associate with the enemies of the cross of Christ? This is a moral absurdity, a plain contradiction.

I know from observation and experience that a large part of those belonging to the Masonic lodge are infidels, skeptics and drunkards. The lodge is their idol, their refuge and only hope. Some few years ago, while living in a town in Illinois recently visited with a most terrible cyclone, I urged the claims of the Gospel upon one of the leading Masons of the place, and his duty to the church of Christ. He replied, "Sir, I belong to a society good enough for me."

This man, like many others of his kind, never entered a church door. He was lawyer, vulgar and profane. This very man, with three other prominent Masons, were found in collusion, swindling the general government. As soon as the matter was discovered, they left the place for parts unknown. I lived at the same time in the same community.

When I said to another leading member of the lodge here, that Masons were guilty of the murder of Morgan, he said he deserved to be killed. In this same community, not a few of the members of the Methodist church belonged to either the Odd-fellows or Masons, and when their pastor in several sermons endeavored to expose the evils of the lodge, as well as their unfaithfulness to the church, they became mortally offended, and withdrew their support. The minister could do nothing better than leave. Lodge men are just as intolerant as the Roman Catholics. They cannot bear to be called in question. They profess to take the Bible for a basis, and march in procession with this open Bible; and yet Jesus Christ, whom they repudiate, "is the light of the glory of God the Father." He who rejects the Son, rejects the Father also.

PITH AND POINT.

KNIGHT TEMPLARS MOCKING CHRIST.

We have just had a Knight Templar Easter parade in our church (1st Baptist) in opposition to my earnest protest. I obtained some copies of tracts Nos. 11 and 14. These I used quite vigorously, provoking a sermon in rebuke from Hosea 7:8: "Ephraim is a cake not turned." This is all understood as an attack upon myself for objecting to this innovation on Baptist usage, and in persisting in calling attention to the one subject of organized secrecy. I think the day is not far distant when I can serve the cause of Christ more by withdrawing from than by laboring in a lodge-ridden body.—H. D. Whitcomb, Bloomington, Ill.

GOOD FOR PROHIBITIONISTS.

I am getting five Prohibition papers besides the Cynosure, but I think it is the best paper of the whole lot. I like the doctrine it advocates because I think secret orders or societies are a curse to this or any other country. I used to belong to one myself. I wish you God speed in exterminating them. I will try and get some new subscribers.—Geo. W. Pritts.

JAMES OWEN AND THE FRIENDS' TESTIMONY.

I forward for publication the testimony of our beloved friend, James Owen, in Iowa Yearly meeting of Friends in 1870. The question was, "Shall our testimony against secret societies be made more stringent?" He said, "I know as much about Freemasonry as any person that is not a member and I assert that the name of Christ is not in their forms of prayer, and hence it is an infidel institution." The amendment carried and Freemasonry was made a test of membership. His powerful ministry will long be remembered both in this country and in Europe. He quietly fell asleep in Jesus in his home at New Providence, Iowa, and was buried there. I visited his grave a few years past and copied in my day-book the following inscription from his grave stone:

"James Owen, died 1st month, 9th day, 1871, aged 48 years, 10 months and 27 days.

"Oh, call it not death, it is life begun;
For the waters are passed, the home is won,
The ransomed spirit has reached the shore
Where they weep and suffer and sin no more.
I am safe in my Father's house above,
In the place prepared by my Saviour's love."

He was a beloved minister in the Society of Friends.—Joseph Frazier.

THE BOSTON EVANGELIST FOR REFORMED ROMANISTS.

Please send the Cynosure to Thomas E. Leyden, evangelist.... He was twenty-eight years a Romanist and is now doing good service in trying to lead other deluded children of that darkness into the light of the Gospel. He has been preaching on the afternoons of the Lord's Day, during the past month, in Music Hall, which is crowded to overflowing at every service, many being unable to gain admittance. It is seated for 3,200; 500 extra seats were put in last Lord's Day. All were filled and all the standing room besides; so that, as it is estimated, about 5,000 were there. The Romanists have forced the battle here, and if they are not the absolute masters of the situation, which they claim to be, the fact will be discovered, for the controversy has begun, and in earnest.—Wm. Literature.

View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages. By Henry Hallam, L. L. D., F. R. A. S. Four volumes bound in two. Price, half-morocco, $2.50. John B. Alden, New York.

The celebrated author and historical student who began the publication of this great work in 1815 and completed it in 1848, wrote not for his generation alone. He seems to have no successor. His impartiality and truthfulness are stamped upon these volumes, and during his life were sometimes a source of provocation to partisan spirits. Yet he took part with Wilberforce and others for the abolition of slavery and in other benevolent movements. No subsequent histories of the times treated in these volumes have been able to displace them in the public esteem. No writer upon constitutional government has been able to surpass their learning, or excel in candor and that judicial spirit everywhere manifested in the discussions of this great work. Macauley, always a spirited party leader and one of the most popular of historians, speaks with enthusiasm of Hallam's high qualifications, his great industry, various and profound knowledge, steady impartiality and freedom from exaggeration. A peculiar value is given to this edition from the multitude of illustrations which are copies of rare old prints, tapestries, etc., dating back often for centuries, and showing the state of pictorial art during the times treated in the history. If the assumptions of Masonic orators were true, we should expect to find in these volumes some notice of so powerful an influence in society as Freemasonry; but the learned writer seems to have found so little influence, even by the societies of cathedral builders, in the affairs of society and the state that they seem not to be mentioned. These volumes are finely printed and beautifully bound, and yet the price places them within reach of all. A four-volume edition in cloth is sold for $1.75. For some readers, especially students, the latter has especial conveniences.

"Woman" has now reached its fifth number. We should judge its departments for practical hints and advice more valuable than the stories and illustrated articles. Of the latter "A Zulu Wedding" and "An Island and an Idyl," a sketch of Grand Manan island at the mouth of the bay of Fundy, are profusely illustrated. Of the departments one can not go far astray: "Helps and Hints for Mothers," "Home Decoration," and "Societies for Christian Work," are among the best.

In Words and Weapons Dr. Pentecost does not hesitate to speak again of the lodge among the hindrances to Christian work. His discourse on "The Christian and the Modern Dance" is one of the best arguments on this question which from time to time vexes the churches. Pastors who are unfortunately obliged to meet it will do well to circulate a few copies of this number of Words and Weapons. Dr. Pentecost also discusses "Union Revival Meetings as an aid toward Christian Unity" earnestly as becomes an evangelist of so wide experience and success. The department of news from the evangelists is a valuable addition to the magazine.

Another number of the London Illustrated News is devoted to the interesting historical scenes attending the death of the German Emperor William and the succession of Frederick. The splendid two-page portrait of the latter is, like that of his father in the previous number, one of the finest specimens of the engraver's art. Two other two-page pictures and numerous smaller ones with very full accounts of the funeral and sketches of both William and Frederick fill up a 22-page paper.

The Converted Catholic in its last number contains Father O'Connor's letters to Cardinal Gibbons and has a further argument on "The Pope in Politics." "The Church of Rome not the Church of Christ," "Our Country and our Duty," "Typical Catholic Saints," "Saint Patrick," and "The Bible," (the latter by Rev. John Lee, author of the pamphlet on Catholic Persecution) are among the articles which will be found of much value and interest. James O'Connor, publisher, 60 Bible House, New York.

The Library Magazine for April shows continued improvement and enlargement. An article by Minister Phelps in the Nineteenth Century on the "Constitution of the United States" will be read with great interest by Americans. "The Higher Education of Women" is another topic which is most timely since the Washington council of women. In biography and criticism, articles on "Ralph Waldo Emerson," "John Ruskin and his Works," and "Shakespeare or Bacon;" and on political and religious questions, "Islam and Christianity in India," "The Balance of Naval Power in Europe," "English and American Federalism," and "The Extraordinary Condition of Corsica" will be read with care, as will also Prof. Huxley on "The Struggle for Existence."

Thirty-two saloon licenses were taken out at Lincoln, Neb., Wednesday, and eight more are in the mill. Each saloon-keeper paid into the treasury of the school district $1,000. The $40,000 will enable the Board of Education to complete a large school building. Let there be an inscription cut in this building, "Built by Licensing Crime."

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON V, Second Quarter.—April 29.

SUBJECT.—The Talents.—Matt. 25: 14-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life. Rev. 2:10.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Words and Weapons.]

This is another parable relating to our Lord's second coming, and the relation of professing disciples to that event.

The Servants and their Trust.—God has no sons who are not servants. Jesus himself was at once the beloved son and the beloved servant. It is well for us, while we are rejoicing in the privileges of sonship, to be careful not to neglect the responsibilities of stewardship.

1. The servants' trust. "And he delivered unto them his goods." That is, he made over to them, for the purpose of trade, the portion of his substance which he had reserved to be so used. (See Eph. 4:8.) The gifts or talents here spoken of are not natural abilities, but what is added by way of grace. All along our Christian life, according to our faithfulness, God confers more and more grace upon us, in the use of all of which we are required to be faithful.

2. The measure of the trust. "According to his several abilities." This distinguishes clearly between natural and conferred talents. God's gifts to us are not arbitrary, but wisely bestowed according to our ability to make the best use of them. It is easily seen that in selecting his servants in past ages he has not made mistakes. The men selected for great trusts were all men of great natural ability. The Christian merchant is given larger gifts than his Christian bookkeeper or porter.

3. The universality of the trust. The man who received one talent did not have so great ability as the man who received five; nevertheless, he was not overlooked in the distribution. And it is observed that one talent in that time would equal about $5 000 in our day, so that we may conclude that, to the least gifted, a large comparative trust is committed. It will not do, in the face of this parable, for any disciple to attempt to excuse himself from service to Christ on the ground that he has neither talent nor ability.

How the Servants were Reckoned with.—Let no disciple for a moment suppose that his stewardship will be overlooked, however great or however insignificant he may be (2 Cor. 5:10; Eph. 6:8; Rev. 22:12). It will be noticed that this judgment refers to service and stewardship, not life, (Compare 1 Cor. 3: 9-16).

1. Of the first and second servants. Their coming and report were frank and fearless but not boastful. If we have done our Lord's work faithfully we need not fear to come before him and give account; and one may speak of his success and yet not be otherwise than humble.

2. Of the third servant. Alas, what an account is here! Conscious of his unfaithfulness, he begins to frame excuses which were as wicked as they were false, imputing to his lord that for which there was no foundation. But this is characteristic of the servants he typifies, who will, if possible, lay the blame of their failure upon some one else. When a Christian alleges that Christ's demands upon him for service are unfair and hard we may be sure that he is spiritually slothful and at heart wicked.

[From the Christian.]

The lesson of the parable is obvious. The Master who has gone away is the Lord Jesus Christ. The servants to whom he has committed his possessions are his people. The command to them is to trade or occupy till he shall come. The talents are all those gifts, graces, qualities, abilities, opportunities and privileges which the Lord has bestowed upon us. The duty of the servant as one who has been purchased by the Master, and is absolutely his, is to make the best possible use of everything entrusted to his care, so that gifts may increase, opportunities multiply, good extend and be perpetuated. The reward assigned need not be the governing of literal cities, as the gifts entrusted were not literal talents of silver or gold; but the reward indicates the future dignity and glory of the people of God, when those who have been faithful over a few things here shall be made rulers over many things hereafter, and shall reign with Christ in power and glory and majesty eternal. The time of reckoning is when the Master shall return and call his servants to give up their account to him. Then shall every man give an account of himself to God.

One solemn lesson is the special danger of people with one talent. There are persons who are constantly belittling their abilities, murmuring that they have not greater opportunities, and envying others who are more fortunate. The Master doubtless knew something of this man, that he was unfaithful and slothful, and that it was unsafe to confide to him any important trust. Still he thought he would try him with one talent; he did, and he proved unfaithful, and was cast out of his master's presence.

There are thousands of people who are constantly asserting that they have but one talent, and can do but very little. It is bad when a man cannot do much; it is worse when he will not do anything. The man with one talent is in special danger. This man had hard, envious and unthankful thoughts. He counted his master hard and unreasonable. Second, he hid his talent, and idled away his time. Third, at the reckoning day he sought to defend himself and his course of action by slandering his master, and finally he received the condemnation of the wicked and slothful servant, who is cast into outer darkness where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth. The one talent is taken away from the man who would not improve it, and is given to a man who had made good use of every opportunity. The man who has done little will do less; the man who has done much is the man who is likely to do more. A man wishing some work done in haste was told to give it to the busiest man in the office.

There are people who think the absence of the little they can do will never be noticed. It might not be noticed by men, but there is one who oversees all, and who notices everything. There is a story that when Sir Michael Costa was conducting the rehearsal of a great orchestra and chorus, as the hundreds of voices blended with the rolling of drums and the thunder of the organ, the clash of cymbals and the sounds of various instruments, one musician who played the little piccolo, thinking he was unnoticed, ceased to play. The great conductor stopped, flung up his hands and hushed the chorus and cried out, "Where is the piccolo?" God, who hears the chirp of every sparrow, the cry of every raven and the sigh of every child, knows precisely what we do, and will not forget our faithfulness nor excuse our neglect.

In Brief.

The most high toned dynasty in the world is that of Japan, according to a Japanese lecturer in the Berlin Academy of Oriental Languages. The Mikado is descended from the gods, and is the 121st of his race. The national religion, Sintoism, possesses 8,000,000 gods and saints, and there are 136,000 temples.

When a lady once told Archbishop Sharpe that she would not communicate religious instruction to her children until they had attained the age of discretion, the shrewd prelate replied, "Madam, if you don't teach them the divel will."

A notable conclusion of the report of the Massachusetts Labor Statistics is that all the remunerative work of the State, of whatever kind, could have been done, if all had had employment, in 307 days of 8.99 hours per day. That is, that the total product of all the manufactories, farms, etc, would have been the same under a nine-hour system, providing all had had steady employment.

It is estimated by Professor Kirchoff, of Halle, that the language most spoken on the globe, for the last thousand years at least, is Chinese, for it is without doubt the only one which is talked by over 400,000,000 of the human race. The next language most in use, but at a very great distance behind Chinese, is Hindustani, spoken by over 100,000,000. Then follow English, spoken by about 100,000,000; Russian, over 70,000,000; German, over 57,000,000, and Spanish, over 47,000,000.

Among the curiosities recently acquired by a San Francisco museum are a number of mummies, found imbedded in a stratum of lime in Mexico, just south of the Arizona line. Judging from their position they must have died in terrible agony. One of the bodies is that of a woman and her ears are ornamented with tubes stuck through them. They are covered with a coarse netting composed of grass and the bark of trees. They are supposed to have lain in the dried-up state at least 800 years, and it is not known to what race they belonged. The perfect form of a rat appears, which shared their burial place.

The Philadelphia American says: Recent instances go to show that the telephone is likely to become a much more important instrument than was supposed. We have now telephone communication for long distances, and it seems to be maintained under atmospheric conditions which put an end to telegraphy. In the recent storm there was not a telegraph line at work between Philadelphia and New York. But the telephone connecting the two cities continued to work, and was even used by the authorities of the railroads for their necessary messages."

An important discovery of coal was made a few days ago in Northern Mexico, near the Rio Grande, 200 miles south east of El Paso. The discovery is on lands belonging to Ex-Governor Celse Gonzales, of Chihuahua. The out-croppings of an immense coal bed were followed for ten leagues until they disappeared in a small range of mountains. Specimens of the coal were tested. The result was so gratifying that Governor Gonzales started at once for the City of Mexico to buy lands adjoining these which he now owns.

A Bright Addition.—Speaking of George Washington always reminds me of that good story of how Mr. Evarts told Lord Coleridge, when they were at Mount Vernon, the legend of Washington throwing a dollar across the Rappahannock. "But," objected Coleridge, "the Rappahannock's a broad stream." "Yes," retorted Mr. Evarts, "but you must remember that a dollar went further in those days." At a dinner party not long ago, Mr. Evarts was chaffed a little about the many stories attributed to him by the newspapers, and incidentally this one was praised as his best. "Oh," said Mr. Evarts modestly, "I don't say all the good things that are credited to me. Every now and then some anonymous newspaper paragraph says a wittier thing than any of us. Now, what I might have said to Lord Coleridge was that it was not so strange that George Washington threw a dollar across a river since he threw a sovereign across the sea.

In Mr. Kennan's Russian paper in the March Century, a chapter is devoted to the touching story of the celebration of the Centennial Fourth of July (1876) by the prisoners in the House of Detention in St. Petersburg. As early as the first week in June the three hundred "politicals" therein confined began to make preparations for the celebration by requesting relatives who visited them to send to the prison blue and red handkerchiefs, red flannel underclothes, etc., and before July 1st almost every prisoner had a roughly made American flag, or a few strips of red, white and blue cloth, and an inch or two of candle. Hours before the first midnight cannon announced the beginning of the great national celebration in Philadelphia, hundreds of flags and streamers were fluttering from the grated windows of the prison; and the prison guards, who had never heard of the Declaration of Independence and did not comprehend the significance of the remarkable outbreak, were busy hushing the cheers and seizing the streamers. At intervals through the day flags were hung out, and at night the prison windows were illuminated by the persistent celebrators of American independence.

$500 NOT CALLED FOR.

It seems strange that it is necessary to persuade men that you can cure their diseases by offering a premium to the man who fails to receive benefit. And yet Dr. Sage undoubtedly cured thousands of cases of obstinate catarrh with his "Catarrh Remedy," who would never have applied to him, if it had not been for his offer of the above sum for an incurable case. Who is the next bidder for cure or cash?

The Christian Cynosure.

Editors.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 19, 1888.

If history and experience prove or can prove anything, they prove that a country which tolerates slavery will be governed by it; and that churches which fellowship Masonry will be governed by the lodge. In 1620, twenty slaves landed at Jamestown, Va. They became four millions and ruled the United States till 1863. So, sixty years ago, Masonry fell, from the Atlantic to the frontiers West. The churches tolerated it, and the lodge now rules the United States, church and state.

The Chicago Times, April 9th, quotes from the Railway Conductor's Monthly, as follows: "The members of the order of Railway Conductors object to making themselves slaves to any man or body of men; and we submit that membership in a striking organization is, simply, a species of slavery."

The Monthly goes on to say of the laborer ordered to strike: "He must obey, and hazard the loss of situation, home, friends, society and everything he holds dear on earth, because the gang have got the control, and he must obey, each member simply taking the place of a piece in a great machine to be operated by a man unknown."

This is sensible. Now if the Times will go further and show how secrecy aggravates this "slavery" to unknown superiors, and turns this "gang" into bandits as well as slaves, it will deserve public thanks from all good citizens.

General Master Workman Powderly argues in the Journal of United Labor that the Government should own and operate the anthracite coal fields, and furnish that species of fuel to the people of the United States at a fixed price. This might benefit the burners of anthracite. But what of the interminable beds of bituminous coal? Must these lie unused, or must Government take these, too, and cover the railroads of the United States with its cars, and then own the roads to avoid swindling charges for its freights? How long, at this rate, would it be before "Government" must hold the stirrup for every man to mount his horse? If Mr. Powderly would disavow his "secrecy and obedience," and work for laborers in the light, like other honest people, he would see that individual enterprise would run the coal fields and cars better than politicians and Government officials, and save us from the armies of sheriffs and policemen which his government coal would make necessary. His sworn obedience to absolute power in the Knights of Labor so besots his mind that absolute power is his remedy for all evils; and if his ideas should prevail every housewife would soon need a constable to churn her butter.

THE SECRET FOE OF CONGREGATIONALISM.

At the late meeting of the Louisiana State Congregational Association in the Central church, New Orleans, April 4th, the editor of the Cynosure read by request the following paper before the body, and it was also requested that it be printed:

Jesus Christ is in whatever of religion he has appointed: whether doctrine, church-government, or rites; and Satan, the god of this world, inhabits all the rest.

This is the key which explains the rise and fall, progress and decline of all religions on earth, from the family of Adam to this hour. It is the object of this paper to apply this key to the history of the people called Congregationalists in Europe and the United States. God raised up a poor monk, Luther, to free the religion of Europe from the dominion of the Pope. Luther contended for faith in Christ; his followers fought for Lutheranism. He for the truth; they for the sect which was founded on it. And Coleridge has said that since the middle of the 16th century, the reformation has not advanced one step in Europe.

But sectarianism was not all, or the chief cause, of the decline of Protestant Christianity before popery. The main reliance of the devil against Christ has been, and still is, secret societies—promising salvation by ceremonies invented by men.

Ignatius Loyola formed a secret society in an underground chapel beneath the Church of the Martyrs, in Paris, France, and called it "The Society of Jesus." It first took twenty-eight days to initiate a Jesuit. But the initiation was so severe that it has been reduced to fourteen days. In 1540, this society was authorized by the Pope (Paul III.). This was twenty-three years after Luther began his reformation; and this secret order nearly swamped it. But the Jesuits became so destructive to religion and government, that all Europe cast them out, and in 1773, July 21st, Pope Clement XIV. suppressed the order throughout the whole world. But, by their secret practices, they crept back into power, and the Jesuits now are ruling and ruining the "Holy Catholic Church."

This order of Jesuits is now the head secret society of the world; and though the popes have condemned Freemasonry, the Jesuits formed the "Rite of Perfection," of twenty-five degrees, in the Jesuits' College of Clermont in Paris (1754), which now forms most of the Scottish Rite of thirty-three degrees, which to-day governs all the Freemasonry of the world. In so far the Freemasonry of the world to-day is the work of Romish priests; and though prohibited by Pope Leo XIIIth, is permitted by his priests.

The authority for these fearful facts is taken from standard Masonic writers, given in two volumes on the Scottish Rite, just issued by Ezra A. Cook, of Chicago, Ill.

Let us now come to Congregationalism. Luther in Germany nearly freed religion from the Pope; and Henry VIII. in England freed it from priests, monks and convents. And, during the reign of his daughter, Queen Elizabeth, a people called "Puritans," and "Pilgrims," arose in Nottinghamshire and Scrooby Manor in North England. These were afterward called Congregationalists, because each congregation did its own voting—governed itself. They did not intend to be called Congregationalists, but simply "churches of Christ;" and, to this day, the first church in New Haven, Conn., of which the distinguished Dr. Leonard Bacon was long pastor, is not called "Congregationalist," but simply "the First Church of Christ" in New Haven. They intended that all other churches, believing in Christ, should be numbered with them, and form one brotherhood. They recognized their baptisms and re-received their members. The Baptists are as congregational as the Congregationalists; and, if they, and Lutherans, Presbyterians, Methodists, etc., were, in every place, numbered according to their dates, together, first, second, third churches of Christ, etc., they might still retain their peculiarities and all be one in Christ Jesus. This the Congregationalists originally hoped. They even recognized the Church of England, whose bishops put them in pillories and prisons, cut off their ears, and, by their persecutions, drove them to Holland and thence to America. The name Congregational does no hurt, as a mere name of a society in law to own a church. But when used as the name of a sect, it is sin. The Puritans never intended it.

These Congregational Puritans spread in England, and their first society in London was broken up, and sixty-four men, women and children, were imprisoned in Newgate and Gilt Spur Compten for meeting to worship God as we do now, without leave of bishop or king. They fled by Holland to this country and founded our Republic. Each church settled a township, which was governed by its "town meeting." Several towns became a county; several counties a State; and the States became the "United States of America."

John C. Calhoun said: "The man who digs the money out of the earth, who makes it by his labor, has a title to it which is good against the universe." Congregationalism rests on that ground. It holds that those who give the money, build the church and support the pastor, are more apt to be right in doctrine and discipline, than preachers, assemblies, and conferences, which meet at a distance, and are often influenced by ambition, or the love of money and pre-eminence. But the ground on which Congregationalism rests is the Word of God, which recognizes the independence of local churches.

How happens it then that the Congregationalists, who were once the first denomination in this country, have sunk to the fifth or sixth; and now one fourth of their churches are without pastors, and one-fourth of their ministers are unemployed in ministerial labors? I answer, first, negatively:

1. It is not because Congregationalists do not give money. They started the American Board in 1810, and the first Home Missionary Society in 1816, which two now receive near a million dollars annually. Congregationalists have given more in proportion to their numbers than any other Christian people.

2. Nor is it because they are an ignorant or weak people. They have founded colleges and schools all over the United States.

The causes which have sunk Congregationalists are many; as:

1. New England people were opposed to slavery. The first slaves ever landed in Massachusetts were sent back to Africa at the expense of the State. The first modern Abolitionist society was started in Boston; and Jefferson Davis proposed to his Congress in Montgomery, "the reconstruction of the Union with New England left out."

2. Then, also, Congregationalists were not a sect; had no worldly church government, and so joined other denominations wherever they went.

3. But this is not all that has caused the relative decline of Congregationalism in this country. Freemasonry, which now covers Europe and the United States like a poisonous shroud, is as opposed to Congregationalism as despotism is opposed to liberty, or death to life. The first breach which ended in separation and independency, was caused by Hooper's refusing the popish habits as inventions of Anti-Christ. But those priest garments were nothing to the rig of Masonic priests. (Neal's Puritans, I., 52) And Bradshaw, cited by Bancroft (His. U. S., I., 279) says, "The Puritans held that, 'To institute and ordain any mystical rites or ceremonies of religion * * is gross superstition'" (Neal's Puritans I., 248), and, therefore, "UNLAWFUL." Hence the lodge is the secret deadly foe of Congregationalism. This explains the relative decline of that denomination, which followed the introduction of the lodge. The first Masonic lodge introduced into this country was started in Massachusetts in 1733; and the lodge slowly corrupted the church leaders in and about Boston. A monument to the Pilgrims was started awhile since on Burial Hill near Plymouth Rock, and the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts went down and laid the corner-stone with Christ's date, "A. D." supplanted by Satan's date, "A. L," as the Grand Architect of the Universe." In that Grand Lodge were Unitarians, deists, Universalists, and outright infidels, who never entered churches where Christ was worshiped! The late pastor of the historic "Old South Church" was a Master Mason; and the statistician of the denomination, who was prominent in the late Congregational Council in Chicago, in the American Board meeting at Springfield, and the late meeting of the American Missionary Association at Portland, Maine, is a Master Mason of thirty-two degrees. He has drunk "the cup of devils," invoking double damnation on his soul if he reveals their secrets, and he has voted for the party that supported slavery down to Buchanan. And many Congregational pastors are following this man into the Christless lodges, and brothering in secret with infidels, blacklegs and scoffers at religion. "And the Lord saw it and abhorred them, because of the provoking of his sons and daughters." Deut. 32: 19.

While these things are transpiring in the North, the millions of freed-people in the South are following the example of these Northern corrupters of Congregational churches, and Congregational pulpits and presses are silent while the lodges are sucking out all the spirituality of the churches. There is, as you see, in this city of New Orleans, and out of it, a perfect deluge of secret societies, with their false and Christless altars all over the South, drawing in young men by thousands, their money by millions, and their time by life-times.

But, blessed be God, though this "enemy has come in like a flood," the Spirit of God has lifted up a standard against him; and the South now seems to give promise of saving the North; and if the Congregational churches, North and South, shall shake off these accursed vipers which have fastened on their hands, as the vipers on Paul's, the old Puritan spirit will arise against the lodge as it did against slavery, and salvation will flow down our streets like a mighty river; new prophets will arise, like Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel; and "ye shall be ashamed of the oaks ye have desired" (to hold picnics under by night), "and the gardens which ye have chosen." Isa. 1: 29. And "those that seek unto familiar spirits shall be driven away." Isa. 8: 19. Some new Ezekiel shall rebuke the spiritual whoredoms of this day (Ezek. 16); and Christ shall "send forth his angels and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." Matt. 13: 41. Some modern Elijah shall call down fire from heaven, even the fire of the Holy Ghost, and our guilty nation forsake its false altars, fall down on their faces and proclaim, "The Lord he is the God!"

—Rev. J. A. Mackelvey, who has been engaged in prohibition work in Indiana, has returned to Chicago. Mrs. Mackelvey has been ably assisting him.

—Bro. M. N. Butler has for some weeks been kept at home by sickness in his family. Their recovery releases him, and his letter to the General Agent about taking up the work again was acted upon by the N. C. A. Board last Saturday.

—Rev. C. F. Damon, agent for Orleans College, Nebraska, is in Chicago endeavoring to raise a few thousand dollars to tide the institution over a pressing debt. This institution is under control of the Free Methodist church, and stands by the banner of Christ.

—Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit passed into his 78th year on the 30th of March, and his numerous friends in Detroit suitably celebrated the occasion. Our readers have a share of the good things of the day in the beautiful poem by Miss S. E. Adams, which we have the pleasure of printing on the second page.

—Among the welcome visitors at the Cynosure office last week were E. F. Sox of Albany, Oregon, one of the substantial business men of the far northwest State and related by marriage to Dr. Norris of Birmingham, Iowa; also Rev. Louis Auger, pastor in Detroit of one of the churches of the Grande Ligne Mission for French Catholics.

—Bro. Philip Bacon writes of the success of the special meetings held in Weatogue, Conn., by Elder S. C. Kimball of New Hampshire. The work was continued three weeks, a number were converted, and Christians were much revived in faith. A Sabbath-school was organized, and the brethren hope to hold a weekly service for Christian worship.

—The reform bard, Bro. George W. Clark, writes from Marshall in northeastern Texas, that he is still "on the wing," somewhat worn and weary and ready to droop with the heat which is driving him northward. He has spoken fifty times in public meetings and sung on three times as many occasions since the National Convention at New Orleans Feb. 17th —a good record for seventy-six years.

MICHIGAN SOLDIERS, ATTENTION!

To the Grand Army of this Republic:

Greeting:—As soldiers of the cross of Christ, enlisted to strive against all sin, we propose to hold an Anti-Secret Convention at Salem, Washtenaw Co, Mich., beginning May 22, in the evening, at 7:30 oclock.

Let there be a grand rally, with every soldier at his post.

A more extended call soon. Let all interested watch for it. Remember the date, May 22, 23, 24, 1888.

heretofore, personally very hospitable and kind, but does not feel interested in our movement, and does not favor discussion, though he has no sympathy with the lodge system.

At 4 P. M. I left for Gastonia, N. C., which place was reached at about 7 P. M. I had a pleasant visit with Rev. E. E. Boyce, the veteran Associate Reformed Presbyterian minister, whose sympathies are with every good work, but who is specially earnest for the Prohibition party. I stayed at the hotel and left at four next morning for Charlotte, N. C., which we reached in the early dawn. After two hours' waiting I went over to Biddle University, where I was most cordially received by Pres. Johnson, and most hospitably entertained. This school, with its fine buildings and able faculty, is under the patronage of the Presbyterian Board of Missions, and is their most important school in the South. It is exclusively for young men, and designed especially for the training of ministers. Nearly all the colored Presbyterian pastors in the South are graduates from this institution. Pres. Johnson and his co-professors seem all to be in cordial sympathy with our work.

At 9 o'clock we went to the fine chapel where we met the assembled faculty, about 180 young men, and several pastors who had come to attend the Catawba Presbytery, which was to convene in the Presbyterian church near by. By request of Pres. Johnson I addressed the assembly for about forty minutes and had undivided attention. We then went over to the Biddleville church where the Presbytery had convened. I found them to be an intelligent body of men, and representing the better religious element of this region of country. I was invited to sit as a corresponding member, and was given an opportunity to present the work and claims of the N. C. A. The proceedings were interesting, though all spoke of trials and hardships as well as success. I found that quite a number were readers of the Cynosure, and prized it as an aid in their work.

Colored Presbyterian churches are generally smaller than those of other denominations, and the pastors get a rather meager support. Besides paying for a denominational paper they can do little more, and if they get our paper they will have to receive it, in part at least, as a donation. I know of no cheaper or better way of promoting our reform than to send the Cynosure to these intelligent and cultured ministers.

From what I can learn there is little prospect of re-union between Northern and Southern Presbyterians. It seems to me as undesirable as it is improbable. With the present feeling in the Southern church there can be no union unless Northern Christians consent to a color line, both in the churches and the ministry. Several of the professors at Biddle have been missionaries in India. They can see no reason for opposing caste there, and adopting it here.

The moderator of the Catawba Presbytery was Rev. D. J. Satterfield, principal of Scotia Female Seminary of Concord, N. C. At 6 P. M. I took the cars with him for that place, twenty-three miles, where I have since enjoyed their kind hospitalities. Scotia Seminary is also under the care of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. They have fine buildings, about 250 students, with thirteen teachers. Last night, by invitation, I addressed the students, briefly, as I was very weary. To-day I have visited different recitation rooms and have been more than gratified with the excellent drills. The president tells me that they have been obliged to reject many applications for want of room, and that they greatly need enlarged facilities. In five days, ending last night, I have visited six institutions of learning and spoken seven times. I am thankful, but weary, and must have some rest.

MORE AND BETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS.

Lodge Ku klux Repudiated—The Louisiana State Congregational Association unanimously Vote against the Lodge.

New Orleans, La., April 6, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—It seems as though Rev. M. Dale must be the only ministerial defender of lodgery in New Orleans. The Knights Templar (colored) had their Easter celebration at his church last Sabbath. I am told that he again attempted to prove that Freemasonry is not an anti-Christian institution. He said, any man or minister that says Masonry is anti-Christian is a fool. He said God himself was a Mason; and he attempted to prove it by saying that God created man, and man established Masonry; hence God being the Creator he must have been a Mason. Masonry, he added, is doing what the church can't and never will do; that is, it is binding all men in one universal brotherhood. This, he said, the church can't do because it is not universal but sectarian. Some are Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational, etc., but Masonry is one and universal; hence Masonry is Masonry everywhere. The speaker said a man must first become moral before he could be converted, and that is just what Masonry is doing, making men moral and preparing them for conversion. Many of the lodge men think Rev. Dale's remarks have ruined Masonry.

I am in receipt of a letter from Amite City, where the Negro Odd-fellows tried to mob me last Sunday. Here is the letter:

Amite City, La., April 2nd, 1888.

Dear Brother:—I am requested by the white citizens of this town to ask you to come back and they would assure you protection. If you will come let them know or myself, and they say that if it is necessary they will meet you at the depot. They want you to come, for the colored people pretend that the whites engaged in a secret plot to mob you, and the whites deny the assertion. I hope you will come, and I think you will be safe if you do conclude to come. We have been consulting over the matter, and we can prove that you have done no crime worthy of being treated as you have been. If you do come let me know and send up some notices and I will post them up for you. Your brother, R. Vernon.

Bro. V. is the young minister that protected me to the very last moment Sunday night, and even walked with me down the railroad below Gullett's Mills. It was Bro. Vernon's house that Budd Williams and a Methodist preacher, with their bloodthirsty assassins, surrounded at about twelve Sunday night, and commanded sister Vernon to tell them where I was. This will about kill out the Negro lodges of Amite City.

I have letters from both Bayou Goula and Morgan City, urging me to come thither as soon as possible. The fruit is ripening all over the State. The Masons themselves are denouncing Mr. Dale's would-be Masonic sermon of last Sabbath.

The State Conference of Congregationalists met Wednesday, April 4th, at Central Church. President J. Blanchard read an interesting paper on lodge worship, which was unanimously approved, as I am informed, with one single exception, Dr. R. Hitchcock of Straight University, who denounced all that was said, stating, "Its a pack of lies." I attended the Association and was introduced and very heartily received as an N. C. A. agent, and was invited to participate in their discussions. A number of pastors and delegates spoke their convictions against lodgery, and two brethren, applying for licensures, decided to give up their secret lodges and preach the Gospel of separation.

The Association adjourned at one o'clock for lunch, and the ladies had everything prepared. In the afternoon, Prof. M. L. Berger being moderator, after prayer and transacting other business, the following were examined for licensures: Joseph A. Rushaw, David Sutton, J. H. Haynes, Reuben Baykins and Wm. C. Brown. They were very closely questioned about tobacco, liquor and secret societies; Revs. Gunner, Clay, Claiborne and Butler stating that they could not conscientiously vote to grant their request as long as they were guilty of either of the above. Bro. Sutton thought it hard to give up his lodge, but finally consented to do so.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted, not one voting nay:

Resolved, That an organization which requires an oath or pledge of secrecy of its candidates, prior to admission, is thereby different from and opposed to a church of Christ and a republican State, and we exhort all of our members to have no fellowship with these unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them.

Resolved, further, That this Association will not license or ordain a minister who is not separate, or who will not separate himself from all oath-bound secret organizations.

The above was offered by Revs. B. Gunner and J. L. Wimby. Dr. Berger very strongly endorsed the resolution. Bro. Zemar, a deacon of Central Church, at first opposed it, but finally supported it.

God is working on our part, brethren. Cheer up! Cheer up! We'll gain the day. F. J. Davidson.

FROM THE OHIO STATE AGENT.

DEATH OF PETER MINTON.

Germantown, O., April 12, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—Since my last I have visited New California, Hamilton, Millville, Oxford, College Corner, College Hill, Glencoe and Cincinnati. As my work has been largely in the canvassing line, a detailed account would be uninteresting to the general reader. In most of the above places I had previously lectured and secured Cynosure readers. I find the seed sown is growing. At New California I found the United Presbyterian church in excellent working condition. Bro. E. E. Cleland, the pastor, has been greatly blessed in the conversion of a large number of the young people. Some fifty have recently united with the church. At Millville the people were greatly stirred on the temperance question. A vote was taken in Ross township under the new local option law. The anti-saloon party were defeated by seven votes. Though defeated they do not feel at all discouraged, as the vote showed a great advance in their favor. They received over a hundred votes more than were given for the constitutional amendment. At the request of the president I addressed the young people's temperance society of this place. A vote of thanks was tendered by the society.

Millville has also been blessed during the past winter with a great visitation of God's power in the conversion of many souls. Among this number is Harvey Minton, a former associate at Wheaton College, at whose home I have always received a cordial welcome.

His father, Bro. Peter Minton, has gone. After a brief illness of eight days, he passed peacefully "through the valley of the shadow of death." We shall miss him greatly in our work. His memory will be cherished by many who have received his assistance in their efforts against the lodge. Oh, that his mantle might fall on some Elisha, that the cause he loved may advance untrammeled!

On Sabbath evening I spoke, by invitation of the pastor, Rev. G. H. Trebel, in Zion's Lutheran church, Hamilton. It was estimated that between four and five hundred were present. A collection amounting to $11.37 was taken up for our cause. A number of tracts were distributed and more wanted than I was able to supply. My plan for the near future is as follows: Go to Dayton to-morrow and on to Jamestown for Sabbath; spend next week in Clinton and Warren counties as the way may open among the Friend Quakers; the Sabbath following I have arranged to spend with Bro. McClanahan at the Sycamore U. P. church. To the friends at Ashley, Orange Station, and other points near Columbus, I would say, I have not forgotten you, but will come to your towns for work at my earliest convenience.

W. B. Stoddard.

HELPING TIME.

"The poor ye have always with you, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good."—Mark 14: 7.

Out in the gloom of night,
Out in the winds and wet,
You might hear the tread of tired feet,
Tramping wearily down the street—
Out in the wind and wet.

Out in the friendless world,
Out in the pitiless cold,
A hapless wanderer has to roam,
Far from shelter and far from home—
Out in the pitiless cold.

Out in the howling wind,
Out in the drifting snow,
With a rag of a shawl to keep her warm,
A woman is braving the winter storm—
Out in the drifting snow.

Dry and glassy her eye,
Faint and sinking her heart,
In a garret alone she lies at last,
Like a sodden flower, 'neath Autumn's blast—
Faint and sinking her heart.

There through the rifted cloud,
Fitful the moonbeams fall,
Gilding a moment her upturned face,
Faded, yet fair, with a tender grace—
Fitful the moonbeams fall.

The work long sought lies by,
"No money till all is done,"
So this starving creature was harshly told
By one who had wealth of yellow gold—
No money till all is done.

Long and toilsome the task,
But not one stitch did she;
For angels came to that lonesome room,
And bore her far from its chilly gloom—
So not a stitch did she!

Far from want and cold,
Far from wind and wet,
Sheltered and safe in the Heavenly fold,
She is watched and tended with love untold—
Far from wind and wet.

Beyond all human aid,
We can not help her now,
The time for needing that is past,
She resteth satisfied at last—
We can not help her now.

But stretch a saving hand
To other suffering souls,
And let all succor and aid be given
Now on this side of hope and Heaven—
To other suffering souls.

The helping time is short,
The privilege is great,
And when the Master shall say to thee:
"I count it all as if done to Me,"
The recompense is great.

THE CHARITY OF EARLY CHRISTIANS.

One of the most striking results of the new spirit of philanthropy which Christianity introduced is seen in the copious charity of the primitive church. Amid the ruins of ancient palaces and temples, theaters and baths, there are none of any house of mercy. Charity among the pagans was, at best, a fitful and capricious fancy. Among the Christians it was a vast and vigorous organization, and was cultivated with noble enthusiasm. And the great and wicked city of Rome, with its fierce oppressions and inhuman wrongs, afforded amplest opportunity for the Christ-like ministrations of love and pity. There were Christian slaves to succor, exposed to unutterable indignities and cruel punishment, even unto crucifixion for conscience' sake. There were often martyrs' pangs to assuage, the aching wounds inflicted by the rack or by the nameless tortures of the heathen to bind up, and their bruised and broken hearts to cheer with heavenly consolation. There were outcast babes to pluck from death. There were a thousand forms of suffering and sorrow to relieve, and the ever-present thought of Him who came, not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many, was an inspiration to heroic sacrifice and self-denial. And doubtless the religion of love won its way to many a stony, pagan heart by the winsome spell of the saintly charities and heavenly benedictions of the persecuted Christians. This sublime principle has since covered the earth with its institutions of mercy, and with a passionate zeal has sought out the woes of man in every land, in order to their relief. In the primitive church voluntary collections were regularly made for the poor, the aged, the sick, the brethren in bonds, and for the burial of the dead. All fraud and deceit was abhorred, and all usury forbidden. Many gave all their goods to feed the poor. "Our charity dispenses more in the streets," says Tertullian to the heathen, "than your religion in all the temples." He upbraids them for offering to the gods only the worn-out and useless, such as is given to dogs. "How monstrous is it," exclaims the Alexandrian Clement, "to live in luxury while so many are in want." "As you would receive, show mercy," says Chrysostom; "make God your debtor, that you may receive again with usury." The church at Antioch, he tells us, maintained three thousand widows and virgins, besides the sick and poor. Under the persecuting Decius the widows and infirm under the care of the church at Rome were fifteen hundred. "Behold the treasures of the church," said St. Lawrence, pointing to the aged and poor, when the heathen prefect came to confiscate its wealth. The church in Carthage sent a sum equal to four thousand dollars to ransom Christian captives in Numidia. St. Ambrose sold the sacred vessels of the church of Milan to rescue prisoners from the Goths, esteeming it their truest consecration to the service of God. "Better clothe the living temples of Christ," says Jerome, "than adorn the temples of stone." "God has no need of plates and dishes," said Acacius, bishop of Amida, and he ransomed therewith a number of poor captives. For a similar purpose Paulinas of Nola sold the treasures of his beautiful church, and it is said even sold himself into African slavery. The Christian traveler was hospitably entertained by the faithful; and before the close of the fourth century asylums were provided for the sick, aged, and infirm. During the Decian persecution, when the streets of Carthage were strewn with the dying and the dead, the Christians, with the scars of recent torture and imprisonment upon them, exhibited the nobility of a Gospel revenge in their care for their fever-smitten persecutors, and seemed to seek the martyrdom of Christian charity, even more glorious than that they had escaped. In the plague of Alexandria six hundred Christian parabolani periled their lives to succor the dying and bury the dead. Julian, the heathen emperor, urged the pagan priests to imitate the virtues of the lowly Christians.

Christianity also gave a new sanctity to human life, and even denounced as murder the heathen custom of destroying the unborn child. The exposure of infants was a fearfully prevalent pagan practice, which even Plato and Aristotle permitted. We have had evidences of the tender charity of the Christians in rescuing these foundlings from death, or from a fate more dreadful still—a life of infamy. Christianity also emphatically affirmed the Almighty's "canon 'gainst self-slaughter," which crime the pagans had even exalted into a virtue. It taught that a patient endurance of suffering, like Job's, exhibited a loftier courage than Cato's renunciation of life.—W. H. Withrow.

CHRISTIAN GIVING FOR MISSIONS.

"Christian Giving for Missions," says the Foreign Missionary, "needs more conscience, more character, and more discrimination. It needs a new life, a new baptism, and a new power. It needs to be permeated with mightier love, richer faith, and stronger prayer. It is now fashioned more by a love of this world than of that which is to come. It is shaped more by earthly than by heavenly principles. It is brought too little within the sweep of the cross, and too much under the dominating influence of time and sense. It has too much of self, and too little of Christ. The revival needed, to be permanent, and telling upon the destiny of the world, must be in this direction,—one that will make the believer to see and know that he is not his own, and that this includes possession as well as profession."

All this is true, but when men are brought under the influence of the heavenly principles contained in the Word of God, will not the missionary system need reconstructing? While twenty different denominations have their mission headquarters on the public square of a single heathen city, and twenty different Christian sects are supporting and paying their officials to perpetuate and extend to foreign lands the senseless and unscriptural divisions which curse the Christianity of to-day, are intelligent and thoroughly consecrated business men likely to give with Christian liberality, so long as a portion, at least, of their hard-earned money is to be used for sustaining such sects and separations which the Saviour never originated, and which the Scriptures expressly reprove and forbid? Frequently nothing but the poverty of the people hinders quarreling men from causing other divisions and building up other rival interests, and thus increasing the evil that now exists.

Let missionaries and societies and churches wheel into line as followers of the Lord, doing what he commands, and both money and men will be found to do all needed work both in the home and foreign fields. And when worldlings and sectarians go to the rear, and the true children of God are united in one, as the Saviour prayed, then the world will believe and know that Christ is sent of God, and believing men will find life through his name.—Armory.

THE POOR HAVE YE ALWAYS.

The church cannot afford to get away from the poor. It would be wicked if it were even good policy. The church was created for the poor, with all their cares and grievances, and it is our business to hear those grievances that have facts in them, and not to despise even the vagaries that are set toward a better life. The rich we do not always have in the church, but we do have the poor; one is a shifting factor, and the other is a constant quantity in the equation of life. And among the poor must ever be found the pillars of the church, while the poor are the rich in prospect. Time, that spoils and saves all things, says, "turn about is fair play," and is ordering men down from the heads of their classes, and ordering up those at the foot. The ministry can allay the growing hatred of organized labor toward the church by joining with the laboring classes heartily in all their efforts towards temperance, all efforts toward the educational betterment of themselves and their children, by being ever ready to intervene for arbiters, to urge them to improve their condition by claiming their Sabbath. The church must turn these erring men toward herself or they will be lost; and we must do it quickly. Both propitious time and blessed opportunity have been already lost.—Presbyterian.

THE RAVEN'S MESSAGE.

"Pierre's late to-night," said a stout, sun-burned woman, who was standing at the door of a log hut on a small, rocky islet in the middle of the Rhone. "I do hope nothing has happened to him; he's so terribly venturesome since he got a boat of his own."

"Pooh, pooh!" answered her husband. "He'll come back all right, never fear. It's only proper that my boy should be a ferryman like his father, and so he must learn to manage a boat. See, yonder he comes, rowing like any boatman!"

"But whatever has he brought with him?" cried Madame Lenoir, in amazement.

What, indeed? At first sight the sturdy little twelve-year-old, who came skimming toward them across the broad, shining stream, appeared to be wearing a huge, black overcoat, torn almost in two. But a second glance showed the strange object to be a raven nearly as big as himself, which hung loosely over his shoulders, as if either dead or badly hurt.

"See what I've got, mother!" cried he, gleefully. "I found it in the wood yonder, with its wing broken. At first it snapped at me, and wouldn't let me touch it, but it's quiet enough now. Isn't it a big one?"

"Oh, you dreadful boy!" cried his mother. "What do you think we're going to do with a great, ugly thing like that about the house? and who's going to feed it, pray?"

"Why, mother, you know you always say that this house of ours on the island is just like an ark; and Noah had a raven in his ark that he used to send flying about, and why shouldn't we? Besides, we can teach him to carry messages for us, like that one that Father Gregoire told us about the other day."

"Well, there's something in that," said Jean Lenoir, laughing, "and as for feeding, a raven can pick up his own living any day; and, besides, we have always plenty of odds and ends of fish. Bring him in, my boy, and we'll see what we can do with him."

The broken wing soon healed, and in a few months Pierre's raven (named "Christopher," in honor of the ferryman's patron saint) had become famous through the whole country-side. Many a bright silver franc did Pierre pick up at the village fairs by making the bird go through the tricks which he had taught it; and when once it had learned to carry messages, the people along the river gave it so many that the postman used often to threaten it jokingly with a summons before the magistrates for taking away his business.

Even Pierre's mother got reconciled to the "great ugly thing" at last; more especially as the good priest of the parish, Father Gregoire, was very fond of it, and never came to see them without bringing something good in his pocket for "our friend Christopher."

So matters went on till one night in the early spring, when Jean Lenoir, coming home after a hard day's work, paused for a moment, as he got out of his boat, to notice a strange, leaden dimness that overhung the hills along the eastern sky.

"It must be raining hard up in the mountains," said he to himself, and then thought no more about it.

But at daybreak next morning he was awakened from a dream of being at sea in a storm, which seemed strangely real even after he was broad awake. Doors were banging, windows rattling, timbers creaking and groaning, mingled with a roaring and dashing as if Niagara had been let loose close to his ear. Hardly knowing what he did, he sprang to the door and threw it open, and instantly started back as if he had been shot.

The water was within a foot of the doorsill!

Worse still, it was plainly rising higher every moment. The Rhone, swollen by the heavy rains and the sudden melting of the mountain snows, had burst its banks and come down in full flood, driven by such a gale as had not blown in those parts since the great storm ten years before. All sorts of things went whirling past upon the yellow foam—drowned sheep, hurdles, beams, boxes and uprooted trees, upon one of which crouched a poor, little shivering dog, wailing pitiously for the help no one could give.

Jean's first thought was for his boat; but both it and the shed in which it was moored were gone as if they had never been. Sick at heart, he clambered up into the loft after his wife and son, just as the water came flooding in over the doorsill.

Meanwhile an anxious crowd had gathered on the opposite bank, eager to help the imperiled family on the island. But how was this to be done? No boat could live in that boiling flood, and it seemed hopeless to think of getting a rope across.

The strongest man could not sling a stone so far. A kite would be instantly torn to shreds by the wind, and they had no means of sending across either an arrow or a bullet.

Poor Father Gregoire ran wildly from man to man, imploring them to save his friends, and meeting everywhere the same despairing shake of the head. And still the water rose higher, and higher, and higher.

Suddenly Pierre put his mouth close to his father's ear, and screamed with all his might through the deafening uproar:

"Father—Christopher!"

Catching his son's idea in a moment, the ferryman hastily rummaged out a roll of twine, one end of which Pierre fastened around the leg of the bird, which was, indeed, about to become in terrible earnest what they had called it in jest, "the raven sent forth from the ark."

"Food, Christopher!" shouted the boy, pointing to the opposite shore; and instantly the raven outspread its broad, banner-like wings, and swooped forth into the storm, while a stifled cry broke from the gazing crowd as they watched its flight.

Twice all seemed lost, as poor Christopher was almost beaten down into the raging waters beneath; but the brave bird persevered, and catching a momentary lull in the fury of the storm, struggled across the space, and fell exhausted on the bank.

A stout farmer sprang forward to seize the string tied to the bird's leg, and instantly half a dozen eager hands were at work on the cord attaching to it. Communication was thus established with the island, and in less than half an hour the three Crusoes in the ferryman's hut were drawn safely ashore, just as the whole house fell crashing into the swollen river.

After this, the raven became a greater favorite than ever, and from that day every one called him "Christophe Le Courrier" (Christopher the Messenger).—David Ker, in Golden Days.

A GOOD NAME.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Even unscrupulous men know the worth of good principles that cannot be moved.

A gentleman turned off a man in his employ at the bank, because he refused to write for him on Sunday. When asked afterward to name some reliable person he might know as suitable for a cashier in another bank, he mentioned this same man.

"You can depend upon him," he said, "for he refused to work for me on the Sabbath."

A gentleman, who employed many persons in his establishment, said: "When I see one of my young men riding for pleasure on Sunday, I dismiss him on Monday; I know such an one cannot be trusted. Nor will I employ any one who even occasionally drinks liquor of any kind."

Boys, honor the Lord's day and all the teachings of the Bible, and you will not fail to find favor with God and with man also.

TEMPERANCE.

SUMPTUARY LAWS AND OLEOMARGARINE.

The Supreme Court of the United States rendered an opinion April 9th on what is commonly known as the oleomargarine case.

This case brings up for review a judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania sustaining the validity of a statute of that commonwealth making it unlawful for any person to manufacture, sell, or offer for sale any butter or cheese or article designed to take the place of these articles produced from any compound other than unadulterated milk or cream. The plaintiff was convicted of a violation of this statute and took an appeal, basing it on the ground that the statute was in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and that the article sold was a new invention not deleterious to the pub lic health.

The Court holds that it is entirely within the police powers of the State to protect the public health and that the questions whether the manufacture of oleomargarine is, or may be, conducted in such a way as to require the suppression of the business rather than its regulation, are questions of fact and of public policy which belong to the legislative department to determine. If all that can be said of this legislation is that it is unwise or unnecessarily oppressive, their appeal is to the legislature or to the ballot-box, not to the judiciary. The Court also says it cannot assent to the argument that if this statute is sustained then nothing stands in the way of the destruction by the legislative department of the constitutional guarantees of liberty and property The answer to this argument it holds is that the judiciary department is bound not to give effect to statutory enactments that are plainly forbidden by the Constitution. The objection that the statute denies the equal protection of the laws is also held to be untenable for the reason that the same penalties and burdens are imposed upon all persons engaged in the same business. The judgment of the lower court against the patent butter dealer was affirmed, but Judge Field dissented. The same judgment would hold very clearly against intoxicating liquor, and the late decision in favor of shipping liquor into a prohibitory State, thus breaking down the very laws affirmed above, is an amazing thing to plain people.

THE EFFECT OF THE SUPREME COURT DECISION.

ALLOWED TO MAKE BEER IN IOWA.

At the January session of the board of supervisors all permits to sell liquor in Woodbury county were refused, although there were numerous applicants. By an arrangement made between the Law and Order League and the two breweries they were to be allowed until May to dispose of the stock on hand, and permits to that effect were issued to the Franz Brewing company and to R. Selzer. Three wholesale houses were also given time in which to close out. The latter have since violated the law so flagrantly that arrests followed, and they moved their stocks across the river to Nebraska to escape confiscation. Franz's brewery has been transformed into a butter and egg depot, and only the Selzer establishment remains.

Last night, just before the adjournment of the board of supervisors, Selzer went before them and asked for a new permit for one year. This was refused, but later his permit was extended to Jan. 1, 1889, and he will again begin manufacturing. The action of the board caused great surprise to the temperance element, and much indignation is expressed. A member of the board of supervisors said: "According to the recent Supreme Court decision liquor can be shipped in from points outside the State, and the board concluded to let Selzer manufacture."

SHIPPING LIQUOR INTO IOWA.

Following the example set by several other railroads, the Illinois Central has issued a circular addressed to its agents and connections which sets forth that the company will receive and deliver shipments of all kinds of liquors for transportation from points outside of the State of Iowa to points within that State and from points in Iowa to points outside. No such shipment will be received originating at and destined to points within the State of Iowa unless there is delivered to the company's agent a certificate under the seal of the auditor of the county in which the point of destination is located, showing that the consignee has authority granted him by the board of supervisors of the county to sell intoxicating liquors in such county. Intoxicating liquors may be shipped from one point in Iowa to another point in the same State when consigned to a registered pharmacist, providing that a permit for each shipment be issued by the auditor in the county in which the point of destination is located. The permit must specify the packages and kinds of liquors to be transported.

This rule is made in accordance with the recent United States Supreme Court decision, which sets forth that under the Interstate Commerce law no State can prevent the shipment of any kind of merchandise within its borders.

EVADING THE PROHIBITORY LAW.

Jim Jones, a noted ex-saloon-keeper of Sioux City, Iowa, has gone to Canada to arrange for the shipment of liquors which he will sell, despite the State prohibitory law. He has secured a room where he proposes to sell the imported liquors openly. Many other saloon keepers who have been driven out of the business will follow his example, and are already renting rooms for this purpose. Able legal counsel say there is no way in which such sale can be prevented so long as the imported liquor remains in the original packages.

NO BREWERIES IN KANSAS.

The decree in the Ziebold & Hagalin brewery case, in which the United States Supreme Court recently sustained the constitutionality of the prohibitory law of Kansas, was signed Wednesday by Judge Brewer, of the United States Circuit Court. The exceptions to the decree of the defendants, that the decision of the Supreme Court did not prohibit them from manufactring beer to be sold in other States, was overruled, and the United States Marshal was to-day ordered to close up their brewery at Atchison as a nuisance. These were the last of the Kansas brewers to hold out against the prohibitory law, and Kansas is now very dry.

A LETTER ON "WINES."

Rev. W. J. Taylor of Wardsville has another able letter in the Toronto Mail in reply to Rev. Dr. Jewett on the question of "Bible Wines." After a discussion of some important facts and Scripture quotations Rev. Mr. Taylor presents a forcible argument in the following paragraph: "Turning from Holy Writ, let me ask why I should drink the wine of commerce? To my certain knowledge much of the 'best port' is made in London, entirely from chemicals; is shipped to Oporto, there labeled and cobwebbed, and sent back to the English market, where it finds a ready sale! Why should I drink 'wine,' when, on the authority of the Wines of California (a wine dealers' paper) I find that 'ninety-nine out of every one hundred dealers in these "wines" are selling stuff made right in New York by chemical processes. Two manufacturers make more than 15,000 gallons a month!' Why should I drink wine when such an eminent and respected physician as Sir Henry Thompson says, 'Don't take your daily glass of wine under any pretext of its doing you good; take it frankly as a luxury which must be paid for; some loss of health, or of mental power, or of calmness of temper, or of judgment.' The Edinburgh Medical and Surgical Review says: 'All wines are only different forms of poisonous articles.' Two thousand of the leading medical men of Great Britain recently signed a paper to the same effect. The scientific testimony upon this point is ably summed up by Dr. Kerr, who says, 'it is beyond human power to demonstrate what are the effects of a minute dose of any poison; but in the same sense as we call strychnine and prussic acid a poison do we designate alcohol, and in no other.'" These thoughtful and scholarly lectures ought to be widely read and studied.—Sel.

The State Prohibition Convention of California adopted a platform at San Francisco April 5th. It declares the Prohibition party of California is in alliance with the National Prohibition party and demands the extinction of the manufacture, import, export, transport, and sale of all intoxicating beverages, enforced by effective preventive pledges. It concedes the right to manufacture for medicinal and mechanical uses, but for nothing else. The platform hails with pleasure the cultivation of the grape in this State as a most pleasant, healthful, and remunerative occupation, and indicates that there will always be a good market for raisins, sirups, canned fruits, and fresh grapes, but denounces the prostitution of the grape industry to the manufacture of wine, brandy, or other intoxicating liquors. The platform declares that women should have the elective franchise, and demands government control of railroads and telegraphs.

OBITUARY.

GEN. A W. RILEY.

General A. W. Riley, the oldest of the great temperance orators, died at his home in Rochester, N. Y., on the 2nd inst., aged ninety-three years.

The portrait above appeared first in the Cynosure of June 5, 1884, a few days before the national convention of the American party in Farwell Hall, which nominated Pomeroy and Conant. Gen. Riley attended this convention as a delegate and addressed it. He was always a reformer, and during a long and busy life was associated with such men as Samuel Carey, Frederick Douglass, Gerritt Smith, Myron Holley and Thurlow Weed. He came to Rochester in 1816 and has been intimately associated with all the interests of the city during its growth. As a temperance lecturer, he traveled more widely in Europe and America, speaking against the drink traffic, than perhaps any other man except Gough; and in the rise and development of the Prohibition party he took the keenest interest, blessing God that he had lived to see the cause so dear to his heart prospering among the best people of the nation. At his burial the citizens of Rochester without respect of rank or sex united with the Prohibitionists to do him honor.

Peter Minton was born in the province of Connaught, Ireland, July 4th, 1811, and died at his home in Butler county, Ohio, April 7th, 1888, aged 76 years. His parents were Catholics, and his early training was in that faith. Not being satisfied with the surroundings and opportunities of his mother country, he migrated to America when about 18 years of age. At the advice of a friend he went immediately to Pennsylvania and found employment on a farm. About two years later he came on foot to Butler county, Ohio, where he has since made his home. Being thrown into the company of brethren Flickinger and Kumler, of the United Brethren church, he was naturally lead to worship with them, and was converted while attending a camp meeting at Blue Rock. For forty five years he has been an active member in this branch of the church.

On the 13th of December he was married to Hannah Conklin. To them were born ten children, seven of whom (two boys and five girls) remain to mourn his departure, the mother and three children having preceded him to the better land. The seven remaining children are married and well situated. All, I think, are professing Christians.

It has been my privilege to visit and council with Bro. Minton several times and to be at his bedside during his last hours. I have observed him to be eminently a man of firm convictions and clear perceptions. The latter quality has doubtless added much to his business success. He attributed this, however, to the guidance of the Lord, whom he consulted in all important business transactions.

He has always felt a great interest in all reforms of church or state. This lead him to active participation in the anti-slavery struggle, and later in the anti-secrecy movement, to which he has devoted much of his means. While he has been especially interested in maintaining the rule against lodgery in the church of his choice, and has there made liberal contributions, yet we have been often cheered by his timely aid.

Suffering for years with a cancer he bore it without complaint. The immediate cause of death was erysipelas in the head. He was confined to his bed but eight days. Although unconscious much of the time, when I spoke to him of Christ, he replied, "He is my only hope. I have been trying to serve him these forty years." Dr. Davis and Bishop Wright officiated at the funeral, the doctor preaching from the very appropriate words recorded in Rev. 14.13: "And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." The remains were interred in the beautiful cemetery at Hamilton, beside his beloved wife, there to await the resurrection of the just.

W. B. Stoddard.

Evan Jones, whose decease was noted last week, was a native of Wales. He came to the United States when twenty-seven years of age; married Miss Catherine Evans at Cincinnati in 1850; removed soon after to Ogle Co., Ill.; and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lynn, in Englewood, on the 7th inst., in the 72nd year of his age. He leaves a widow, one son, and three daughters, who, with a large circle of friends, mourn their loss, which they confidently believe is to him an infinite gain. Of this world's goods he had a competency, accumulated by years of industry, but his chief treasures were "laid up where moth and rust doth not corrupt." Though engaged for more than a quarter of a century in the cultivation and care of a 600 acre farm, he found time to read extensively and always kept posted on the great living questions of the day. He was first a Christian, which to him meant patriotism, integrity and every social and civil virtue. He was a radical Abolitionist before the war, and an incident during the war will fairly illustrate his character. His membership was with a church having a few influential men who were strongly opposed to the war. The pastor, a young man, avoided any allusion in his sermons to the then all-absorbing topic of the civil conflict. When presented with the annual subscription paper for the pastor's support he declined giving any pledge, but said, "If our pastor will preach a sermon defining his position in this conflict, and pointing out the duty of his members, I will double my usual subscription; but until he takes sides with the rebel or with the Union army, I will not give one dollar to sustain him." He had no patience with preachers or politicians who dodged living issues. He admired courage and independence and was a firm and devoted friend of the Cynosure and its senior editor, with whom he had acted as an Abolitionist, and in other great reforms for more than thirty years. He gave liberally of his means to the work of the N. C. A. and Wheaton College, and sent his children to the College to obtain their education. He was an honored member of the Normal Park Congregational church at the time of his death, and his funeral was attended by the pastor, Rev. H. C. Granger. His remains were taken to Middle Creek, Ill., near his old home, for interment, where they await the "resurrection of the just."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

MISSION WORK IN GREECE.

LETTER FROM BRO. A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

New York, N. Y., Mar. 17, 1888.

Dear Editor:—Concerning our plans for the future in Greece our friends in America would like to know; we therefore make this statement.

The Greeks, as all know, from the time that Paul preached to them until the present day, have been religious and superstitious. For the Christian religion many of them laid down their lives in the time of the Turkish rule. Though they are superstitious and inclined to many forms and ceremonies which lead almost to idolatry, yet they are intelligent, so that when the truth is impressed in their hearts and they comprehend it, they are ready again to stand as firmly on the other side. Wherever you put him, the Greek is ready to fight even unto death, whether on the side of the true religion or a false.

I have been laboring on the island of Andros for eight years and a half; and, although I have not remained without fruit, yet the results have not equalled my desire or expectation. I have appeared before the people not as a hireling sent into their midst, but as an independent laborer. Now the result of my experience and the experience of the Rev. H. J. Van Lennep, D.D., who was born and raised among the Greeks, and labored among the Eastern people as a missionary under the American Board for thirty years, is, that the only remedy for the Greeks and for all these nationalities, is to establish schools, and especially Industrial Schools. Many of the American people agree that the best way to convert the nations is through schools. So that you can instruct them and at the same time impress the truths of the Gospel in their hearts.

In the large cities of Greece, as Athens and Syra, there is not much need of such a school; but the islands of the Cyclades, or as they are sometimes called, "The Twelve Islands," are entirely destitute of any such advantages, hence the more need of such an institution. Syra, which is the capital of these islands, is the only city where there are many advantages for the poor.

We want to build this Industrial School on the west side of the island of Andros near the sea-shore, so we will have the Cyclaides on one side and some of the Sporades on the other. Not only are these islands destitute of any such advantages; but, with a few exceptions, the people are poor and not able to give to their children any kind of an education, or support them, or give them a start in life either by marrying their daughters or by starting their sons in business. Every child is obliged to leave home as soon as he is eight or ten years old and work to support himself; and the girls especially have a hard time. In the whole sixty-five villages of Andros, there are only five or six girls' schools and they are situated in the principal towns of that island. Three of these girls' schools have been established within the last three years. So the girls leave home in perfect ignorance of everything and go as servants to the different cities, Athens, Syra, Constantinople, and even as far as Alexandria in Egypt. And during these first two or three years, these girls get nothing but their poor food and very poor clothing. It takes them ten or fifteen years to earn their dowry, and after all these years of toil they are not allowed to have much to say as to whom they shall be married, and are very often married to quite worthless, drinking fellows. If they have children the wife is sent to some of these cities which I have mentioned to earn money as a wet nurse, and her own offspring are left to the mercy of strangers and without any home training. If they have no children, the wife goes as a servant. Even if some of the mothers do not have to leave home, they have to help with the outdoor work, such as reaping with the sickle, carrying on their backs two or three miles large baskets of figs and grapes, loads of bushes and wood to supply their fires. So they have but little time to look after or teach their children.

In one island called Eubia, close to Attica on the stormy Doro pass, which is the largest island of Greece, are many poor people. Some of them are shepherds and some are farmers. These people, it seems, cannot get a living by their flocks or from their farms, and they take their daughters, while they are quite young, to the cities of these different islands and hire them out for five or ten years, and the father takes the money in advance. The money which he gets for ten years will not exceed fifty dollars; but he may accept even less money than that. After all these years of service the girl has nothing of her own but a few clothes, and she is free again to go back to visit her parents. If she gets married on her return home, she will get from her parents a few goats or sheep and a piece of rocky land which will not produce grain enough to keep the family in flour more than a month. When these girls fall into the hands of degraded masters, they return to their parents in disgrace. This is the condition of the girls.

The boys have more advantages for schooling; but if they wish to have anything more than the barest necessaries of life, they must go the cities to work as servants, or learn some trade; and, as with the girls, so with the boys, they cannot get any wages at first, and it is years before they can save something for themselves.

We, therefore, seeing the pitiful condition of the girls and boys, and of the aged, with prayers and supplications to God have decided to come to America and put all these facts in the ears of Christian people here, and we believe that God will open their hearts to have pity on these poor people and do something to better their condition. If we can establish an Industrial School and teach the girls reading, writing, cooking, laundry work, needle work and weaving, and the boys tailoring, iron-work, carpentering and shoemaking, so that when they go to the cities they will be ready to receive good wages, we shall be doing them a great good and thus their hearts will be opened to receive the truths of the Gospel which we shall teach them. If we do not supply their bodily wants we cannot reach their souls. This has been tried and found to be true.

We repeat again that we expect to establish an Industrial School, and by this we mean a Christian school, in one of these islands; but would to God that we could establish one in every one of these islands.

We believe that God will provide the means to build this school, and supply also the different things which are needed to carry on such a school and also teachers to come and help us in this work. As God has provided for us during the last eight years and a half, so we believe that he will provide for the future.

Greece has gone back almost to idolatry and infidelity and we, therefore, the evangelicals of Greece, believe that she must taught again the truths of the Christian religion or perish. Yours with Christian love, Anastasios D. Zaraphonithes.

—The Wesleyan conference meeting April 2d in Syracuse, New York, resolved unanimously in favor of a more vigorous administration of discipline with reference to the lodge. Rev. J. N. Bedford met with unexpected success in presenting the case of Wheaton Theological Seminary.

—The present Prime Minister of the Sandwich Islands is an earnest Christian. When he visited Berlin, in connection with a commercial treaty, it was his practice to attend Bible readings on Sunday nights, and he found it easy to decline diplomatic invitations on the Lord's day.

—According to the tables of the Rev. Daniel Dorchester, D.D., of the evangelical denomination for 1886, the total of churches or congregations in the United States was 112,744; of ministers, 83,854; and communicants, 12,132,651. That is one Evangelical Protestant church in every 518 inhabitants.

—The total income of London charities in 1887 was four millions and a half of money. Of this a million is spent on foreign missions. Another three-quarters of a million is spent on Bible and tract societies and "home" missions. The hospitals have an income of a little more than half a million. The sums are pounds sterling.

—Last October the Presbytery of New York decided to again open up Cooper Union hall every Sunday evening for evangelistic services for the masses. Mr. Charles Herald, the singing evangelist so well known in Chicago, was invited to conduct the campaign. God has put his seal on the work in a remarkable manner. Starting with an audience of 600 it has grown week by week until now from 1,200 to 1,500 people, two-thirds of whom have not been in the habit of attending any church, attend the services. Over 150 names have been given in from persons receiving a blessing, starting in the new way. Hopes are entertained that the necessary funds may be provided to keep the work up the year round.

—Mr. Sankey is soon to make a tour of the Southern States. He returns to England in May for a series of meetings through Great Britain.

—Rev. Walter A. Ferris, pastor at Dundee, Ill., is taking a brief rest at Atlanta, Georgia, after seven weeks of revival meetings, in which a great work was done for the church. Among the converts was an infidel husband and wife, whose hatred of religion was fearful. The church gave Bro. Ferris $226 to help his vacation, and a mission church a few miles away added over $60 to the fund.

A perfectly sound body and a mind unimpaired are possible only with pure blood. Leading medical authorities indorse Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the best blood purifying medicine in existence. It vastly increases the working and productive powers of both hand and brain.

Warranted Seed.

I have founded my business on the belief that the public are anxious to get their seed directly from the grower. Raising a large proportion of my seed enables me to warrant its freshness and purity, as see my Vegetable and Flower Seed Catalogue for 1888, FREE for every son and daughter of Adam. It is liberally illustrated with engravings made directly from photographs of vegetables grown on my seed farms. Besides an immense variety of standard seed, you will find in it some valuable new vegetables not found in any other catalogue. As the original introducer of the Eclipse Beet, Burbank and Early Ohio Potatoes, Hubbard Squash, Deephead Cabbage, Cory Corn, and a score of other valuable vegetables, I invite the patronage of the public.

Macaulay's famous tribute to this work is ample testimony to its merits: "Mr. Hallam is, on the whole, far better qualified than any other writer of our time for the office which he has undertaken. He has great industry and great acuteness. His knowledge is extensive, various and profound. His mind is easily distinguished by the amplitude of its grasp, and by the delicacy of its tact. His speculations have none of that vagueness which is the common fault of political philosophy. On the contrary, they are strikingly practical, and teach us not only the general rule, but the mode of applying it to solve particular cases. Mr. Hallam's Work is eminently judicial. Its whole spirit is that of the Bench, not that of the Bar. He sums up with a calm, steady impartiality, turning neither to the right nor to the left, glossing over nothing, exaggerating nothing, while the advocates on both sides are alternately biting their lips to hear their conflicting misstatements and sophism exposed."

The Christian's Secret of A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. FARM NOTES.

GRASSES FOR HAY.

In order to make hay of the best quality it is important to cut at the proper stage, and generally the nearer we are able to do this, the better will be the results. On this account care should be exercised in mixing the seed when sowing for meadows to get varieties that will ripen at the same time. If not, one will certainly fail to secure hay of the best quality, for the reason that some will be ready to cut when the rest will be either too ripe or too green. Take clover, red top and timothy. Generally clover ripens considerably earlier than either of the other two, while red top ripens last. If the clover is cut when it would make the best hay, the timothy or red top will be too green, or if we let the clover stand until the others are fit to cut, it will be entirely too ripe. Either if cut at the best stage will make a feed of the very best quality, but when cut too green or allowed to stand too long, the quality is considerably impaired.

On account of the liability to lodge, it is often of considerable benefit to clover to have a good grass growing with it to act as a support, but at the same time it is an object to select and use varieties that ripen at nearly the same time.

Orchard grass and tall meadow oat grass both ripen at the same time as clover, and for this reason are more desirable to mix with clover than either red top or timothy, and when cut before they are too ripe, they make a good quality of hay, so that in selecting grass seed to be sown with red clover, either of these are preferable to red top or timothy. For pasture, a variety of grasses are preferable, but for meadows it is usually best not to have many unless they are varieties that will ripen together. On this account timothy should be sown alone as well as red top. These five varieties are usually sown for hay, and are also used for pastures, but for hay care should be taken to sow only those that ripen together, while with pasture grasses we want a diversified growth and season of ripening, so as to have a supply of grass as long as possible.—N. J. S. in Farm, Field and Stockman.

PERMANENT PASTURES.

With the development of the higher forms of husbandry in this country, the laying down of land to permanent pastures is becoming an important feature of farm practice—i. e., in all States east of the Missouri river. Our pastures have heretofore been sadly neglected, so much so that in many instances the word "pasture" is become synonomous with the poorest land of the farm. Successful dairying and stock-breeding, however, demand better grazing. There is a vast margin for improvement and increased profits, between the three to five acres per cow of some of our older States, and the two to three cows per acre of Holland. As land increases in money value its feeding capacity must be improved in order that it may be used for pasturage with profit. Many efforts at pasture making in this country have failed for very simple reasons, among which is the custom of scattering a little seed over a worn out pasture and letting it remain on the surface, or simply harrowing it in. Again the land has simply been plowed and re seeded without any effort at enrichment or proper drainage or proper pulverization, such as is thought indispensable for growing any other crop than grass. The way to make a good pasture is to plow the land thoroughly, and harrow and pulverize it as if for corn; if it is poor in fertility it must be enriched. Then grasses are to be selected which are best adapted to the soil, and the selection must be so made that a succession of grasses will keep the pasture green the season through; or, if convenient, it is well to have one pasture for early and late feeding, and another for summer feeding.

For early and late pasture the following mixtures are recommended per acre in pounds:

For early pasture: blue grass, 8; timothy, 6; orchard grass, 6; white clover, 1.

For summer pasture: timothy, 6; orchard grass, 6; red clover, 4.

For lighter soils of the North and East: timothy, 5; taller oat grass, 10; Rhode Island bent, 4; orchard grass, 8; white clover, 1; red clover, 2; Alsike clover, 1.

For wet soils in the North: blue grass, 5; red top, 5; fowl meadow grass, 4; rye or ray grass, 4; white clover, 1; Alsike clover, 1.

Prof. E. M. Shelton, of the Kansas Agricultural College, who has tested over 200 species of forage plants during the last ten years, finds the following to have proved the best grasses and clovers for that State, in order named: (1) Orchard Grass, (2) Alfalfa, (3) Taller Oat Grass (Avena elatior), (4) red clover, (5) Taller Fescue (Festuca elatior). These he says are the only species safe in Kansas. As a mixture he recommends orchard grass, 1½ bushels, clover, 6 lbs. per acre. Alfalfa and taller fescue grasses must be sown alone, and he thinks the same of taller oat grass.

To make a pasture quickly the grass seeds should be sown alone, without grain, and not be grazed the first year, but be cut for hay, twice if possible, in order to force a large development of roots. To renovate an old pasture it is best to cultivate it for a year to some well manured hoed crop. This is an expensive process, but it is effectual in killing out a great number of weeds. A good way also is to harrow the surface with a sharp harrow and then sow a variety of seeds, with 200 or 300 pounds of bone dust per acre; or spread on some fine compost, then give the whole a thorough harrowing and leave it alone. When the grasses show signs of running out, say every five, seven or ten years, it is well to sow a variety of grass seeds on the surface and drag a light harrow over the pasture, applying at the same time a dressing of bone dust.—Hiram Sibley's Catalogue.

Enlarging the Scope of a Magazine.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, the well-known evangelist, has been engaged as an associate editor, with Rev. Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost, of Words and Weapons for Christian Workers, a monthly magazine published at 251 Brodway, New York, devoted to religious work. Mr. Mills has been engaged in pursuance of a plan to make Words and Weapons the most unique and distinctive organ of the evangelistic and all the aggressive Christian work in this country. It will contain each month reports of meetings conducted by all the tried evangelists, and also contributions from the most successful pastors and laymen. It will also contain a large number of pointed illustrations, drawn from incidents recently occurring in the inquiry room. The magazine in its new form will appear about April first.

"She's Much Older than her Husband."

We heard a young girl make the above remark the other day about a lady with whom we are slightly acquainted. It was not true, yet the lady in question actually does look five years older than her husband, although she is really several years his junior. She is prematurely aged, and functional derangement is the cause. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription would cure her, and should be recommended to her, and to others who are in the same condition. If the reader of this chances to be a similar sufferer, let her get the "Prescription." It will bring back her lost beauty, and, better still, it will remove all those distressing symptoms which have made life a burden to her so long. Money refunded if it don't give satisfaction. See guarantee printed on bottle wrapper.

Where Are You Going?

When do you start? Where from? How many in your party? What amount of freight or baggage have you? What route do you prefer? Upon receipt of an answer to the above questions you will be furnished, free of expense, with the lowest rates, also maps, time tables, pamphlets, or other valuable information which will save trouble, time and money. Agents will call in person where necessary. Parties not ready to answer above questions should cut out and preserve this notice for future reference. It may become useful. Address C. H. Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 90 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

In the Selecting of an instrument of sound, you shall first diligently sound the instrument. An' it be an ESTEY ORGAN, from Brattleboro, Vt., 'twill speak in tones of exceeding power and purity. Noise is not tone, but tone is everything. As rudder to ship, or brain to man, even so standeth the tone unto the Organ. Marry, 'tis a point of exceeding nicety and thou should'st wisely weigh it—in the selecting—to thy great advantage in the bye and bye. The cheap dealer doth noisily sound his Organ's praises the while he quietly soundeth thy perceptions. Sound thou the Organ itself. 'Tis that thou seekest to gladden thy home; thou art not buying the dealer's wind and it may well escape thy close attention.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal thy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth. $1 00 Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt Wm Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each: per dozen. $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The right to buy ships in the markets of the world and sail them under the American flag without the payment of duties is granted in a bill agreed upon by the majority of the House committee on merchant marine and fisheries. It is also contemplated that no duty shall be paid upon materials entering into the construction of vessels built in the United States.

After a dead lock for eight days final action on the direct tax bill has been postponed until Dec. 6. This was the result of the action of the Democratic caucus and it is believed really provides for the passage of the bill. If the direct tax bill becomes a law the lobby commissioners of the different States will receive all the way from 5 per cent to 50 per cent of the money refunded.

Certain swords belonging to the widow and children of Gen. James Shields are to be bought by the Government for $10,000. Shields was an Irish Freemason who challenged Abraham Lincoln to a duel. Miss Virginia Lewis offers a sword of Washington for $20,000.

Mr. Anderson, of Kansas, created much merriment in the House Thursday. When his name was called he emerged from a barber's chair, his face covered with lather and a towel about his neck.

COUNTRY.

The bill for closing saloons on the Sabbath and taking from municipal authorities the power to permit saloons to be open on that day has passed the Ohio Legislature.

Numerous fires occurred Friday in different parts of the country. At Boston a building in Fort Hill square was burned, and six firemen were badly injured by an explosion. At Depere, Wisconsin, a number of buildings burned, with a loss of about $75,000. At Wheeling, West Virginia, several stores were burned; loss, $50,000. At Clinton, Iowa, a brewery was destroyed; loss $10,000. At New York a steamship took fire at her dock; loss $100,000. At Ann Arbor, Michigan, several business places burned; loss $40,000. At Florida, New York, two dwellings burned, and a woman and her baby perished in the flames.

While two drunken white men were passing a cabin in Indian Territory one of them deliberately drew a pistol and shot dead a 4 year old negro boy who was standing in the door. They have been arrested.

By the wreck of a construction train sixty miles west of Birmingham, Ala., Friday morning, four men were killed, one fatally hurt, and nine others seriously injured.

Ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling was not expected to live last week. His sickness was caused by an abcess in one side of his head. His condition is improving.

The lower House of the New York Legislature Thursday adopted a resolution providing for submitting to the people a prohibition amendment. All the Democrats voted against it.

The jury in the Bald Knobbers' cases in Ozark, Mo., returned a verdict of murder in the first degree against Dave Walker, and short terms in the penitentiary to a number of other members of the organization.

Reports of floods in the West continue. Communication with Sioux City, Iowa, is cut off, owing to the recent floods and washouts. At Chippewa Falls, Wis., a huge ice gorge formed and threatened the destruction of the bridges. At Moorhead, Minn., the Red River is hourly rising an inch and a half. At Forest City, Minn., the dam went out and destroyed the power of a hundred barrel roller mill. At Black River Falls, Wis, the river is twenty feet above low water mark, and the south part of the town is under water. Reports from the Upper Chippewa and Eau Claire rivers, Wis., are very encouraging as to the progress of log drives.

FOREIGN.

New trouble has arisen in the German Emperor's throat, indicating that the trachea has been attacked by a local complaint. The air passage having contracted it became necessary to insert a new canula. At noon Friday the emperor and empress drove to Berlin in a close carriage and visited the palace, returning to Charlottenburg later in the day.

Later news from Berlin reveals an alarming condition of the emperor's disease. Bronchitis with fever set in and his family was summoned to his bedside Monday in anticipation of the worst.

In regard to the matter of Bismarck's objection to the betrothal of Prince Alexander to the daughter of the German emperor, the following facts are said to be believed in the highest circle. At the close of the recent interview with Prince Bismarck the emperor intimated his intention of inviting Prince Alexander, of Battenberg, to Berlin to confer an order upon him and to appoint him to a command corresponding to the rank he formerly held in the German army. The Chancellor protesting against such a step as inexpedient, the emperor declared that he would abandon his intention. The matter was regarded at Charlottenburg as settled and there was a great surprise when, a few days later, Prince Bismarck forwarded a memorandum to the emperor stating at length his reasons for opposing the betrothal and saying that he must resign if the emperor did not accept his advice. The emperor at the interview on Wednesday declined to permit the Chancellor to resign.

The movement against the late government in Roumania, which was for a time repressed, has been revived in a dangerous form, many peasants now joining the insurgents. The revolt partakes of an agrarian character, and is headed by the agrarian leaders. Their programme demands land grants for laborers and a 10 per cent share in the profits of landowners and farmers. Bands of men are going about attacking and terrorizing landlords. Troops are scouring the districts, but are unable to suppress the revolt.

The conflict between Prince Bismarck and the empress is only temporarily suspended, says the Inter Ocean. The empress has gone so far as to apply to the Russian and Austrian courts in order to secure support and achieve her purpose. If the Czar could be induced to send an assurance to Bismarck that the Battenberg marriage would not alter the friendly relations existing between Russia and Germany, the empress might deem the battle won. The Austrian imperial family maintain a neutral attitude in the matter. They would like to see the breach between Germany and Russia widened. No encouragement comes from the Czar, however; nor is he likely to make any overtures.

It is learned through reliable sources that Emperor Frederick wanted to extend amnesty to all socialists and to recall those who had been banished, but that Prince Bismarck dissuaded him from doing so.

In the election Sunday for the Department of the Nord, France, General Boulanger received 172,272 votes, over 96,000 above all other candidates.

A dispatch from Calcutta says that the damage caused at Dacca by the recent tornado amounts to 100,000 rupees, and that 112 bodies have been recovered from the ruins and over 1,000 persons more or less injured are in the hospital.

The first execution in Madrid, Spain, in five years took place Wednesday when a girl, her lover and an accomplice were garroted for murder. All three were executed on the same platform in the presence of 20,000 people.

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

There are many men in Chicago who are not prohibitionists because they pretend to have no interest in a matter which does not concern them. Suppose some of these indifferent temperance men had been driving in a well-filled family carriage across the Northwestern tracks when a drunken fellow the other day found an engine on a side track left for a moment without its crew. He got aboard, put on all steam, and tumbled off while the huge machine dashed through the city without a master, until, colliding, it was dashed aside a wreck. But our temperance friend's family was not so put in jeopardy by a drunken wretch. Yes, but who knows how soon they may be? The lives of other temperance people were in danger from that escapade, and until the saloon is put down there will always be such danger, and the best and worthiest may be the victims.

The Burlington strikers quit work February 27th, eight weeks ago, as we write. Their boasts of success have been silenced, their efforts to prove the new men incompetent have failed, and there is nothing left them but idleness, unhappy reflections, and some useful experience to all who will profit by it. There were 1,063 engineers and the same number of firemen who went on the strike. The wages of the former averaged $4, of the latter $2.40 a day. Their loss has been therefore some $6,800 daily, or $326,400 for the whole time. Their brotherhoods have supported them and will do so till the strike is declared off. This has cost $212,600 for the two months. "Grievance committees" have spent weeks about Chicago; committee men and brotherhood chiefs have had parlors and private rooms at the finest hotel; other subordinate strikes occurred, and the sum total of cost to the striking party must have been nearly $675,000. An estimate of the loss to the railroads puts it above $2,000,000. This is the cost to the country for this experience with secretism. It is a wise conclusion that it is time the labor lodge was voted a nuisance to be outlawed by the business of the country, and much more so by the laborers themselves.

Marshal Dyer of Salt Lake City, as receiver of the Mormon church property under the government suits, finds much contraband property of the organization disposed of to individuals to be held under some pretext. He continues to find such property and confiscates it. The Mormons are required to pay $256 monthly rental for their church property and are probably boasting less than heretofore to visitors of the magnitude of the tabernacle, or the solidity of the temple. In one of these suits lately Angus M. Cannon, a church dignitary, swore that he did not now sign any more recommendations for plural marriages, and Woodruff, president of the church, told him he would not countersign any such papers. They profess, therefore, that polygamous marriages have been discontinued. But an examination of the temples at Logan, St. George and Manti might prove these old gentlemen at Salt Lake to be only shamming.

The Reading railroad company which suffered last winter from a severe strike, led by the Knights of Labor, and endorsed at their Philadelphia headquarters, has lately been receiving many petitions for reinstatement from old employes, recalling faithful service, stating that their former work and wages were satisfactory, but they went out with the rest, blindly, or by a sort of compulsion. The reply is the new men cannot be dismissed and there are no situations, but recommendations are given the deserving. The Christian Intelligencer remarks forcibly upon this case: "What slavery workingmen submit to in labor organizations! What a base surrender they make of their manhood, and for what? In what respect have the Knights of Labor improved the condition of the men on the Reading road? Is it not time to interfere by legal measures for the liberation of these misguided men from their hot-headed, ignorant and malignant leaders? Is it not time to make these leaders, who order strikes, legally responsible for the results of their acts? Five years in the State prison would be a just punishment for the men who ordered the strike on the Reading. How long will the people submit to the damage inflicted by executive committees, meeting in secret and, without legal authority, deciding in secret to arrest trade over sections of the country as large as empires!"

It is understood that an experiment is about to be tried in this city, the outcome of which will be regarded with much interest. A series of conferences is arranged between workingmen and capitalists or employers to discuss economic questions and secure a better acquaintance. There is no doubt a great lack of acquaintance between the two classes. Each knows too little generally of the perplexities and trials of the other. These conferences aim to remove this lack of mutual understanding and pave the way for a better state of things. The conferences are to take place on successive Sunday evenings, and are seven in number. There are four representatives of the workingmen to speak, namely: George A. Schilling, on "The Aims of the Knights of Labor;" Thomas J. Morgan, on "The Labor Question from the Standpoint of the Socialist;" Joseph R. Buchanan, on "A View from the Labor Sanctum;" and A. C. Cameron, on "An American Trades Unionist's View of the Social Question." The business men are allotted three representatives: Lyman J. Gage speaks on "Banking and the Social System;" Charles L. Hutchinson, on "Is the Board of Trade Hostile to the Interest of the Community?" and Franklin MacVeagh, on "Socialism as a Remedy." Miscellaneous discussion is not to be allowed at these conferences, because of its obvious dangers; but at the conclusion of each address respectful questions will be allowed. We do not wish to discourage an attempt to secure so worthy an end, but neither Schilling, Morgan, Buchanan or Cameron are representative workingmen. Three of them at least are professional demagogues, anarchists and agitators. The Sabbath is always the day they select for the meetings of the lodges and incendiary meetings which they dominate. Nor do we think Mr. Hutchinson, president of the Board of Trade, the best man to speak for that institution and deal fairly with the iniquities it covers. Mr. Gage of the First National Bank and Mr. MacVeagh, wholesale grocer, are the only two fairly chosen men, and we cannot understand why they should have allowed their names to be connected with such meetings on the Sabbath.

JOHN TETZEL AND JOHN BARLEYCORN.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

Lutherans will recognize one of these names as historical; the other is self-suggestive. Both are readily associated with another, also historical, perhaps a lineal, though remote ancestor of both, whom, from respect for the children, we will not name, but characterize by saying now, as was said of him in his day, "He was a thief and had the bag and bare what was put therein." The three names are, by common consent of wise and good men, accepted as synonyms of treachery, avarice and fraud.

The latter having gone "to his own place," the first is perhaps still in "Purgatory," while the second, John Barleycorn, is unhappily still with us, the meanest of the three; whom, if God will, we hope ere long to send even beyond his predecessors, as he deserves.

> "A deeper, darker hall,
> Where the venging furies call,
> In the awful depths below,
> All the direful names of woe
> Which the guilty soul appall."

The old-time traitor we pity and almost respect as we hear him say, while dashing the ill-gotten shekels from his hand, "I have betrayed innocent blood." Tetzel we commiserate, as a remorse, also late, seizes his conscience, and we applaud great-souled Luther for his letters of condolence to the old, self-confessed humbug and impostor. But for John Barleycorn we cannot get up any sympathy. His is a "sin unto death;" we can neither forgive it nor pray for it.

Judas sinned, betrayed his Master once, repented and hanged himself. Tetzel was the agent of another whom he accepted as "holy father," and "infallible pope," and was goaded with remorse upon the discovery in his mind of an honest doubt. But John Barleycorn has neither Tetzel's honest doubt nor the remorse of Judas, and has not had the laudable hardihood to try the halter. If he give us a little more time we propose to prompt his courage, steady his hand and help him to plait the noose. "Why, what evil hath he done?" Why! what evil hath he not done? Amid the curses and accusations which the generations thunder in reply, the sigh and trembling voice of Judas and Tetzel's confession are absolutely lost and drowned.

Let us steady ourselves a little. Let Judas go to his own place and be forgotten. But let us, for the purpose of a little present instruction, compare and contrast John Tetzel and John Barleycorn.

John Tetzel held a license from the church to sell indulgences. John Barleycorn holds a license from the State to sell rum. The first was a license to remit sins. The second is a license to commit sins. The first was mainly, if not wholly, retrospective. The second is prospective, and makes no amends or apology for the past. The indulgence-monger aimed his wares at the soul, and sought to heal its remorse and deliver it from purgatory. The vender of rum aims his deadly shot at body, soul, reputation, property, all that is treasured here, all that is hoped for hereafter. The indulgence fraud was licensed to build St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome. The vender of spirits is taxed to build jails, alms-houses, penitentiaries, lunatic asylums, etc., etc., all of which he makes necessary and duly supplies with wretched inmates. The "tax-book of the Roman chancery" fixed the rates to be paid for indulgences as high or low according to the enormity of the sin, and it had reduced the privileges and penalties of sinning to the accuracy of a mathematical calculation thus:

For taking a false oath	$2 16
Stealing and robbing	2 88
For incest	1 80
For adultery	2 16

We have not yet attained to an equal nicety of gradation for John Barleycorn, but we are coming to it. Our Brook's high-license law in Pennsylvania is a very respectable and encouraging approach. It is admirable to see how well the varying taxes for selling whiskies, brandies, wines, beers, etc., correspond to the differing tendencies of these drinks to incite to murder, theft, suicide, wife-beating, perjury and lesser crimes. In some respect the license fees of John Barleycorn for doing any of these permitted things which, paradoxical as it may seem, are all unlawful, are more delicately weighed and adjusted than was the case in the days of Leo X. This latter genius has not, so far as we can see, fixed varying rates for indulgences in cities of "the first, second and third class," and for the rural districts. We live in a more scientific age and are better enlightened Christians.

Again and moreover, we have learned something that Luther did not know. He was a rampant prohibitionist,—a regular crank, he was! He attacked the whole system as a work of the devil. He learned also what we better know, that prohibition did not prohibit. The indulgence system went on and prevails even yet to-day. He should have regulated, licensed, but taxed it. Had he only lived to hear Emerson say, "The backs of our vices should bear the burden of our taxes," he would have seen how the indulgence system could have been restrained, lodged in better hands than Tetzel's, and at the same time been made to build St. Peter's and do much other godly work. But poor man, he was hot-headed, impatient, went in advance of public opinion, and like many another crank thought the devil could be conquered and the world reformed all at once.

A few lessons may sum up this study:

1. Let us be gentle and charitable in our judgment of Tetzel and indulgences.

2. Let us learn to sympathize with Leo X. He wanted money for his harem, courtiers, and St. Peter's.

3. The loins of Leo and Tetzel are as a little finger to the tremendous corporiety and girth of Uncle Sam and John Barleycorn.

"BE NOT OVERCOME OF EVIL."

BY A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

The Pontiac M. E. Church was rapidly running down. This occasioned great anxiety among the responsible members.

One of the most prominent official members desired my oppinion in regard to their affairs.

I asked him, "Do you know that many of your preachers are guilty of the double wickedness of embracing two contradictory religions—the Christian religion in the church and an anti-Christian religion in the lodge? Do you know that some of the basest people in the community are hired to sing operatic music in the choir? The leader, a man who gets drunk and beats his wife? Do you know that some of your church entertainments are mere theatricals, and the Sunday-school scarcely more than an amusement? Do you know, in a word, that the world controls the church? "

"O, yes," said he, "I do know it. We all know it, but we cannot help it. What you say of our church is true of all the rest. The churches in this city are conducted just as business houses and business enterprises are. There is a similar rivalry. If the people cannot find in one place what they want, they will go to another. We do not approve of the course we persue, but we have to do so or close up the church; for if we fail to furnish what the people demand, they will go elsewhere."

However, with all their decoration and display, they were getting in debt and losing ground, and the official board looked the matter over, and decided that all this mischief was occasioned chiefly by their having Masonic preachers. So they notified their presiding elder that they would not accept of another Mason.

"Well," said he, "there are so many Masons in the conference that I do not see how we can discriminate in your favor. How would ——— suit you?"

"We would not receive him. He is a Mason."

"Well, you will have to take just such men as the conference may send," said the elder.

"No, we won't, we are nearly ruined, and at the present rate of decline, we will soon be hopelessly involved in debt and other difficulties. We are hardly self-supporting now, and the Masonic preachers have been a dead weight on our hands. If you send any more of them we will not receive them."

"But what will you do if a Mason should be sent to you?" the elder asked.

They answered, "We have decided not to support another."

When this was gleefully reported to me I told them that they would pay dearly for their "contumacy." All this was done privately, of course.

Now, what was their surprise when the next preacher appointed here was a 32-degree Mason and an Odd-fellow besides! What now? They said it was only for one year, and positively they would keep him no longer. At the close of the year the preacher was officially informed that he could not be retained.

But he cried like a child, and protested that it would ruin his reputation to stay only one year in a place. He begged and plead so piteously that they had pity on him and consented to his return just for one year. During the next session of the conference I wrote to Bishop Peck and requested him to send a man religiously inclined—if he could find such a man,—and, if he could, outdo the Masonic ring. Rev. 32nd did not return. The official board said "No!" to his tears and importunities.

His successor was not a member of any secret society. He was very anxious for me to go and hear him preach. He said that he had the name of preaching the truth more faithfully than any man in his conference. What Elder Levington and I reported about Masonary in Detroit conference he affirmed to be true. The Masonic preachers were spiritually dead men, and they ruined the churches wherever they went.

I told him about the action of the official board, when he replied, "Yes, and when my predecessor found that the church was determined to keep him no longer, he wrote a letter to the Pontiac Masonic lodge imploring them to use their influence as Masons to keep him here another year."

"What!" I exclaimed, "is that possible?"

"Yes," said he, "it is a fact, and I saw the letter with his name signed to it in his own handwriting." He added, "If one or two more Masons should be sent to this charge, the society would be ruined beyond recovery."

I asked him, "Do you know that the young men are being drawn into the lodge secretly and are ruined for time and eternity?" He said he did know it.

"I suppose, then, as you are unusually faithful in your preaching, you will occasionally warn the young men of your congregation to avoid this danger," I naturally suggested.

"Well, no," said he, "I never have done such a thing in public."

"Possible! Why not?"

"O, well," said he, "you know what a stir it makes! "

"Yes, I know."

"No," said he, "I guess I won't do that."

Said I, "If you have come here for money, it will not do for you to offend the Masons. But you are worse than they are. They are slaves; are sworn to obey the despotic, murderous lodge power, but you are a free man. They kneel down just inside the lodge door and involuntarily worship the devil, while you voluntarily kneel down just outside the lodge door and worship the devil. You think more of your ease and salary than you do of the precious souls committed to your care. The Pontiac Methodists are deceived into the belief that they have a change for the better, when it is only a change of lodge policy."

However, in response to his importunity, wife and I went one Sabbath evening to hear him preach, when, to our surprise, a 32-degree doctor of divinity delivered the sermon, and the next morning I read nearly half of his sermon out of Chase's Digest of Masonic Law nearly word for word. My wife said, "I do not wonder that the pastor told one of my neighbors that, during the sermon, he felt as though he would sink through the floor! "

A leading business man of this city, a Masonic Methodist, regards Masonry as a swindle and a deadly enemy of the church of Christ, but he pays his dues for fear. He believes that it would ruin his business and perhaps endanger his person to renounce Masonry.

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethern to dwell together in unity." So Masonry says. Yes; preachers, deacons, class leaders, pirates, gamblers, savages, spiritualists, with pagans and infidels of every type dwelling together in unity. And the Christian the only one who must deny his God and abandon his religion in order to enjoy this "unity." Behold how good and pleasant! Dwell together? Yes; for they all fear that if they should renounce the infernal "unity" their business would be deranged and their throats cut by their "brethren." The bond of this union, what? Why blasphemous oaths and the most blood-curdling death penalties! And preachers, by their silence or assistance encourage such a monstrosity! Unparalleled infamy!

A Pontiac pastor in a sermon last week said: "Men often tell me that they are Masons or Odd-fellows, and that is all the religion they want. I answer them that there is something better and higher than that." He was showing the advantages of church membership. Now, this represents Masonry as being defective not bad; as being an insufficient religion, not a false religion. Consequently, this view would admit the Mason or Odd-fellow to church membership. One pastor objects that the lodge gets money and members that the church ought to have. Yes, but if this were all, it is only society rivalry. Such views are neither fundamental nor correct, and do not commend themselves to intelligent lodge men, as I certainly know. I conclude:

1. That to oppose an unmitigated evil merely on circumstantial grounds, betrays deep-seated selfishness or inexcusable unskillfulness.

2. That to handle a subject so as to confound moral opposites is certain proof of unfitness for religious instructorship.

3. That to withhold timely warning or to conceal the truth, for any earthly consideration, is a crime against humanity, and a startling proof of moral insensibility.

4. That when men or societies silently or privately oppose public wrong, they are astray and are sure of defeat; for the Word says, "They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony."

THE POPE AMONG THE NATIONS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Forum for April, 1888, has an article on "Civil Government and the Papacy," by Prof. E. De Leveleye. He quotes Count Arnim's declaration that when the pope lost his temporal power his moral authority was correspondingly increased. Then he says: "The Vatican is now one of the diplomatic centres in Europe, where the most important political business is negotiated. The pope interferes, either openly or by secret agencies, in the internal political movement of all civilized countries. The majority of the inhabitants of nearly all the Roman Catholic countries, and very powerful minorities in Protestant, such as Germany and England, or in schismatic nations like Russia, obey the orders of their priests, who, in their turn, receive instructions from the bishops and the pope. It is certain that in countries where, as in Belgium, the Roman Catholic faith has held its ground, the pope possesses incomparably more authority than the king. The electors who decide the majority in Parliament obey his orders and the choice of ministers is thus influenced."

He recalls the pope's victory over Bismarck. Prince Bismarck, flushed with his victory over the French, did not propose to have an Italian dictating their policy. "We are not going to Canossa," he exclaimed in 1872. The May Laws were adopted. But he soon found that he, like his predecessors, was weaker than the hierarchy. "Joseph II., Emperor of Austria, wished to enforce a regulation that aspirants to the priesthood in Belgium should follow the course of studies at the University of Louvain. The clergy resisted this measure, and the revolution of 1788 followed. The King of the Netherlands, William I., attempted to enforce similar measures and the revolution of 1830 ensued. Bismarck, finding himself incapable of resisting the clergy of the Catholic provinces of Prussia, and perceiving his mistake, turned completely and suddenly round. He made peace with the pope, and, over and above this, he contrived to become the abettor of the designs of his holiness and an accomplice of his political plans. Recently, in permitting the re-establishment of all religious orders save the Jesuits, Bismarck made the pope his electoral agent."

The recent papal triumph in England comes next. "In order to induce the Irish to cease their opposition to the English Government, Lord Salisbury dispatches the Duke of Norfolk as an envoy to Rome, where he represents the interests of the Irish landlords. Even Queen Victoria almost prostrates herself at the feet of the pope, if we may believe the official gazette of the Vatican, which reports that her majesty expressed the wish 'that the Catholic religion be permitted to prosper more and more throughout the vast British Empire.' In the London Times of Dec. 27, last year, we read: 'The British special mission to the pope presented the gift of her majesty. On receiving the massive bsain and ewer of gold constituting the gift, the pope, with evident pleasure, remarked that they would serve for his jubilee mass. The basin and ewer were engraved with the inscription, To His Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., from Victoria, R., I., 1888.' Perhaps next spring we shall see the Queen of England and Empress of India kiss the toe of the sovereign pontiff."

In France, Italy, Austria, and Spain the papal authority hangs over them like the sword of Damocles. "In many countries, such as the Tyrol, the Rhonane provinces, Belgium and Lower Canada, the real sovereign is not the reigning monarch, but the pope, who rules through the medium of his bishops and priests." The Protestant Emperor of Germany, the chief of the free-thinking republic of France and the President of the United States, sent gifts to the pope on the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination. "The pope entering St. Peter's adorned with the tiara sent by the Emperor William, grandson of Luther; using the basin and ewer of Queen Victoria, the successor of heretical Elizabeth; and wearing on his finger the ring presented him by the Sultan, was indeed a strange spectacle, calling to mind the pantheism of the Roman Empire, which admitted the worship of all gods in the Pantheon of Agrippa."

This seems like a prophecy that Roman Catholicism will become universal. But Rome is the foe of freedom. She hates free schools, a free press, and especially freedom of conscience. They say, "When Protestants are in the majority we allow freedom because that is their belief. But when Catholics are in the majority we suppress it because that is our belief." The papacy is the mother of harlots, sitting upon a scarlet-colored beast, holding in her hand a golden cup and making the nations drunk with the wine of her fornication. She is in league with despotism. "A religion which accords to a human being the unheard-of attribute of infallibility; which is overloaded with customs and superstitions wholly contrary to the Gospel; which is as far removed from the teachings of Christ as light from darkness, and which, above all, condemns modern liberties and particularly liberty of conscience,—such a religion as this is never likely to be adopted by the civilized nations of the future."

MORE NEWS FROM INDIA.

In a previous letter I spoke of our want of colporteur-evangelists, and promised to speak of other openings for workers here in India. I ought to explain that I have been sixteen years in mission work in India, having originally come out under the Missionary Society of the M. E. church. After being in India a few months I resigned my missionary salary and have since been supported, part of the time, by the congregations I served, and part of the time by my own labors. The nature of my present work is union and inter-denominational.

Every one knows well enough that Paul the apostle supported himself a good share of his time by working with his own hands, and some of the time he not only earned his own support, but ministered to those that were with him. Why should there not be self-supporting apostles in Asia just as well now as 1800 years ago? But mark this one point, that self-support generally means hard work. No one need undertake unless he is willing to follow out literally what our Lord says about bearing the cross daily. A part of the cross is the misunderstanding of motives and methods which sometimes arises in the minds, even of good people.

Now, as to more openings for work, my wife has a "Rescue Home." As there is a similar work in Chicago, St. Louis, New York, etc., I need not largely explain the nature of this part of our mission. I am sure that many more daughters of the Lord ought to enter this special work; yes, and it is a field in which men can also work. You can learn much about "Rescue" labor by writing to the "Florence Mission," New York. Ask for one of their reports; it will do you good. We have also a "Foundling Home." Write to Dr. Shipman of the "Foundling Home," Chicago, and ask for some back numbers of their Record. These will give you items of the work that exists in America; then remember that our work in India is very different, and be sure that you are prepared to adapt yourself to the wants of this peculiar field.

THE SALOON QUESTION AND MASONRY.

[J. Q. A. Fellows, Committee on Correspondence, Grand Lodge of Louisiana, in Voice of Masonry.]

In several Grand Lodges, and notably in that of Missouri, the keepers of saloons or other places in which spirituous or malt liquors are sold, are declared guilty of Masonic offenses, and the lodges to which they belong, if they be Masons, are required, upon the ascertainment of the fact, to expel them from all the rights and privileges of Freemasonry.

We lay down as a fundamental proposition, that no act can be made a Masonic crime unless such act is made a crime or misdemeanor by the statute laws of the state or country; or, unless it be violative of the obligations assumed when one becomes a Mason; this of course includes the obligations of the three degrees.

As we are bound to be good citizens and cheerfully obey the laws of the country in which we reside, we violate our obligations as citizens and Masons when we violate any law of that country which prohibits or makes a crime or misdemeanor, with penalty attached, any act or deed or calling. If, then, the State has prohibited the retailing of intoxicating liquors and made it a crime or misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, a violation of that law is a Masonic offense, and on proof being made and conviction had, after due trial, the brother found guilty should be Masonically punished.

If the selling of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage or otherwise, or the keeping of a saloon in which intoxicating liquors are sold, be prohibited by any of the points of the obligations which the Master Mason has taken, then, whether the State has declared such act to be a crime or misdemeanor punishable on conviction, or has not so declared, the act constitutes a Masonic offense and renders the brother guilty of such act liable to Masonic discipline. And here, we take it, is found the gist of the whole question. We submit that there is nothing in the obligations taken by a Master Mason which prohibits him from keeping a saloon, or selling, as a beverage, intoxicating liquors. We are bound by no such tie. From the nature of the case we cannot, in writing, prove this, even if it were an affirmative proposition. We cannot be required to prove the negative. We simply deny that any such prohibition exists or can be found in the obligations of a Master Mason.

One would suppose that the whole controversy ends here, and such would be the case were it not for special Grand Lodge legislation; and hence the necessity for further remark.

The Grand Lodge of Missouri has declared "habitual drunkenness, gambling, blasphemy, and practices of a kindred character unmasonic," (Section 29 of Article 16, page 61, Book of Constitution), and in 1882 that Grand Lodge declared saloon-keeping to be unmasonic in these words: "Resolved, That the business of saloon-keeping is hereby declared to be a Masonic offense."

Quoting from the report of Bro. Vincil, on Foreign Correspondence, his quotations from other Grand Lodge proceedings we find as follows:

Arkansas: "Resolved, That hereafter it shall not be lawful for subordinate lodges to initiate any man whose business is that of keeping a liquor saloon."

Colorado: "It is hereby made the imperative duty of all lodges to restrain, as far as possible, the Masonic crime of intemperance, by trial and punishment, as the case may require, and to exclude from lodge and anterooms all intoxicating liquors, and for the faithful performance of these duties they will be held strictly accountable to the Grand Lodge. It shall be unlawful to initiate or affiliate any person engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors."

Dakota: "Resolved, That no person who is engaged in the business of keeping a saloon, or is engaged in the business of retailing intoxicating liquors, to be used as a beverage, shall be initiated into any particular lodge in this jurisdiction, nor shall any brother Mason who is engaged in such business be received in any lodge as a member by affiliation."

The Grand Lodges of Oregon and Washington have similar regulations.

Missouri: We quote from the Report on Foreign Correspondence of Most Worshipful Bro. Vincil. His remarks on this question occur in his review of several Grand Lodge proceedings, and are of the same tenor in all, and hence we extract from only one. These extracts show about as much intemperance in language as is exhibited in drinking by a confirmed inebriate, and are equally as obnoxious to the teachings of Freemasonry. As, for instance, under the head of Arkansas, he says:

"The saloon business is put under proper condemnation by the following:

"'Resolved, That it shall be a Masonic offense, worthy of expulsion, for a member to keep a saloon for the sale of intoxicating liquors.'

"Truly the leaven is working and the whole lump will yet feel the moral force of true Masonic opposition to the crime of drunkard-making by Masons. This war is not against the men engaged in the nefarious traffic, but against their business, which is a curse and a curse only and a curse continually. If any one can show a particle of good in the business, let it be done. As only harm can be shown, let that which is only evil be driven from the Masonic Fraternity. In Missouri he has to go. The decree has gone forth to saloon-keeping Masons, 'Quit the business or quit Masonry.'

"Arkansas went beyond the Missouri rule, and

"'Resolved, That hereafter it shall not be lawful for subordinate lodges to initiate any man whose business is that of keeping a liquor saloon.'

"It certainly is a good rule to keep out those who would have to be put out. Missouri began by puting out those who were in. This is required of the lodges. No lodge will receive a saloon-keeper, knowing he will be prosecuted as soon as admitted. Hence we kill the evil in the lodges, and thereby educate the membership in a very practical way."

And under the head of Iowa he further says:

"Your tender-hearted friends of the saloon-keeper and their apologists forget another thing, that what is now Masonic has always been so. Saloon-keeping is unmasonic because it is immoral. A business which is immoral once is immoral always. It has always been so. The Grand Lodge has declared that it is. And the Grand Lodge declared thirty years ago that the lodges must enforce the law against all unmasonic conduct. It was unmasonic then to sell liquor for drinking purposes, because an immoral business. It was, therefore, in violation of the law of the Grand Lodge that lodges received such tainted and immoral creatures. The complaint of the poor, persecuted saloon-keeper must be against the lodges which received them, not against the law. And the lodges which received and retained them in disregard of the mandates of the Grand Lodge will find Jordan a hard road to travel before this matter is settled. The Grand Lodge of Missouri declared in 1882 that saloon-keeping is a Masonic offense; by this declaration our Grand Lodge defines the quality of the business. It is immoral, and the Grand Lodge has declared that the resolution of 1882 was only a specific declaration of what had always been the law, because the business of saloon-keeping had always been immoral. To continue in the business thus declared to be immoral and unmasonic, is to be guilty of a willful and defiant disregard for the law. The Grand Lodge of Missouri does not tolerate that kind of temerity. When she speaks she means what she says."

We, as Masons, are, often, or, would we perpetuate and carry out the behests of the institution, should be called from labor to refreshment, and the only restraints upon such occasions are that we should not drink to drunkenness, not that we should not drink at all, and that we should not eat to excess; that is, not refrain from eating, but avoid gluttony, and a reason for this eating and drinking in moderation is that the craft may have profit thereby.

Some time ago drinking and eating to excess, intemperance and gluttony, became prevailing vices, and seriously and physiologically speaking there was and is little appreciable difference in the baneful effects of either vice. Both vices are equally wrong and equally forbidden by the laws of God, of nature and of Masonry. To such an extreme had the evil of intemperance reached that many took the alarm and sought for a remedy for the evil. Instead, however, of bringing the subjects of the vice and the practicers of the habit back to the temperate and we say permissible use of spirituous liquors, these reformers rushed to the extreme of prohibiting the use of any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider, and used all the arguments imaginable by extremists of every kind.

That drunkenness is a vice everybody admits, and if a brother is given to drinking to excess, he should be sought after, and if possible reformed. In the working of the lodge it is the duty of the Junior Warden to see that the brethren convert not the hours of refreshment into intemperance and excess; in the world, every day, it is the duty of every brother to see to the welfare and proper conduct of every other, and by brotherly advice, admonition and reproof bring him back to a proper mode of life.

But while drunkenness is a vice, drinking is not, and no amount of sophistry can so make it. Gluttony, excessive eating, is a vice, but eating is not, and so of all play, or all work, and of any and every thing carried to excess. Excess of any and every kind is a vice injurious alike to all.

If, then, drinking as well as eating is not a vice, the selling of the wherewithal to eat or drink cannot be a crime or offense, Masonic or otherwise, unless there be some power of sufficient authority so to enact. It is judicial question whether the State in this country can declare the selling of anything necessary or proper to be used, to be a crime or misdemeanor. This question we do not pretend to decide.

That the State may regulate all the transactions of a civilized community to the end of promoting its peace and prosperity, all concede, and we suggest that this power to regulate may be as far as the State can go. But, whatever the State may determine, we admitted in the outset that anything declared a crime or misdemeanor by State laws becomes a Masonic offense, on the ground that the Mason must obey the laws of the country in which he resides.

But it is another question whether Grand Lodges possess the power to make that a Masonic offense which is not so made in the obligations of a Mason. If the Grand Lodge could do so, it can add to the obligations a Mason has taken, or take therefrom. One Grand Lodge has added one thing; the tie that binds the Mason made in Missouri, Oregon and Colorado to his brethren is not the same as that which binds the Mason of Michigan, Mississippi or Louisiana. Masonry ceases to be universal, and the Grand Lodge of Missouri has made it so.

If there were but one Grand Lodge of Freemasons in the world, or if all Grand Lodges should agree, the obligations of a Mason might be changed, but otherwise (though it may well be disputed that all the Grand Lodges concurring, can add to my obligations) the boasted universality of Freemasonry is at an end. Years ago, the Grand Lodge of Louisiana decided, on the report of Past Grand Master Perkins, that "the means of recognition and the tie which binds us should be alike and the same the world over," otherwise, as he said, the universality of Masonry would cease.

We may hear end this discussion for this time with the remark, that anything pushed to the extreme is sure to take a rebound, and the farther the outward swing the greater the rebound; that the crusade against drinking and drunkenness will end in greater abuse. The prudent among Masons should be active to hold back the zealots, lest in the rebound greater evils may result; and prudence as well as temperance is a cardinal virtue. The language quoted from Bro. Vincil shows its intemperate use by him, a habit as hurtfnl to him and his neighbors as the intemperate use of spirituous liquors, or the sale of them could be, and this species of intemperance in which he indulges is expressly declared against in his obligation. We say to him and to all his confreres on this question, all "one idea men," that is, men who seem incapable of seriously having in mind but one idea at a time, that they had better recur to the charges prepared by our fathers for the Entered Apprentice and the teachings of the Monitor on that charge. If they will thus recur, their tirades, if not their present crusade, will cease.

—Mrs. Mary H. Talcott, widow of one of the old and wealthy citizens of Chicago, died last Tuesday. She was possessed of a large fortune, left her on the death of her husband ten years ago, and made use of it to relieve the distress of the worthy poor, until her name had become the very synonym of charity. During the past ten years Mrs. Talcott has dispensed over $300,000 in charities. The Old People's Home, the Half-Orphan asylum, the Orphan asylum, the Foundling's Home, the Home for Inebriates, the Hospital for Women and Children, the Woman's Refuge, and the Home for the Friendless are a portion of those that have received substantial aid from her hand. Her private gifts have, perhaps, exceeded those given to public institutions, and it is believed she has devoted at least $500,000 to the cause of charity.

WELCOMING FRIENDS IN OHIO.

Dover, Clinton Co., O., April 19, '88.

Dear Cynosure:—This week finds me down here among the Friend Quakers. In about an hour I am to attend what is known as the monthly meeting. It will be attended by members of three meetings in this section. "First day" was spent at Jamestown. In the morning I spoke in the United Presbyterian church and in the evening in the Friends'. Both meetings were attended with usual interest. The evening meeting was especially large, every seat in the house being taken. This was largely due to the kind co-operation of the different pastors. The Methodist minister, though reported to have been initiated into the lodge, gave out my notice and invited his people to attend. The Christian minister consulted with his officials and adjourned his meeting in my favor. He occupied a seat in the pulpit and offered prayer. Rev. Robb, the United Presbyterian pastor, was obliged to be absent on a previous appointment. I was kindly entertained at his home during my stay.

Seeing the general interest, by consent of the trustees, I appointed and gave a second lecture on Monday evening. The Lord inclined the people to hear, and blessed me in the presentation of the truth. The usual results followed. On almost every street corner men could be seen in heated discussion of the lodge and the lecturer. Some were crying out (figuratively), "Great is Diana of the Ephesians;" boasting the superiority of the lodge over the church in one breath, and in the next declaring that they had nothing to do with a man's religion. Many were the curses and "God bless yous," that I received. A number of names were added to the Cynosure list.

I am now arranging a series of meetings among the Friends. My program for the future will be substantially as follows: Sabbath at Sycamore United Presbyterian church, Warren county; Monday at Monroe, if wanted; Third day, Friends' meeting house, Burlington; Fourth day, Friends' meeting house, Harveysburg; Mid-week meeting, Guerneyville; Centre meeting, Sixth day, and next first day at Grassey run. May Christ's kingdom come and his enemies be put to flight. W. B. Stoddard.

WHAT ALL CAN DO FOR THE SOUTH.

Elder Jackson begins his sermons—His people stand by him—What the Cynosure is doing: a grand work—Amite City recovers her balance.

New Orleans, La., April 13th, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—The warm season is here. Straw hats and white dresses are seen everywhere. The breeze is filled with political wind. Both of the old rum-lodge parties are presenting their claims before the people without one plank for prohibition in either platform. It is very hard to give a true idea of the situation. Gen. F. T. Nichols, the Democratic nominee, is being pushed forward on his past Confederate record, while ex-Gov. Warmoth is exceeding popular with the business factions. The Republican party endorsed the Young Men's Democratic ticket for the city and that has greatly increased their strength. Groups of secretists and politicians can be seen on the various corners, and a slight glance will convince an observer that they are working the lodge for all it is worth.

However, the reform ball is yet rolling. I have conversed privately on the question of secrecy, and find its very stronghold weakening. Rev. A. S. Jackson preached his first sermon on present sins, etc., last Sabbath, and I am pleased to note from good authority that more than two-thirds of his church endorsed his sermon, and Grand Master Ladd

CRIED OUT: "TRUE! AMEN!"

I have since met several of Bro. Jackson's members who said, although they belong to secret societies, they mean to stand by Bro. Jackson, because he is right.

I preached Sabbath at 3 p. m. at Spain St. Congregational church, Rev. C. H. Claiborne, pastor; and Bro. Claiborne and I preached for Rev. I. H. Hall at 7:30 p. m. We greatly sympathize with our afflicted Bro. R. N. Countee, of Memphis, and pray God that he may endure hardness as a good soldier of Christ. His trials have been sore and many; but, thank God, through Jesus Christ we shall reap if we faint not.

The Christian Cynosure is doing untold good here in this afflicted land of lodgery, saloons and tobacco. If Northern contributors could just imagine half the good the Cynosure is doing here, I am sure some one would at once swell the N. C. A. treasury to $3,000 and send 2,000 Cynosures free at once. Thousands, both white and colored, down here, never heard of the N. C. A.; and I tell you, friends, wherever the Cynosure falls it certainly has its effect for good. There are hundreds here who are willing to read it and rejoice in such a paper, but they are too poor to subscribe for it. One family where I left a copy in February declared when I called again that the Cynosure was an infidel paper; but I called on them to-day and the dear old mother said, "Son, surely your cause is a righteous one. I am convinced you are right. May God help you in this fight." This case is only one of many.

Friends, will you send the Cynosure? Both the poor races need it. I trust to be able to introduce the paper in 75 per cent of all the families in Louisiana. I am ready to die, if necessary, for the Gospel's sake.

I expect, God willing, to preach at Sixth Union Baptist church, Rev. W. H. Bolding, pastor, Sabbath evening, on the religion of Masonry. The weekly paper of Amite City, La., expects to give notice of the sermons I am to preach there the second Sunday in May. The whole community about Amite City seems to be much stirred up and grieved about my persecution by the Negro Odd-fellows, and they have requested me to return and use free speech, assuring me protection. I have accepted their invitation and promised to return Saturday before the second Sabbath in May. Pray God for the outpouring of his Spirit upon us on that day.

LODGE AND SALOON ARRAIGNED IN OLD VIRGINIA.

Abbyville, Va., April 19, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—Last Sabbath was spent at McLeansville, N. C., where I preached three times in the two churches ministered to by Rev. A. Connett, missionary of the A. M. A. This faithful and devoted brother with his excellent family received, entertained and aided me in the kindest manner. He is doing an admirable work in his school as well as in religious instruction. No member of either of his churches belongs to any secret order, and this is because of the careful instructions they have received.

On Monday, the 16th, Bro. Connett brought me to the station, and I came to Bennett Seminary in Greensboro just in time to give the young people a talk on the history of the anti-slavery movement and the rise and progress of the Prohibition party.

Tuesday morning I took the train on the Richmond and Danville Railroad for Keysville and thence south to Chase City, Va., which we reached at 9 p. m. I was most kindly received by Rev. J. A. Veazey, principal of Thyne Institute, and arrangements were made for future work. While there is no want of sympathy or lack of interest in the anti-secrecy reform, I find that prohibition is the absorbing topic, and that more than ever the convictions of the reformers are in favor of pushing the third party movement. I hope to lecture to this people both against the lodge and the saloon. But more of this institution further on.

BLUE STONE MISSION

is the name of a most important and excellent school under the patronage of the United Presbyterian church, one and a half miles east of Abbyville, Mechlenburg Co., Va. It occupies a most commanding position on the banks of Blue Stone creek, a branch of Staunton River. There is one fine large building well provided with school furniture and several cottages. There is also a pleasant home for the principal and teacher. Unlike most of the colored schools of the South this is twelve miles from the nearest railroad station, and remote from any important town. Abbyville is little more than a postoffice. There is a large colored population in this and the other southern counties of Virginia, but here it is strictly rural and in many respects they are considerably behind the freedmen of the cities and larger villages. This is true of rural districts all over the South. As almost nothing is being done for this class of people, constituting a majority of the colored race in the Southern States, it was a work of great beneficence to start and sustain this school. During the last year they have enrolled 220 students, mostly in the Normal department. Five young men are, in connection with their other studies, pursuing a course of theological training and others are preparing for college. The United Presbyterian church in connection with the school is fairly prosperous, and numbers about seventy, and has had eighteen additions by conversion during the past year. Their congregation on the Sabbath is over 100, and there are 400 in the Sabbath-school.

Whatever may be true of the conservatism of some of the ministers of the United Presbyterian church, those laboring in the South certainly are preaching sound doctrine and standing for the distinctive principles of the denomination. They are taught here to abhor both lodge and the saloon. Rev. J. A. Ramsey, the principal, is assisted by two, and, during part of the year, by three teachers. I have been greatly pleased with the excellence of the work that is being done. The school is nine years old and though the population of this region diminishes rather than increases, yet the school more than holds its own. The enrollment during the present year is greater than ever. There is a still greater gain in the moral influence exerted over the people.

On the 18th inst. Rev. J. H. Veazey of Chase City most kindly sent his carriage to bring me here (14 miles) where I was most hospitably received and entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey. Last night by request I gave a lecture on prohibition in which I urged co-operation with the third party movement. There is little doubt but the Prohibition party will be organized in this State, and will poll a respectable vote. To-night I am expected to lecture on the secret lodge system, and hope to-morrow to go to Boydton College, Boydton, the county seat of Mechlenburg county. H. H. Hinman.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA GREET BROTHER HAWLEY.

Dear Cynosure:—After completing my visit to my family I had occasion to go to Kansas and Nebraska to attend to some matters before resuming my work in Iowa.

At Smith Center, in Kansas, I made the acquaintance of a man who formerly resided in Iowa. At one time he became curious to know the mysteries of Freemasonry. He would have paid the price and been cable-towed, but was persuaded by a friend to buy Ronayne's Hand-Book instead

Being a diligent student he became very proficient in Masonry, and on removing to Kansas he put on Masonic jewelry. When questioned by members of the craft as to whether he was a Mason, he demurely replied, "I have been so taken and accepted by brothers and fellows."

In the examinations that followed he proved himself to be an expert, and soon came to be had in reputation as a "bright Mason." They would converse with him on the square, and extend to him the favoritism due to a member of a clan. In Masonic knowledge he so far surpassed the average Mason that they came to him, from twenty miles around, to receive oral instruction, that they might be fitted for responsible positions in the lodge.

It would have been more economical, had they known the source of his information, to have saved their livery bills, and instead of going on pilgrimage to this Mecca of Masonic knowledge, to have bought the book and learned their lessons at home. But then, it may be they had read the warning, on a private circular to Masons, that fell into my hands since engaging in the Iowa State work. The circular deprecated the fact that so many who aspired to fill the offices of the lodge were using such works as Ronayne's and Doesburg's expositions of Freemasonry to post themselves, as it would tend to work the destruction of the order. The Masonic "cat is out of the bag," and how to get her back and securely tie the bag is the unsolved problem.

We, brethren, here in Iowa, may be encouraged by the fact that Kansas Masons, when "talking on the square" with the friend above mentioned, always spoke of Iowa as the place where Anti-masonry is so strong and making headway.

But what a swindle for lodge men to cry, "Masonry hasn't been revealed: can't be revealed;" and go right on selling at the price they do the secrets that can be bought so cheaply at the book-stores! But, says one, where is the swindle, if men have a mind to pay their price?

The swindle, my dear friend, lies in the fact that the lodge assumes to have a monopoly of the goods and thus dupes men into paying their price by falsely pretending that the genuine secrets of Masonry cannot be had in other markets.

While at Beaver City, Nebraska, I attended the Ministerial Association of the Indianolia district, of the West Nebraska Conference of the M. E. Church. I discussed the lodge question with some of the ministers who boarded or called at the place where I stopped. My hostess became so anxious for the reformation of the ministers who are entangled in the lodge, that I furnished her with literature to distribute.

One of the ministers recognized me as the man who preached at a series of meetings in Illinois, where he was converted, thirty years ago. He insisted on my going home with him and preaching to his people. We discussed the lodge question at some length, the evening after arriving at his home. He had been a Master Mason, but had retired from active work with the craft. But the presiding elder of his district is a Knight Templar, and some of the most talented ministers of the district are Masons.

So my friend was not inclined to either defend or attack the lodge. "We must concede the right of private judgment," he thought.

I reply, that doubtless we should acknowledge the right of private judgment, but it is the duty of those who are acquainted with the pagan derivation of the Masonic ceremonies, and the deistical character of her ritual, and the nature of the Masonic covenants, to testify against them. And then those Masons who understand that Ancient Craft Masonry is ancient idolatry modernized, with a deistical ritual of worship appended, will, in the exercise of their "private judgments," conclude that allegiance to Christ and adherence to Masonry are incompatible with each other.

Leaving Nebraska I came to southwestern Iowa and stopped at Tabor. I visited the pastor of the Congregational church, Rev. J. W. Cowan, and called on Pres. Brooks of Tabor College. I took nine subscriptions to the Cynosure, and then on to Malvern, four miles in the country, and called upon L. P. Anderson, who subscribed for the Cynosure. While there I visited Aaron Lewis, who, with his wife, is a radical United Brethren. They gave a donation of fifteen dollars to the Iowa Association.

I reached Clarinda on Saturday night, and on Sabbath evening, by the courtesy of Rev. Mr. Pringle, the pastor, preached in the U. P. church.

Friends in southern Iowa, who desire reform work in their locality, may address me by letter at Clarinda, Page Co., Iowa, upon receipt of this notice. My permanent address is Wheaton, DuPage Co., Ill., from whence mail is forwarded.

Dear brethren of Iowa, let us unitedly pray and work for the triumph of Christ over the paganism and infidelity of the lodge. C. F. Hawley.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FAR AWAY DOWN IN THE SOUTH LAND.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Marshall, Texas, April 13, 1888.

My Dear Bro. C. C. Foote:—Who would have thought forty-five years ago, when you and I were plodding through the mud, jolting over the hubs, or plunging through the snowbanks in western New York, exposing and endangering health and risking life itself for the overthrow of the cruel and crushing slave power, that we should live to witness such a wonderful achievement! Who would have thought that I should be spared to come thousands of miles away down into this South land, then a land of absolute despotism, a land of 5,000,000 slaves, where it was death to teach a slave to read the name of the Lord who died to save him! Now I am visiting this same people in their schools, colleges, universities, churches and homes! A people turned out and left by slavery destitute, ignorant, helpless, degraded, and many of them with the vices of their master's clinging to them, and with no one to pity, to sympathize, or to help them in the struggle for life. Considering how for centuries they have been robbed of all the rights that belong to humanity, it is marvelous that so many of them are doing as well as they are. Some of them have got quite comfortable homes, schools, colleges, churches; some have small farms, and others several hundred acres and are doing well; many of them see the importance and necessity of education.

I endeavor to impress upon them the duty of industry, of having some useful employment; and then saving their hard-earned money, never to spend it for liquor, tobacco, or fooling around with secret societies. I have large audiences and most eager listeners; hearty responses, and often unanimous votes and pledges for total abstinence and prohibition. We should have this people nearly all with us if they were not so deceived and fooled by whiskey and its wily allies, the politicians! Education and Christian enlightenment alone will save them from these perverting and depraving influences. Many of their young ministers now are being educated, and this gives them greater influence; and in their colleges are many young men and women of bright promise. This augurs well for the future elevation of their race in this country, and for the success of prohibition in the South.

I tell them, as we Abolitionists helped to overthrow the cruel slave power and liberate them from its galling yoke, they should now unite and help us to overthrow the more widespread and deadly liquor power! They are not insensible to this plea, and when ballasted by Christian education they will be as naturally with Prohibitionists as they were with us Abolitionists.

I use, in connection with my lectures, charts illustrating the effects of liquor and tobacco on the vital organs of the body. These make a deep and lasting impression on their minds, and some of their ministers have told me they received $5 worth of information the first lecture, and they were anxious to have all their people see and hear and learn on these subjects, so vital to their physical, moral and spiritual welfare. There is not only a dearth but a thirst for useful knowledge among them, and here is an open field for great usefulness. Here, you young men, young women of the North, who want to do good can go at once without having to cross the ocean, or learn a foreign language, and enter a field already "ripe for the harvest." Here is Africa at your very doors!

I have traversed now over 1700 miles in Louisiana and Texas, passing thousands of acres of low, flat, marshy land, thick, second-growth brushwood, slave-cursed soil, forsaken, uninhabited lands. No wonder anxious citizens are holding conventions down here and trying to induce enterprising Northern men to come to these States and take up and cultivate there forsaken and barren lands.

They can be purchased at very low rate, and doubtless, with Northern skill and enterprise, can be made productive. I saw some cotton fields and sugar plantations, with here and there slight evidence of such new life and improvement as liberty and free labor impart. Such indications of productiveness, as working under the impulse of Mr. Cash, instead of Mr. Lash, inspires.

After leaving New Orleans I rode part of the day through Louisiana with the Attorney General of the State. We conversed freely of slavery, of the status of the colored man, and of caste prejudice. He conceded certain civil rights of a political and business nature, but nothing more! Equality of rights, never! Social ostracism, forever. This spirit still prevails extensively and intensely and in many cases disfranchises thousands of worthy colored voters. To close our discussion, the attorney and his friends around him brought out the whiskey flask, and invited me to join in "washing down" the pro's and con's, and this gave me a good chance to open my fusilade upon the allies of slavery, whiskey and democracy, and to bring up the great issue of the day—Prohibition.

Colored men tell me a white man stands at the poll window, and when a person approaches to vote, if the man at the window sings out "White," his vote goes into the ballot box; if he says "Black," his vote goes into another place out of sight, and is never heard from after, especially if he is known to vote any other than a Democratic or whiskey ticket! A minister now at my side confirms this statement. Ku-Kluxing the ballot!

Since entering Texas I have visited and lectured in the following cities: Texarkana, Paris, Sherman, Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Corsicana, Tyler, Longview, Jefferson and Marshall. I gave my last and seventh lecture in this city in the Wiley University, a prosperous Methodist institution, this morning to a large and very attentive audience of male and female students, Prof. Whitaker, president. I had also addressed the students several times in the Bishop College, a Baptist institution under President Culver and Prof. Abner. These are both flourishing institutions, and are preparing to send out a noble class of young men and women as ministers and educators. God bless these schools; they are the hope of the South. May they be multiplied up to the great needs of the colored people and country where they dwell, is the prayer of

G. W. Clark

THE WHEATON COUNCIL.

[Outside any personal or local interest, it will not be disputed that many readers of the Cynosure are concerned in the late meeting at Wheaton and to a certain extent must be given the privilege of reviewing its conclusions. Recognizing this, place is given to this letter from a brother in central Illinois, who has been familiar with the facts as given in years past in the Chicago daily press and whose experience gives his opinion value.]

The object for which the late council was convened in Wheaton has long and deeply enlisted the prayerful interest of very many, not only of Congregationalists, but very extensively in other Christian denominations. The real element of discord, which resulted in such strange consequences, was the principle condemning secret, oath-bound societies, adopted and carried out by Wheaton College and its president. This made it like a city set on a hill. Secretists everywhere studied it closely; every step in the conflict was eagerly watched, and every advantage that could be taken, and often without scruple, was taken. Just as deeply interested and devotedly prayerful were the opponents of secret, oath-bound societies in all the Christian denominations, nearly or quite, throughout the world; and like the command of the king of Syria, "Fight ye not with small or great, save only with the king of Israel," so the College president was the chief object of the most intense and bitter opposition. This was carried to such an extent that though he was a leading and successful educator in the Congregational denomination; was one of the movers in organizing the Illinois State Association; had educated a large number of young men who had become able ministers, and men who had stood high in other professions—with such a record, and without a single charge against his moral character, he was, upon a mere technicality, without inquiring into the facts, excluded from the associations, local and general, for which he had done so much.

All this was not done in a corner; both the friends and opponents of secret societies throughout the land have watched every step. Inquiries are awakened in all our minds, especially those of us who do not belong to the ecclesiastical body in question. We want to know what the Congregational polity amounts to? how it does its business? how safe and sacred are the interests of its members over whom it spreads the ægis of its protection? how fairly are its investigations and trials conducted?

The late Wheaton council was manifestly a large, learned and pious body of fair-minded ministers and laymen. They were unusually in sympathy with the Head of the church and influenced by the Holy Spirit. They were guided rather by sanctified common sense than sound ecclesiastical rules. Their decision was not what either party thought the question demanded, but a compromise to effect a settlement of a dispute.

They had a very difficult work to do. Ten years before there had been another council called to investigate and advise in this case, which instead of simplifying and assisting to a right decision rendered the case more complicated, and every principle of integrity and fair dealing was ignored. This embarrassed the work of the second council, and they simply dropped the original question of right and wrong, and by a compromise settled a dispute. But the question of right and wrong, like Abel's blood, cries from the ground, and we anti-secretists, who are not Congregationalists, want to know how Congregationalism deals with a question of right. For ten long years they have shut our senior editor in prison, and we don't want him taken out privately by a compromise, "being uncondemned" and a Christian, though not like Paul, a Roman, but an American. If he is guilty, let him be blamed to his face, as Paul did Peter; but if innocent, let him be acquitted.

Let us go back of the first council and see for ourselves the grounds for the charges against him; for the papers of the times contained all the facts in the case, and all could run as they read, and fully understand the whole difficulty. It appears there was one church, called the "First Church of Christ," in Wheaton, instead of what is now the Congregational and the College Church of Christ, of which the president of the College and most of the professors were members. All claimed to be, and doubtless were in principle, opposed to secret societies; but a disagreement arose between one of the professors, and a minority who sympathized with him, and the president, and a majority who sympathized with him. This was partly in reference to the radical and vigorous methods of carrying out anti-secret principles. The conflict increased until it became sharp and uncomfortable. It resulted in the retiring of the professor. He then arraigned the president before the church. The church listened patiently to the charges, and by more than two-thirds vote dismissed them entirely. The church became uncomfortable, and both minority and majority unitedly resolved to separate. They were agreed in this measure. They decided that the First Church of Christ should be disbanded, and allow every member liberty to join whatever church he pleased. They did disband the church; they pronounced it disbanded. Each party chose a committee to settle financial relations. The majority paid the minority over $400 for their interests in the old organization.

And here comes in the strangest management ever engaged in by men claiming to be honest. The minority went back on their agreement; ignored what they had done; kept the money, and claimed control over the majority. The first council, an ex parte body called by them, gave a basis for their claim. This is a transaction which in civil matters would condemn the perpetrators to the sentence of swindling. The minority summoned the president to appear before them to answer to charges, after having been acquitted by the First Church of Christ from a list of charges of everything they could think of. It voted to withdraw its fellowship from him, which upon any other principle than that of swindling he never shared; and for ten years they have treated the College Church, in every respect but one, just like an independent church; this exception is its claiming a control over the editor of the Cynosure. They acknowledge the independence of all the rest of the church. How did the church get it? Why, on just the same grounds and at the same time he got it. When the church was disbanded, and after withdrawing their fellowship from him, which every sound Christian body knows is a withdrawing all claims of control, they still, like the man pounding his dead dog to let the brute know there is a punishment after death, hold a claim over him.

Now, is this Congregationalism? We who are thoroughly Presbyterian and Methodist and Quaker, and all who are in sympathy with our senior editor and have perfect confidence in his honesty, integrity, piety and manliness,—we want to know if this is the way Congregationalism, that claims to be in the lead in intelligence, liberality and fair-dealing, does its business? We have a right to ask, Has secret-lodge blindness struck it? We hope it is only in part, and soon to disappear.

The last council would bring to us the joyful hope that blindness is fast disappearing. It was pervaded by a most precious spirit, and sound, practical, good sense seemed to pervade the whole body. They had a most difficult work to do—sadly complicated by the strange, inconsistent and unwise action of the council ten years ago; but still by prayer and faithful work they healed this deep wound, and redeemed the denominational name from the distrust and reproach which we of other orders entertained toward those whom we desire to love and fellowship. PRESBYTER.

PITH AND POINT.

ALABAMA FOR SEPARATION.

The following letter is of importance because the writer, Rev. W. R. Pettiford, is not only pastor of an influential Baptist church in Birmingham, Alabama, but is also moderator of Mount Pilgrim Association and president of the Alabama Baptist State Convention. It is an evidence that the Alabama churches will be soon awakened and behold the light of Christ as have those of Louisiana. The Good Will Association, formed several years ago in the vicinity of Mobile, could help greatly in redeeming the churches of the State:

I shall explain in a sermon why I do not believe in secret societies, and why I do not allow the Masons to have therir celebrations in my church, and why I am opposed to them. I wish to get a book like the one Mr. H. H. Hinman uses, showing that the Masonic religious services are so constructed as to leave the name of Jesus out of their Scripture readings. I have been much strengthened in my opposition to secret societies by your paper, the Cynosure. There will much depend upon what I have to say on this subject, and I am very anxious to be correct in all my statements.—W. R. PETTIFORD.

HOW SHALL I VOTE?

I want to tell the dear brethren that I am enlisted in the reform cause under the blood-stained banner of Jesus. In the last election I would not vote with the old parties, and I could not vote for St. John; for we were taught in the lodge that it was our obligation that made us Masons; so I did not vote at all. Now I heartily endorse the clause in the editorial correspondence of March 1st, namely, "If the Prohibition Convention next June does not nominate a clean ticket, we must put an American ticket in the field and vote for it." Now if I would have this any different I would say, nominate our men and vote for them under God. Some claim to join the Masonic lodge so that their influence as Christians can be better felt with the members of the order; but they find that they have lowered the standard of Christ when it is too late to repent. May God give us wisdom in this Presidential campaign is the prayer of one that has enlisted in this warfare for life.—JAMES FERGUSON, Gering, Neb.

PROHIBITION WORKERS IN SAN JOSE, CAL.

The Pacific Coast is alive in very many places on the temperance question. On the evening of the 26th ult. the talented young orator and editor, Walter Thomas Mills, lectured to a large house. He is a little man, but his thoughts are keen and convincing. He went over a great deal of ground, but improved frequent opportunities to impress deep lessons of Christian duty. His lecture was very well received. This week we have been favored with two profitable lectures by Rollo Kirk Bryan. His "Chalk Talks" are both instructive and entertaining, and will doubtless carry conviction to many hearts.—PROHIBITION.

GOOD TIDINGS FROM NEBRASKA.

The feeling against the Secret Empire is growing in this country. Many who have been members of secret orders have become disgusted with these dark altars of Baal and have renounced them as being unfit for the child of God. I have been a member of two secret orders, but for years I have separated myself entirely from their blighting power. "He that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." How different from this are the secret conclaves of our country! God bless the Cynosure for the noble manner in which it exposes these dark chambers of death, and increase its power for doing good, until its principles shall reach every nook and corner of our lovely land. My dear brethren, let us thank God and take courage in this glorious work of bringing men from darkness to light. The prohibition cause in Nebraska is gaining ground at every step The best of all, God is with us.—E S. EYERLY, Humbolt, Neb.

LITERATURE.

ALDEN'S CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE. Vol. IX. Pp. 477. Price 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

With the universal diffusion of literature, the frequency of translations and the making of books of which there is no end, a cyclopedia giving a brief biography of authors, with critical notices of their works, is becoming more and more a necessity. Such a work, in cheap and popular style, this aims to be. Among the notable names in this ninth volume of Alden's Cyclopedia of Universal Literature, which opens with Geibel and closes with Guernsey, are Gibbon, Green and Grote, historians; Gladstone, Grant and Greeley, most eminent as statesman, soldier and journalist, but of high rank also in the literary world; Archibald and James Geikie, scientists; W. H. Gibson, artist and author; Gerhardt, Goethe, Goldsmith and Gray, poets; Cunningham Geikie, prominent in Christian literature; Gogol, Russian novelist; and a small host of other authors of lesser note, perhaps, but not necessarily of less popular interest. This interesting series of volumes has an educating and elevating influence for a home library, in value, beyond estimate in dollars and cents.

THE PLANETARY AND STELLAR WORLDS. A popular exposition of the great discoveries and theories of modern astronomy. By Gen O. M Mitchel. Pp. 183. Price 30 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

The early death, during the late war, of the gifted, generous and patriotic General Mitchel, was a loss doubly felt through all the North. As conductor of the Cincinnati Observatory he had become well known in many cities through his popular lectures on astronomy. Neither before or since has this great science been given to the people in a style so attractive and interesting; and we may almost thank the stern necessity that forced their author to go out among men to raise funds by these lectures for the institution he was planting. Gen. Mitchel tells the story in the preface, and it is a very captivating introduction to the volume, which comprises these lectures. It is more than a generation since they were delivered, and the discoveries in astronomy have gone on in new lines since then, but the fundamental principles of the science are given in so attractive a form that the book will not be old for years to come.

Dr. Henry M. Field, editor of the New York Evangelist, writes for the current number of Scribner's Magazine on "Gibraltar." This fortress, which has enriched the language and almost gained a place in our vocabulary, has been often described, but Dr. Field makes the old honey-combed mountain seem like a new discovery, and the numerous fine illustrations add a value that makes this paper worth preserving. John C. Ropes closes his review of the Waterloo battle with the same research and careful review of the critical points of the great event as in the first paper. The illustrations are fine and many. The Chief Officer of the U. S. Signal Service, Gen. A. W. Greely, writes in good season for vacation plans, "Where Shall We Spend our Summers?" An able discussion of the famous Ordinance of 1787 adds to the interest of the paper on "The Center of the Republic" James Baldwin, the author, estimates that the center of population which has been moving westward from Washington with every decade, will find its limit in Missouri within a century and will then retrograde. An illustrated paper on "The Greek Vase," and poems by T. W. Higginson and Geo. Parsons Lathrop, enrich the number.

The every-day part of the American Magazine for the month is by no means its weakest. Mrs. Croly (Jennie June) on "Household Art," and Dr. Hutchinson on "Health Jottings for April," are sure to find grateful readers. The number opens with a valuable historical paper on the French invasion of Mexico during our late war, and the overthrow of the unfortunate Maximilian through the intrigues of the infamous Napoleon III. The third number of the deservedly popular papers on "Boy Life on the Prairie" has a companion in "The Decay of Rural Life in New England," which will be widely read and commented upon. The writer does not philosophize upon the sad agricultural ruin he paints, and the reader is left to conjecture whether foreign immigration, or false notions of laborious life, or politics, or epidemics have thus returned once fair realms to a primitive, wilderness state. "The Song of the Prairie Lark" is timely, and editor White's sketch of the "First Owner of Boston," with its illustrations, gives us portraits of colonial times.

The May number of the Missionary Review of the World, if possible, excels any of the previous numbers in richness and variety. Several of the eight articles in the "Literature" department are of unusual interest, such as "The Supreme Question of the Hour," "The Miracles of Missions," "Woman's Work for Missions," and "David Brainard" (all editorial). "The Opportunity of the Ages," by Dr. Chamberlain of India, "The Political Situation in Japan," by a writer whose name is withheld, but who is on the ground and thoroughly posted on the subject, are also of remarkable interest and value. "Organized Missionary Work," "Correspondence and General Intelligence," "International Department," by Dr. Gracey, "Monthly Concert," by Dr. Pierson, the "Monthly Bulletin," which sweeps the entire mission field, and the "Statistics of the World's Missions," are each packed with intelligence, discussions, facts, statistics, results, all of the latest and most reliable kind. Instead of any decline of interest there has been a steady increase in each successive number; and as the tide of missionary feeling rises higher and higher in the churches we look for still greater perfection and power in this advanced Review. Funk & Wagnalls.

Mr. George Kennan will tell in the May Century how he came to go to Siberia on the Century expedition. Mr. Kennan had spent some time in Siberia already in connection with the overland telegraph scheme, and in the summer of 1884 he made a preliminary excursion to St. Petersburg and Moscow for the purpose of collecting material, and ascertaining whether or not obstacles were likely to be thrown in his way by the Russian Government. He returned in October, fully satisfied that his scheme was a practical one. He, therefore, sailed from New York for Liverpool in May, 1885. He says: "All my prepossessions were favorable to the Russian Government and unfavorable to the Russian Revolutionists." He adds that this "partly explains the friendly attitude toward me which was taken by the Russian Government, the permission which was given me to inspect prisons and mines, and the comparative immunity from arrest, detention and imprisonment which I enjoyed ,even when my movements and associations were such as justly to render me an object of suspicion to the local Siberian authorities."

The April Cosmopolitan reminds us that color printing may be overdone, though it may answer for the time being for a popular attraction. The article which many will read first is Moncure D. Conway's "Reminiscences of Kaiser William," in which he gives a graphic account of experiences in the Franco-Prussian war, with a reproduction of a drawing of the battle of Gravelotte taken on the spot. David Ker, always an interesting writer, tells of a trip through the Caucassian mountains and gives a thrilling battle sketch. "Science and the Poets," "A Japanese Tea-drinking Ceremony," "Louisa May Alcott," and "Home Life in France," will all find deeply interested readers. In the latter Max O'Rell contradicts the popular notion of homelessness among the French people, arising from the fact that their language has no name for home. The thing exists in fact and in set terms as well.

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

"DOUBTING THOMASES," remarked an eminent divine, "must exist in ratio to the too credulous." The habit of cautiousness is not, as a general thing, inborn, but is the result of a naturally generous and confiding nature repeatedly victimized by the cunning and crafty. So the many disappointments, and often injurious effects, arising from the use of various vaunted remedies, have induced an undue cautiousness, and, in many cases, entire abandonment of the use of any. We call attention to the remedies of Dr. R. V. Pierce of Buffalo, which physicians are employing in their practice with the most beneficial results. His "Golden Medical Discovery," for diseases of the lungs and kidneys, heart affections, fever and ague, dropsy, and all diseases of the blood, has never failed when put to the test.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellowmen."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?

Philo Carpenter:—This saint of God (Moses Stuart) like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been, and are being "ensnared."

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Saudford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.
First Congregational, Leland, Mich.
Sugar Grove Church, Green county, Pa.
Military Chapel, M. E., Lowndes county, Miss.
Hopewell Missionary Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Cedar Grove Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Simon's Chapel, M. E., Lowndes Co., Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Miss. Baptist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Brownlee Church, Caledonia, Miss.
Salem Church, Lowndes Co., Miss.
West Preston Baptist Church, Wayne Co., Pa.

OTHER LOCAL CHURCHES

adopting the same principle are—

Baptist churches: N. Abington, Pa.; Menomonie, Mondovi, Waubeck and Spring Prairie, Wis.; Wheaton, Ill.; Perry, N. Y.; Spring Creek, near Burlington, Iowa; Lima, Ind.; Constableville, N. Y. The "Good Will Association" of Mobile, Ala., comprising some twenty-five colored Baptist churches; Bridgewater Baptist Association, Pa.; Old Tebo Baptist, near Leesville, Henry Co., Mo.; Hoopeston, Ill; Esmen, Ill.; Strykersville, N. Y.

Congregational churches: 1st of Oberlin, O.; Tonica, Crystal Lake, Union and Big Woods, Ill.; Solsbury, Ind.; Congregational Methodist Maplewood, Mass.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1888.

We lately wrote an able, honest, and eloquent member of Congress asking him these questions: Will the Government at Washington go on through the forms of legislation, and look on with indifference while the people of the United States are being sworn to obey secret laws and unknown superiors constituting an "Imperium in imperio"? And, if so, is not our Republic doomed to speedy dismemberment? The Congressman replies, in a letter just received:

"The questions presented in your letter are such as to fill one's mind with deep sadness. How these things are to be remedied I don't see. But somehow, and at some time, I trust the consummation will be reached." This Congressman is not alone in his sadness. If only half a million votes are consolidated in an American Prohibition party next November the consummation will begin to appear.

THE LOUISIANA STATE ELECTION went Democratic on Tuesday of last week by some 60,000, though there is a very large majority of Republicans in the State, known and confessed of all men there. McEnery, the present Governor, is said to be an intemperate man on whom liquor is gaining. Nichols, the Governor elect, ran as a reformer and split the Democratic ranks. Warmoth, the carpet-bag Governor of twenty years ago, bought the bonds of the State at forty cents and made a fortune by selling them at eighty cents. He is now twenty years a Southerner. His sugar last year sold for $100,000, and he appealed to the whites, in his letter accepting the nomination, justified their refusal to be governed by their ignorant ex-slaves, and told of the Democrats he had appointed to office. Meanwhile, both parties are courting colored votes. Colored men sit on juries, and Democrats appoint them to small offices. We rode in cars with them into New Orleans; and colored voters vote for Democrats in steadily increasing numbers.

But though the Negroes are in a social and political paradise to what they were twenty-five years ago, and their state is improving steadily, the lodge and liquor are millstones tied to the neck of their progress. In passing through Main street in New Iberia you will often see an hundred idle, drinking, swearing Negroes, lounging on whatever they can lean or sit, with now and then a sprinkling of whites in squads by themselves. A very large proportion of the cases in the courts, police and criminal, are cases of petty larceny furnished by drinking blacks. The lodges seek to shut out these for non-payment of dues; but lodge morals soon land their members in the saloons, and the saloons turn them over to the mayor's court and police prison. And these debased classes, seen in the streets, courts and jails, are cited to the detriment of the industrious and thriving who are at home.

PRESBYTERIAN REUNION.

"The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States" was formed by the Synod of New York and Philadelphia in 1784. This body is a supreme appellate "Court of Jesus Christ," consisting of above 600 judges called "commissioners," meeting once a year. A fortnight is an ordinary and three weeks a long session of this great ecclesiastical "court," of which Robert J. Breckenridge said in the General Assembly of 1837, "Nobody pretends there is any divine warrant for this Assembly contained in the Bible."

We lately asked the editor of a leading Presbyterian paper, "How can an appellate court of 600 members, meeting a fortnight once a year, properly hear and determine the appealed cases coming up from the whole United States?"

The editor, who had been a leader in the General Assembly, answered, "If the Assembly should sit continuously the year round, it could not properly try such cases. When I was Chairman of the Committee of Bills and Overtures, we had four cases come to us. Knowing the Assembly could not and would not hear them, we found a flaw in two of them, pronounced them 'irregular' and threw them out. The other two we recommended to be tried by a commission."

Another editor of a larger Presbyterian paper still answered the same question about this "Supreme Court," having the religious standing of all the Presbyterians in the United States under its jurisdiction, thus:

"SUCH A COURT IS A HUMBUG!"

Yet this Assembly is the supreme court of a denomination of Christians which is not excelled, if even equalled, by any other body of Christians on earth for sound learning, sound doctrine and scriptural piety. Its standards of doctrine once enacted into law by the British Parliament were written by the light of the flames which burned their confessors. And David Hume, though himself a skeptic, attributes all the principles of liberty in the British Constitution to the teachings of the Puritans, who were the disciples of the Presbyterians.

But the General Assembly, true to its worldly origin, has been a stumbling-block and hindrance in the way of piety and progress. Soon after its formation, a hundred years or so ago, it quarreled, split, remained apart some dozen years, united, split again in 1837, and continued split a little over thirty years, when the Old School and New reunited; and now the reunion with the slavery-secession or Church South seems likely to furnish business for another generation and keep its really wise and pious membership from concerning themselves with public morals and those needed reforms which are to remove the stumbling-blocks and bring in the kingdom of God on earth.

While the lodge was assailed for the murder of Morgan, this General Assembly for years discussed the "right to marry a deceased wife's sister," a question, said George W. Prentice of the Louisville Journal, which "belonged properly to the deceased wife's sister herself." When the slave question was brought up for decision the Assembly occupied its leading minds on Old and New Schoolism. This last contention and split was about points which were totally ignored when the schools united after slavery had fallen; and the reunion took place without a confession or retraction of an error by either party! It is amazing that bright, sensible, Christian men as they are do not see that Satan has kept that Assembly busy about trifles, so that the minds, the piety, and above all the prayers of their devoted people might be occupied with an excellent appearance about doing something religious, while slavery was filling eighty-two Southern graveyards with Northern dead. Even after slavery had fallen the Assembly voted down a resolution "to thank God for the fall of slavery and the preservation of free government."

And now, last week, Chicago Presbytery, "representing ninety-one Presbyterian clergymen, 280 elders and 12,109" members of Presbyterian churches in and around Chicago, after straining itself up to urging the Common Council of Chicago to "restrict" (not prohibit) the saloons of the city, took up from its General Assembly the reunion of the North and South Assemblies, about which earnest speeches were made to very little purpose. Not one principle of caste was condemned, but black and white presbyteries and synods are to be allowed on the same ground, while the Roman Catholic churches on the same Southern soil allow their black and white members to kneel side by side at the same communion that Christ may not be divided.

In that Chicago Presbytery are some of the finest minds and the best men in the United States; and those men know that false altars dot and false worships darken this whole country. They know, too, that the lodge is organized deism. Dr. Gray, the editor of the leading Presbyterian paper in the United States, holds and declares lodge-worship to be "devil-worship," and Drs. Marquis and Herrick Johnson (one of them from experience) know that the doctrine of the editor of the Interior is the truth, standing out on the pages of the Bible. Yet these learned and powerful men are busying their students about the reunion of Assemblies which have no warrant in the Word of God, while they never explain to their pupils "the unfruitful works of darkness," which Paul commanded to disfellowship, or "the cup of devils," which he forbade the disciples to drink. And this while thousands of young Presbyterian men of business are being drawn into secret lodges in self-defence, and sworn to life-long concealment, husbands from wives, parents from children and children from parents, thus trampling on the example of Him who "in secret said nothing," and who commanded his disciples to "follow," not despise, his example. What Albert Barnes said in his book on slavery is equally true of the lodge altars: "There is no power on earth, out of the church, which could sustain slavery an hour if it was not sustained in it."

—Our English correspondent, Rev. John Boyes, has kindly sent a copy of London Tit-Bits of the 17th ult., containing what purports to be an account of Freemasonry as practiced in England, which we judge to be fairly correct. The article is written altogether in favor of the order, gives portions of the oaths, describes the greater part of the initiation and praises the ritual for its "beauty and sublimity of sentiment," claiming that it will "bear comparison with the liturgy of the Church of England." The writer must have a singularly developed taste to write such sentiments.

NOT PROHIBITIONISTS YET.

Elsewhere we print an able discussion of the rejection of saloon-keepers by the Masonic order, contributed to the Voice of Masonry by an official of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana. We call attention to this article as it confirms the general argument we have heretofore made on this movement. Please turn back and read in the last half of the fourth paragraph, and also the third paragraph from the end of the article. The principle here very carefully maintained is that the Mason's law is his obligation. That law is not against liquor-selling or drinking and to make it so is imposing a new oath, so that Masons in one State are sworn against what is permitted in others.

The second principle is stated by the writer thus: "No act can be a Masonic crime unless such act is made a crime or misdemeanor by the statute laws of the State or country." This law is not drawn from the obligation but from the lodge lectures, and if true indicates a low condition of morality for a "handmaid of religion." But on this point we wish to present a higher authority than the writer in the Voice, namely the Grand Lodges of Virginia and Missouri. The following remarkable sentiments originated with the former and are quoted with approval in the records of the Missouri lodge meeting in October, 1867. Read carefully as this is an answer to the question of Masonic good citizenship:

"Once a Mason, always a Mason—once a Mason, everywhere a Mason. However independent, either as individuals or as lodges, whether Grand or subordinate—and we are each and all truly free and uncontrolled by anything save our ancient laws and constitution—yet no Mason can be a foreigner to another Mason. We are all equal citizens of one common government, having equal rights, equal privileges and equal duties; and in which government, thank God, the majority does not govern. For our Order, in its very constitution, strikes at the root of that which is the very basis of popular government. It proclaims and practices, not that the will of the masses is wise and good, and as such to be obeyed—not that the majority shall govern—but that the law shall govern. Our tenet is not only that no single man, but that no body of men (however wise or however numerous), can change in any degree one single landmark of our ancient institution. Our law is strictly organic; it cannot be changed without being destroyed. You may take a man to pieces, and you may take a watch to pieces, but you cannot alter his organs and put him together again as you do the time-keeper. Masonry is the living man, and all other forms of government mere convenient machines, made by clever mechanics, for regulating the affairs of a state. Not only do we know no North, no South, no East, and no West, but we know no government save our own. To every government, save that of Masonry, and to each and all alike, we are foreigners; and this form of government is neither pontifical, autocratic, monarchical, republican, democratic or despotic; it is a government per se, and that government is Masonic. We have nothing to do with forms of government, forms of religion, or forms of social life. We are a nation of men only, bound to each other by Masonic ties, as such citizens of the world, and that world the world of Masonry; brethren to each other all the earth over, foreigners to all the world beside."

AMERICAN PRINCIPLES IN PRACTICE.

When Knight Templar Masons, Odd-fellows, Grand Army, Orangemen, and other lodges take possession of our churches dedicated to Christian worship on the Lord's day; when the Kentucky legislature orders a salute to be fired on St. Patrick's day; when the flags on the New York City Hall are at half-mast because a pope is dead; when public schools are closed for Good Friday; when our Government sends a vessel to escort a Romish priest, and our President sends gifts and homage to the pope, we wonder what the end shall be. But the Democratic Mayor Hewitt of New York neither wonders nor winks at these alien invasions. When his Board of Aldermen vote to close the departments on Good Friday, or to raise the Irish flag on St. Patrick's day, or to half-mast the flag for the German Emperor; or the G. A. R. votes him a censure because he opposes them in the legislature; or the Irish societies rage because he will not review their parades, he brushes aside their complaints and tells them emphatically that Americans must rule America and that one flag is enough for so good a country. His veto of the ordinance transferring the flag-hoisting power to the New York aldermen, a few days since, has the vigor of 1776 about it. His argument has been a tonic in the debilitated system of our public life, which seems to be full of strange and dangerous foreign diseases. We have a heritage worth guarding and preserving from the corruptions of foreign lodges, and foreign despotisms. Let Mayor Hewitt's patriotism be contagious.

The Senate has before it the proposition to establish a public park in Colorado which it is proposed to smut with the name "Royal Arch Park." Mr. Henry M. Teller, who is supposed to represent Colorado in the Senate, evidently intends the country shall furnish a pleasure ground for his clique of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General and the Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret over whom Albert Pike presides. Mr. Teller, being of their number, seems to find his place as tool of the lodge to effect a scheme so dishonorable and fraudulent.

—Through the care of Prof. A. R. Cervine of Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill., a file of the Cynosure is kept in the Royal Library at Stockholm, Sweden.

—Please note a correction in the article from the Christian Instructor on the G. A. R., published last week. The author writes us that the General Assembly dates quoted should be 1873 and 1874 instead of 1883–4.

—The Argument, Prohibition organ in Indianapolis, is in favor of a renomination of St. John for the Presidential campaign. Wait till you are reasonably sure of electing him. He has borne his share of abuse unrequited.

—Secretary Stoddard left this office for Washington Thursday evening intending to stop on business in Ohio on the way. He started thus early for the capital because of word that the N. C. A. building would be vacated of most of its various tenants May 1st.

—Dr. A. H. Hiatt of this city and Wheaton was attacked about two weeks since with inflammatory disease and for a time his recovery was doubtful. His son, Rev. C. W. Hiatt of Columbus, O., was by his side during last week. He is now, we are glad to say, rapidly recovering.

—An item respecting the sermon of Elder Clifford of Dundee, Ill., at the funeral a Mr. Hill, appeared in our April 5th number, which we wish to correct. While it is understood that Mr. Hill had spoken severely of the lodge, yet the funeral services were conducted according to his last wish, and Elder Clifford was justified in speaking as he did of his Masonic life.

—Captain John Brown, Jr., whose visit to the Cynosure office lately we noted at the time, aroused much enthusiasm among the colored men of Topeka, Kansas. Their meeting presented him $10 and "Resolved that to-day we are happy to honor the son of the man who shook the United States from shore to shore that we might have our rights and freedom in the land of our birth."

—To an inquirer for his opinion on Masonry, Editor Gray of the Interior replies in his last number: "We do not believe in secret organizations of any kind. Christ said of himself that 'In secret have I said nothing.' He expected his followers, when they had a candle to light, to place it on a candlestick. Our principle objection to Masonry is that while it is a system of religion, teaching morals (and very good morals, too), it ignores Christ and offers salvation as a reward of good works."

—Our artist friend in Europe, whose letters from Munich and Switzerland our readers have had the privilege of reading, is now spending a time in Rome, from whence she writes an entertaining letter, which we hope to print next week. She expects to return to Bavaria about May 1st to take the position of private instructor in drawing and English to the children of the Duke Karl Theodore, to which she was recommended, without her knowledge, by her Munich teacher.

—The Religious Telescope criticises Secretary Stoddard's letter of March 22d as "A strange admixture" (that is, of truth and falsehood). In that letter Bro. Stoddard tells of a conversation had with a Freemason who lives neighbor to Bishop Kephart in Toledo, Iowa, who regards the Bishop as a friend of the lodge. Bro. Stoddard recalls in connection the Anti-masonic address given in lower Farwell Hall in 1868 by Rev. E. B. Kephart, now Bishop. The Telescope editor says, "We are surprised that Brother Stoddard should make such statements." "Bishop Kephart," he continues, "never was in Farwell Hall and never made a speech there on any subject." This is a very flat denial of what has been supposed to be a fact since 1869, when a gentleman, believed at the time to be Rev. E. B. Kephart, addressed the National Convention opposed to secret societies, meeting June 8 to 10. "Bishop Kephart does not attend Masonic meetings as Bro. Stoddard intimates." Bro. Stoddard only wrote what the Bishop's Masonic friend says of him. The Telescope must settle the lie with the Masons. If they spread false reports of him, it is no more than is done of many other good men.

CALL FOR A POLITICAL CONFERENCE.

The publication of Chairman Capwell's call below has been unavoidably delayed till the time is almost here. A mass meeting is not contemplated, but simply a "conference." Let all who possibly can, attend and consult.

By request of L. N. Stratton, J. P. Stoddard, and others, I hereby call a meeting for deliberation and action against liquor and the lodge, in Carpenter Hall, National Christian Association building, Chicago, Saturday, April 28th inst., for the objects specified above.

All citizens, irrespective of party, who are the friends of labor and laborers, and who wish them to be emancipated from secret, sworn fealty to unknown superiors;

All believers in Christ and Christianity as against false priests, false prophets and false worships;

All who believe persons who are under secret, sworn obligations to a portion of the community are unfit to govern the whole, and who will vote against such persons;

All who believe the liquor traffic to be the nursing mother of all our social, and most of our national evils, and will vote for its prohibition and suppression;—

All who hold these principles are requested to meet for conference on Saturday at 9 o'clock A. M., April 28th inst., as above. F. W. Capwell, Chairman.

NOTES FOR SATURDAY NEXT.

The campaign comes on apace and it is time Americans had some designs on the trestleboard. The Prohibition party is pushing forward for recognition. No one expects it to define its position on the lodge question. It is farther from it than when it hissed American delegates from the convention floor. The lodge question, however, is more prominently before the country than at any previous time since the Morgan agitation. The American party, for various reasons, is in poor shape for the campaign. The last four years have shown that concert of action and harmony of opinion is largely impractical. Many have fully identified themselves with the Prohibition party; others, and a large number at that, will not support platforms or candidates not committed against the lodge system. They do not care to work and vote for non-lodge men, simply because they are non-lodge men, working shoulder to shoulder with zealous secretists. "How can two walk together except they be agreed?" All the lodge wants is to be let alone. "A silent revolution" won't hurt oath-bound secrecy, and a "Holy Ghost religion" that leaves a man fellowshiping Masonic sun-worshipers in church communion will hardly exterminate the lodge. A lodge-excluding Christianity and a lodge affiliating politics may be in harmony, but it would take some solid logic and a long time to convince some men of its advisibility.—"American," Darlington, Mo.

The only party that I know of at present that is safe is the American party. If the principles inculcated in it cannot save us we are gone, as I view it. As I see things there never was a time in our history when the thinking people would be more apt to vote those principles. The American platform I have shown to men of all parties and there has never been one objection raised against it. I think it is high time that we had a party. I also believe with the good brother, W. F. Davis, now in prison for preaching the everlasting Gospel (a burning shame on our professed free nation). This good brother says "to vote for Freemasons to hold the offices of government at the bidding of the Prohibition or Republican or Democratic or any other party is Judas Iscariotism." My humble prayer is that God may increase our faith and lead to victory.—John Leeper, Senecaville, O.

If the Prohibition party will adopt our anti-secret resolution, we say amen to fusing with them, and show the two old rum-soaked parties and the powers of darkness as bold a front as possible in bringing in a reign of political righteousness to the nation. Now does it not seem strange that men of such learning and talent as Rev. Mr. Leonard and Professor Dickie, and hundreds of others, seem to know so little about the enemies' stronghold? They do not seem to know that liquor is intrenched and fortified in the secret lodges of the land, and the Prohibition party has got to storm the fort before they can reach the enemy.—John Thompson, Sabetha, Kansas.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, April 20th, 1888.

The great event of the week at the Capitol was the opening of the tariff debate in the House of Representatives. It began on Tuesday with great dignity and decorum. Nearly every member was in his seat, many distinguished visitors were in the crowded galleries, and much interest was manifested in the beginning of the battle which the Congressional war horses had so long been sniffing from afar. The first speech, which presented the revenue reform side of the question, was made by Mr. Mills, of Texas, as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. The reply came from Judge Kelly, the acknowledged leader and exponent of protection. The discussion promises to be long continued and exhaustive. It will not be strange if it wears upon the public patience to some extent before a vote is reached. Senator Stewart, of Nevada, has introduced a bill granting a pension of $5,000 a year to the widow of the late Chief Justice Waite. He stated that the responsibility for the proposition was solely in himself, he believing the widows of Chief Justices should be provided for in the same manner as the widows of ex-Presidents.

Some of the delegates to the recent International Council of Women remained in Washington to assist in temperance work. Among them was Mrs. Chant of England, who gave several temperance talks to large audiences in different parts of the city. In one of them she said, "There is no middle course; no second ground in this fight with alcohol. The saloon must be closed, its manufacture must be stopped. It must be banished from our homes, from our tables, from the communion itself, before man and woman can grow into the full stature of health and purity." Mrs. Chant is a grand neice of Edmund Burke.

Col. Donn Piatt, who used to say such sarcastic and bitterly brilliant things in the "Capitol," and Librarian Spofford, who can instantly place his hand on any book in the Congressional Library, appeared lately before the Senate Committee on Post Offices, to advocate the passage of the bill to prohibit the transmission of cheap literature by mail at one cent a pound. Col. Piatt said they appeared in behalf of three separate interests; first, the postoffices of the United States, which complain of being overburdened with mercantile matter; second, the authors and honest publishers of the country, who complain of unjust freight discrimination; and third, the outraged conscience of the country. He said it was an insult to intelligence to call the Seaside Library publications, for instance, periodicals, and yet it was by the misuse of this word "periodical" that the mails had become crowded with this matter to such an extent that our postal cars would have to be changed to freight cars if it goes farther. All that appealed to the lowest passions of the lowest classes was being distributed by the Government in partnership with the publishers, and that under the plea of disseminating knowledge. He mentioned the novels of Mrs. Braddon, Ouida, the younger Dumas and Zola as being especially poisonous to uncultured minds, from the fact that these writers possessed genius.

The American Alliance will hold a National Conference in this city on the 23rd of May, to which at least one delegate will be sent from every Congressional District in the country where the organization has established councils. The object of the conference is to consider what policy is most expedient to pursue with reference to the approaching Presidential campaign, and its actions may have some effect in shaping the platforms of the two great party conventions to be held in June. The Alliance believes in the restriction of immigration to the extent of excluding its undesirable elements and in requiring of foreign-born citizens a residence in this country of twenty-one years as precedent to the exercise of the elective franchise, but it prescribes no religious tests and makes war upon no church.

—Last Sabbath evening Dr. E. P. Goodwin of this city drew some excellent lessons from the history of Eli. The disastrous end of his life might be ascribed to the disobedience of his children, and parents were admonished to avoid such calamities by using the rod if necessary. Such stout orthodoxy is so rare in these days that it is refreshing.

MY TIMES ARE IN THY HAND.

(Psalms 31:15.)

Father, I know that all my life
Is portioned out for me;
And the changes that are sure to come
I do not fear to see;
But I ask thee for a present mind,
Intent on pleasing thee.

I ask thee for a thankful love,
Through constant watching wise,
To meet the glad with joyful smiles,
And to wipe the weeping eyes,
And a heart at leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize.

I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
Seeking for some great thing to do,
Or secret thing to know;
I would be dealt with as a child,
And guided where to go.

Wherever in the world I am,
In whatso'er estate,
I have a fellowship with hearts
To keep and cultivate;
And a work of holy love to do,
For the Lord on whom I wait.

WHICH WAS THE FOOL?

SUCCESS AND FAILURE.

"Dolly, I think that husband of yours is a fool."

"I've heard you say something of this kind before, brother; but out with it, what is the nature of his latest offense?"

"I suppose it's none of my business if he wants to go to the poor house and drag his family along with him; it's a free country, and a man can do what he will with his own."

"You are very mysterious. I hope Sam has not suddenly taken to drinking,nor anything of that nature?"

"Sam is a good fellow, in some respects a capital fellow; but no man in business can afford to give away all his money. Five dollars here, ten dollars there, and one hundred dollars to-morrow. I tell you what it is, Dolly, Sam has only what he has saved by hard work,and now he's giving it all away. In a few years he will not have a cent to his name, then he will come to those who have saved their money to borrow a loaf of bread for his family."

"Are you not a little mistaken, John? I know Sam is quite liberal,but I never supposed he wasted his money."

"Waste? I'd like to know what waste means? He gave that Jim Summers who broke his leg five dollars, and no one else gave over one. He would have been thought just as much of if he had given what others did, and saved four dollars by the operation. He subscribed for our church this year—I know, I saw the paper—one hundred dollars! That is double as much as anyone else gave. So it goes; when he hasn't a dollar left he will have only himself to thank."

"Did you know, John, that Jim Summer's wife has a young babe, and that only last week Jim paid the last dollar he had on the debt he owed for that house that burned down?"

"Well,what if Jim is an honest, needy fellow,Sam don't have to support him, does he? And then,what right has Sam to give a hundred dollars to the church when he has a family to support?"

"Our duty,John, should be done,regardless of what the world may say. Sam does not give a second thought to what anyone says, so long as his own conscience approves. And I most sincerely wish that every man was as thoughtful concerning his family as Sam is."

"Oh, well, as I said, it's none of my business, but I tell you plainly it will be useless for you to come begging around me. I shall never have more than enough for myself,"and with this parting shot John took himself off.

Samuel Grand had established himself in business in a small Western town. He married Dolly Whiting, a sweet girl of strong common sense, who had unbounded faith in her husband, and when he told her his plans and gave his reasons for what he did, she,believing him right, like a sensible woman gave him her earnest support. Nor could the lugubrious prophecies of her only brother shake her confidence in the least. At the same time, she stored all these sayings in her heart and watched and waited.

Ten years flew swiftly by. The Western town had grown to a be city and Samuel Grand was a successful man. He was interested in every enterprise calculated to be of use to his neighbors, and though he lived plainly, his home was a delightful spot to which he joyfully turned after the toils of the day were ended. Here, too, the needy were always sure of sympathy and assistance, and it was the wonder of many how one family could do so much for others without becoming impoverished thereby.

John Whiting, on the other hand, was little, if any, better off than when ten years before he complained to his sister that Sam was on the road to the poor-house. In fact, John's rapidly increasing family taxed his resources to the utmost, and one day he was forced to call on Sam for a small loan, though it cost him an effort to do so.

"Oh, certainly," said Sam, "I have a little fund which I keep for just such purposes. Here is the money,and when you are in need call again."

John was considerably overcome, but finally he said,—

"Sam, I don't know what to make of you."

"Why so, John?"

"Well, when you were first married you and I were worth just about the same. You were always spending your money freely—even worse,I thought, giving it away—while I saved every dollar, and yet you have plenty and to spare, and I am not as well off as I was then. I cannot account for it, for we both had an equal start, and you have worked no harder than I have."

"John, let me give you a little bit of history. You remember when I commenced business here I bought wheat and stored it to ship in the spring. It so happened I had about all of a certain kind of wheat the farmers at that time used for seed. When they had done their spring sowing a long rain came on and the seed rotted in the ground. Now, I reasoned, I can get double price for every bushel of wheat I have. The Sabbath day came,and while sitting at home I could not refrain from congratulating myself on my good luck to Dolly. I noticed she did not say much, and presently she took up the Bible, as she frequently did,and read aloud the eleventh chapter of Proverbs, closed the book, and said never a word. I could not tell, nor do I know to this day, if she intended to read me a lesson, but I took up my hat and went out for a walk. I thought of the thousand bushels of grain, really worth about one dollar,which I could sell for two if I should demand that price, and then, ringing in my ears, were the words Dolly had just read: 'He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him.'

"You see whatit says,'The people shall curse him.' I interpreted this to mean, it was not only their right but their religious duty to do so, because of the iniquity of the action. Was I, then, committing a crime? The next day I commenced selling my wheat at a dollar a bushel, which gave me a fair margin of profit. Men called me a fool. Dolly and my own conscience told me I had done right. About that time, you may remember, came up for discussion the question how much we ought to give to objects of charity and for the public good generally. I had long talks with Dolly about it, and she advised that we lay aside one-tenth of each year's income, to be devoted to such purposes as the occasion might warrant. The plan was adopted, and we have never missed the amounts thus expended. In fact it has seemed like good seed sown on good ground, or like bread cast upon the waters. Leaving out of the question our duty to God,which should be the ruling principle of our lives, there is sound wisdom from a business standpoint in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth verses of that same chapter, which, you will remember, says: 'There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself.'

"Such is the history of my success, for in the eyes of men I have been successful. I have merely followed my guide, the blessed Word, and my good wife has helped me to do so. I have been blessed beyond my most sanguine expectations, and I have realized that it is surely more blessed to give than to receive."

"Sam, ten years ago I told Dolly you were a fool, and on the way to the poor-house. I have had my eyes opened, and I am now convinced that yours is the right path, even though my predictions had been verified. My children shall be taught to give as they have opportunity,and to remember that we are only stewards of God's bounty."—Oscar Bliss in N. Y. Observer.

A notable lesson in temperance was given the other day at Honolulu by the Consul-General of Japan, Mr. Ando, who is a native Japanese. He had received as a present from some friends two casks of liquor; but for the purpose of warning his fellow-countrymen in Hawaii against drinking habits, and to show them that he meant what he said on the subject of temperance, he took the casks into his yard, had holes bored into them, and poured out the contents upon the ground. Would that all consuls were like this Japanese official at the Sandwich Islands!—Union Signal.

IN THE SUNSHINE.

You will find me in the sunshine
Where the path is bright and clear;
There are rifted clouds above me
But the sunshine falleth here;
And I walk,at peace and quiet,
With no "darkness" on my way,
If I follow close my Master,
And can hear what he doth say.

You will find me in the sunshine,
And my earthly cares seem light;
They are here but Christ is lifting
Every veil that dims my sight,
As I follow where he leadeth,
Close within his footprints tread,
While my happy soul he feedeth,
And there's sunlight overhead.

Do you ask how I have found it—
Such a path of peace and rest?
It is just by simply trusting
That my Saviour knoweth best;
Singing, "Thy will and thine only,
Blessed Lord, my God, be done,"—
Just by walking in the sunlight
As he gently leadeth on.

Come and try it! 'Tis so precious,
As He bears life's load of care,
Like a little child to follow,
Feeling Christ my Lord is there;
For this path leads on in sunshine
To the regions of the blest,
Where the Lord himself will guide us
Into everlasting rest. —A. B. Troth.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Electricity, like gravitation, light, and life, is not understood. That there is such a substance as electricity, is well known, and has been throughout all human history. It is diffused throughout all matter and space, and it may be collected and concentrated for local effect in producing power or illumination. The God of nature has methods of bringing it into localized operation in producing lightning and the aurora borealis. These operations lie in a region which "no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen." Man can only stand off and conjecture. Yes, human ingenuity has done wonders in lassooing, controlling, and directing in lines of utility, this wild horse of the universe.

Agencies for collecting it have long been known, but the agencies for controlling and directing it are of recent origin. Rubbing a cat's back or two sticks together are simple forms of exciting the electric fluid. It belongs to Edward Weston to invent the "dynamo electric machine" which is now used in producing power and light. The Voltaic battery has long been employed to collect electricity for medical and telegraphic purposes. The dynamo electric machine, such as is used in our electric light companies, is a much more complex machine. It consists of magnets—of horse-shoe shape—with similar poles, placed end to end, and of an iron cylinder covered with wire and situated between those two poles. This cylinder is placed on a shaft driven by a pully which may be belted to any source of power. Speedy revolution of this shaft produces electricity in sufficient quantities for practical use. This cylinder is covered with wire, and the electricity is collected from the wire by copper brushes. Edison and Brush have both constructed generators of electricity; somewhat different, but they involve the essential elements of the principles found in Weston's dynamo electric machine.

In producing illumination from generated electricity two kinds of lamps are used, viz: "The arc lamp" and the "incandescent burner." The arc lamp is chiefly used for lighthouses and street lamps. It is peculiarly constructed. Two pieces of carbon are brought into proximity, one of which is connected to the wire that is attached to the generator. The electricity leaps from this piece of carbon to the other so rapidly that intense heat is generated, and this produces light. The current of electricity in passing from one piece of carbon to the other does not go in straight lines, but describes an arc. The reason of this is not well understood. For this reason it is denominated "the arc lamp." Its light is unsteady, and ceases, of course, on the consumption of the pieces of carbon.

The incandescent burner produces a more steady and useful light. Its construction is much more simple. A thin carbon loop enclosed in an air-tight glass globe, and connected to a wire, from which the electricity is transmitted, and around which the globe is hermetically sealed, are its parts. A key connected to the wire in the glass neck of the globe is so constructed as to enable it to turn off the current of electricity, and thus extinguish the light. The electric current is forced through the carbon loop, which offers such resistance to its passage that it becomes white with heat. Both the carbon and the globe are useless when they burn. They are manufactured and placed in the market. One of them will last about 1,000 hours, and it costs about $1. It requires greater electrical power to operate the incandescent burners, and the current can only be conveyed about a half a mile from the generator. Its light is steady and not hurtful to the eye.

This whole science of producing and managing electric power and light is yet in its infancy, notwithstanding we are all well on the way, and we expect at no distant day to have our machinery in shop and locomotive driven by its power, and our homes lighted and heated by its mysterious and inexhaustible agency.—Christian Advocate.

A LAWYER BEATEN BY A CATECHISM.

The following story is told of an amusing scene in a court-room in Chicago: A little boy about eight years old was put on the stand as a witness, when the opposing counsel objected on the ground that the child did not understand the nature of an oath.

"Do you know what an oath is, Charley?" asked the judge.

"Yes, sir," answered Charley; "it is to ask God to help you to tell the truth."

"Where did you learn all this?" frowned the opposing counsel.

"In the catechism," said Charley, not to be frowned down by the biggest lawyer in the business.

"In the catechism? What catechism?"

"In the ten-cent catechism, sir."

"Who told you to look in the catechism for the definition of an oath?"

"My sister. She told me last night, and I got it, and studied it."

"Have you got your catechism with you?"

"Yes, sir, here it is," taking a well-thumbed little book from his trousers' pocket.

"You see the boy has his documents," interrupted the judge, with a smile; and a quiet titter went round the court-room as it became evident that the lawyer was being beaten by the child.

"H'm! Let me see the book. I wonder if you know anything more that's in it. Who made you?"

"Why, God, of course," was the reply, as if the lad pooh-poohed the idea of being asked such a simple question, and wanted "something hard."

Several questions were asked, and elicited ready replies. The lawyer saw that he was in for it, and accepted the defeat as gracefully as possible. Turning to the judge, he said:

"Your honor, I guess we will accept this witness; and as for this little book, I would submit it to my learned friend, the counsel for the other side, and recommend its careful perusal by him. It will do him good."—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT THE SMOKER SUFFERS.

Dear Reader:—Hast thou ever considered how often the high-toned smoker's blood is made to boil in view of the slights and disgraces so publicly put upon men, boys, and even women, who love their cigar or cigarette?

No matter how exquisite the curl of one's moustache, or the twirl of his cane; no matter how elegant the broadcloth on one's back, the silk hat on his head, the calf-skin on his feet, or the kid-skin on his hands; all his fine clothes seem to go for nothing, and every day the smoker's finest feelings are outraged by innumerable affronts.

Look at the signs, hateful to every lover of "plug" and "fine-cut," which are conspicuously posted in many public places,—

NO SMOKING!

Smoking Positively Prohibited Here.

And most pointed and cutting of all:

Gentlemen will not, Others must not smoke Here!

"What!" exclaims the walking advertisement of the tobacconist, "has a smoker no rights? If I like to smoke a cigar, I like it to smoke. And if I am to smoke it, I must smoke where I am, and I am here. If that is not logic I never smoked tobacco."

But all this logic avails no more than the fine clothes to grace the victims of the weed.

Other considerations, influential in their place, are powerless to extricate the smoker from the most disgraceful associations.

Though a man be as rich as the Rothschilds, as caustic as Mark Twain or Robert Ingersoll, as courtly as the Prince of Wales, or as popular a pulpit orator as preacher Duryea, Storrs, or Spurgeon, on many a railroad train he cannot enjoy his cigar without being bundled off into the smoking-car with saloonists, gamblers, black-legs and common drunkards.

One may smoke only the choicest brands of tobacco, and occupy the highest social, political, or official positions in the land, yet he is not secure from attack even in his own house, and by guests or members of his own family.

Smarting under the strokes of the stinging castigation received under his own roof, the wretched smoker sneaks out into the street to finish his cigar and forget his troubles by mingling with a crowd of strangers, among whom he fondly fancies he can be alone and unnoticed.

Vain hope! Idiotic delusion! A customer passes, to whom he was just planning to sell a large bill of goods on the morrow, swallows a mouthful of his smoke, and bends a searching and reproachful look upon the offender, who realizes, too late, what a costly cigar he is smoking.

Throwing it down he steps into a mission hall opening off the street, to be soothed with the consolations of religion, and hears the missionary read, "If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." Rev. 14: 9–11.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN EUROPE.

The leading article in a recent issue of La Petit Journal, in Paris, is devoted to an account of the need and success of temperance work in Europe. Mrs. M. B. Willard translates the following extracts.

"There is at this time," says the srticle, "in all Europe, a real crusade against alcoholism. We hear it repeated in nearly all parliaments, as well as in the assemblies of savants—medical and benevolent—alcohol is the foe. But how shall we fight it? By what means has experience shown that we may conquer, or at least check, the inroads of an enemy that depraves and kills the people? It is proposed to increase the tax upon alcohol. That is excellent from the fiscal point of view. Nothing is better then imposing duties on articles of luxury and of doubtful good. But will heavy taxes alone lessen the consumption? Experience shows that the most frightful imposts, those now upon tobacco, for instance, have no great effect, the sale having already reached four hundred million francs annually. Some propose to give the government a monopoly of the sale of alcohol. It would seem that we have now enough government monopolies—tobacco, matches, et al. In a small country like Norway or Switzerland, where large cities are rare, where the people do not change their residences, where the affairs of all are known to all, a government monopoly of the sale of alcohol presents fewer difficulties and affords some advantages. But in France, with a Venetian police and the penalties of Draco, the monopoly could not prevent the laboring men in city and field from getting and drinking that worst of alcohols, called 'industrial,' or extracting the desired spirits from molasses, potatoes or corn.

"The best methods of changing the morals and manners of a people, is to persuade them to direct appetite to some other means of gratification—something not harmful, but useful. This has been accomplished in Sweden, where the consumption of alcohol had reached a higher figure than anywhere else in Europe, but where it has been reduced during the last few years to less than four litres per inhabitant yearly. And this is due to two influences. First, temperance societies for prevention, and education by means of books, pamphlets, conventions, etc., all to show people the deplorable effects of alcoholism. Second, the encouragement of a healthful drink—stimulating and nourishing—coffee. The King of Sweden has banished brandy from his table, and coffee has become the fashion. Peasants, men and women, have adopted the new drink, and the consumption of coffee, unknown in Sweden fifty years ago, has risen to six pounds per head yearly. An amusing incident is reported from that country, which illustrates the victory of coffee over alcohol. A peasant came to the governor of a certain province, saying: 'My wife, who used to love brandy inordinately, has been converted by the pastor and the temperance women. She has taken to drinking coffee, and that has become so dear to her that she drinks ten cups a day, and I don't know how to stop her. It is ruin to the household. What shall I do? I have come to your Excellency for advice.'

"The governor replied that the husband must convince her of the evils of too much coffee-drinking, and warn her of its effect upon the nerves.

"'I have done that,' returned the man, 'and I have supported my arguments by several smart whippings.'

"'That is too much,' said the advisor. 'Bring her to me, and see if she will listen to my counsel.'

"So the woman was brought in, and the magistrate succeeded in convincing her of her error, and restored moderation to the household. Thirty years ago, France attempted a lessening of the duty on coffee and sugar, but it was not carried on because of the war necessities. It will hardly be told us to-day that the exchequer has too much need of silver to allow much thought for the public health."—Union Signal.

The consumption of beer is largely on the increase both in this country and in England, nearly a thousand million gallons of beer having been consumed in 1887 in the mother country.

Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, who has been a great drinker of beer for the last ten years, has recently received a present of a thousand dozen of various bottled ales from an English brewing company.

The largest single list of signatures to the world's petition yet received comes from Miss M.W. Leitch, Vice-president of the World's W. C. T. U. for Ceylon. It comprises the names of 26,643 men and 7,154 women, a total of 33,797.

The Prohibitionists have called conventions, and will put tickets in the field in the following States: Oregon, California, Kentucky, Indiana, Texas, Alabama, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Maine, North Carolina, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Ohio, Kansas, New York and Missouri.

Three times a week Jean Ingelow gives a dinner to the sick poor and the discharged convalescents from hospitals who either are unable to work or have not yet found employment. She is also the founder and supporter of a flourishing temperance and reading room in her native town.

The leading article in a late issue of La Petit Journal, of Paris, is an account of the need and success of temperance work in Europe. There is at this time in all Europe a real crusade against alcoholism. Nearly all the parliaments, as well as all the assemblies of savants, medical and benevolent, declare alcohol to be the foe.

At the late County Prohibition Convention in Chicago, Dr. Herrick Johnson's remarks were rich and spicy. He said that when you can array the conscience of the community against the curse of the community, the curse must go to the wall. The stomach and the pocket cannot then control, for it has come to be a matter above dollars and cents. Did you ever see a dog chasing its own tail? Round and round and round he goes, faster and faster, but does not get ahead any. Well, that is high license "after" prohibition, eternally chasing it, but never reaching the goal. Here in Chicago I have interviewed the mayor, the license department, the policemen, and from all the information they give I am convinced that high license has not decreased drinking one iota. It has not closed one saloon in the heart of the city, only a few in the outlying districts, and the closing of these has not decreased drunkenness and resultant crime.

Saloons for their existence need drinking; drinking demands drunkards; drunkards commit crime; crime demands courts; courts cost money, hence tax saloons to raise the money to pay the expenses of the courts, made necessary by the crimes committed by drunkards who drink in the saloons, licensed to raise revenue. So the circuit is complete, the dog is chasing his tail. Stamp out the saloon and there will be no need of license money to run the city government. But license is not the way to stamp it out. Would you allow small-pox to fester in our city if only you could sell vaccine matter enough to pay the physician's bill?—Union Signal.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

ANNOUNCEMENT.—The Chicago Evangelization Society will hold an Institute for Christian students and workers, men and women, in this city, commencing May 1st.

There will be: 1st. Lectures on practical Christian subjects. 2d. A three weeks' carefully arranged plan of teaching and study.

The course of instruction will comprehend: 1st. Christian Doctrine. 2d. Elementary Church History. 3d. Sermons and Sermonizing.

The Institute will be under the care of Rev. Prof. W. G. Moorehead, D. D., of Xenia, Ohio. He will be assisted by Evangelist E. W. Bliss, Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D., Rev. C. F. Goss, and other ministers and teachers.

It is the purpose of this Society to train young men and women for Christian work, and to employ able Christian workers to teach the Gospel in Chicago and its suburbs. Inquiries may be addressed to Mr. F. G. Ensign, or to Miss E. Dryer, Bible-work Institute, 150 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

WELLS STREET MISSION, CHICAGO.

The fifth anniversary and closing services of this mission were held on the evening of April 12. After listening to the soul-inspiring songs of praise a holy influence settled down on the place which increased during the reading of the Scriptures by Bro. T. B. Arnold, and the two prayers, one before and one following the reading.

Sister Bradley, in a short talk, gave a history of her call to the home missionary work twelve years ago, and of her indentification with Wells Street Mission. She spoke of the manifest power of God in the meetings, of the souls saved, of those sanctified, of how the financial necessities had been providentially met; and concluded by alluding to the fact that this night the mission was to be closed; and with an earnest appeal to sinners to come to Jesus before the door of mercy should be forever closed.

After singing testimonies were called for. A brother testified for himself and in behalf of the mission band: "The Chicago Avenue Church is our home; but here is where we were baptized [alluding to the enduement of the Spirit]." Here they had been taught to work. Another said: "In three days it will be two years since I was saved in Wells Street Mission. It is the dearest spot on earth to me. God led me here. I know I am saved to-night. We have always had the Spirit here." Sister Bradley explained that when she found this brother sin had separated him from his wife, but grace had united them, and they were now a saved, happy family. Another convert was on his feet in a moment exhorting sinners to "get on board the car of salvation," and telling with deep feeling what God had done for him. Another, "I thank God for this little mission. It is four years since I came in here and God saved me." Brother Evans: "I praise God for this little mission. I was a miserable drunkard, but God has raised me up where I can call myself a man." A worker: "I have seen souls saved in this mission." Brother Anderson: "I thank God for this mission for here was where the Lord found me. On March 12, 1882, the Spirit met me here and said, 'Where are you going to spend eternity?' In one week I was saved, and I have been kept to this time." I might fill a large space with these testimonies, but enough has been repeated to show a little of the character of the work. A part of the time a holiness meeting has been held Sabbath afternoons. In these meetings souls have been gloriously sanctified. The writer can testify that here the Holy Ghost has fallen on seeking souls, as he does on saints in other places, and as I believe he fell on the worshipers in Jerusalem.

Brother Arnold spoke of the number who had been saved during the five years that this mission had been maintained, and said, "If they were all gathered here tonight this room would not hold them." Brother Nickle sang "The Trundle-bed Song" with marked effect, and other testimonies followed, until ten o'clock. Sister Bradley again invited sinners to come and be saved, a collection was taken, prayer offered, and the last service in Wells Street Mission was ended.

A new mission will be opened, although the location is not yet determined; but as soon as means can be collected to pay a month's rent and a man can be found who will sign a lease, and thus back sister Bradley in this work, the place will be chosen. The rent will be the chief expense. Perhaps some of the Lord's children who read this may feel led to help found the new mission. A few $10 bills would probably be the means in God's hands of inaugurating the work at an early day. Dear reader, "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it;" and what you give will be so much treasure laid up where moth and rust will not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal. In response to this appeal address sister Bradley at the Free Methodist office, 104 Franklin street, Chicago.

Yours for the salvation of the people,

MARY C. BAKER.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall began revival meetings in St. Paul on the 15th, to continue four weeks, the first week to be held in Plymouth Church. He is to be assisted by a choir of 200 voices, and part of the time by Mr. Towner.

—Ex-Senator Harrison will represent the Indianapolis Presbytery at the coming centennial meeting of the General Assembly in Philadelphia.

—The Evangelical Association Conference of Illinois, meeting at Elgin, passed resolutions declaring the liquor license system a failure so far as concerns the extermination of the traffic, and expressing gratification at the Supreme Court's decision regarding prohibition in the States.

—The New England Methodist Conference unanimously adopted the report of the special committee expressing indignation at the pending action by Congress forbidding the landing of any Chinese except officials and public men. The conference ordered that the report be signed by its officers and forwarded to the New England Congressmen.

—Indirect information has been received to the effect that the Russian government has forbidden the American Bible Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society to distribute Bibles in Russia. Rev. Alexander McLean, one of the secretaries of the American Bible Society, is reported to say that he believed the trouble was only at Reval, where the local authorities, incited, as he supposed, by malicious publications against the society, might have forbidden the distribution of Bibles. He did not anticipate any such severe order would be issued as that which has been hinted at, expelling the agents of the American and British societies from Russia. All the work of the American society in Russia, Dr. McLean said, was done through the Russian Bible Society.

—Among the passengers arriving in New York on the steamer Umbria Saturday was Bishop Taylor, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, missionary bishop to Africa. The bishop has been absent four years, and has been doing hard work in Africa in that time. He has established mission stations at intervals of 100 miles. There are now thirty-six mission stations established among thirty-five tribes. The bishop returns here to attend the conference of the Methodist Church and to make his report.

—The First Church, Pasadena, California, Rev. M. N. Cornelius, pastor, welcomed at the last communion one hundred new members, most of them by letter. Within a radius of five miles three churches have been organized in less than a year by one man, a retired foreign missionary, with congregations ranging from fifty to one hundred persons.

—The meetings held in Indianapolis, Ind., by Rev. B. Fay Mills are arousing a great religious interest. The churches are gathering in new members. On Sabbath, April 1, thirty-two persons were added to the Second Presbyterian church, forty-eight to the Memorial church, thirty-three to the Olive Street and thirty-nine to the East Washington Street church.

—The one hundredth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America will meet in the First Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, Pa., Thursday, May 17, 1888, and will be opened with a sermon by Rev. Joseph T. Smith, D. D., moderator of the last Assembly.

The Chicago Presbytery, at its meeting last week, was called upon to adopt the following resolution, which they did manfully, and appointed Dr. J. L. Withrow of the Third Church to present it to Mayor Roche and the City Council:

The Presbytery of Chicago believes the traffic in intoxicating beverages to be the prolific source of an overwhelming proportion of all the crime, poverty and misery that dishonors and degrades our fair land and city. We, therefore, rejoice in the rapidly rising power of public sentiment against the further extension of the liquor traffic and in favor of its restriction; and, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Presbytery, representing ninety-one Presbyterian clergymen, and 280 elders and 12,109 members of our churches in the city of Chicago and its suburbs, urges on the Aldermen of Chicago to establish by an ordinance the measures for restricting the sale of liquor, which City Collector Onahan has submitted, and which the daily press of the city are unanimous in favoring.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI, Second Quarter.—May 6.

SUBJECT.—The Judgment.—Matt. 25: 31-46.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal.—Matt. 25: 46.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost in Words and Weapons.]

THE JUDGMENT OF THE NATIONS.—The description of this judgment is prophecy, though it has some of the elements of parabolic teaching; with this qualification, we may look upon the great event here portrayed as actually coming to pass. It is a mischievous habit which has led the Christian world to speak of the judgment as one great event, taking place at the end of the world. Nothing could be more wide of the teaching of the Scriptures. The second coming of the Lord and the judgment may be studied as one great event, taking place in sections, with intervals of time between each act. Concerning the second coming, see 1 Thess. 4:13, 18; 2 Thess. 1.7, 10. In like manner the resurrection is accomplished not at one moment, but in three "cohorts." (Compare 1 Cor. 15: 22, 26, with Rev. 20: 5.) It is so in respect to the judgment. There are three distinct judgments mentioned in the Scriptures: First, the judgment of the saints—not for their life, but upon their works—of which the last parable teaches (see also 2 Cor. 5: 10); second, the judgment of the living nations, which is the one under discussion at this time; and third, the judgment of the great white throne—the final judgment upon the wicked, who shall be raised to life at the close of the millennial period and after the living nations have been dealt with. (Read carefully Rev 19.) To set the matter a little more clearly before our readers, even at the risk of repetition, we will cast some of the details already mentioned under distinct heads. 1. The time of this judgment. At the close of the great tribulation and just before the opening of the millennial reign, when Christ comes with all his saints. (See 2 Thess. 1: 10; Dan. 7: 13, 14; 9: 24; Matt. 26: 64; Jude 14; Rev. 19: 8, 9; Psa 1.) 2. The Judge. Jesus himself, in the character of "King of kings and Lord of lords, sitting on the throne of his glory." Hitherto he has been seated on his Father's throne. This is the first and only time in which he speaks of himself as king, except at his trial before the crucifixion. 3. The subjects. The living nations upon the earth at the time of Christ's appearing. (See Scriptures already cited.) 4. The reality of this judgment. It takes account of real difference between the character of those who are judged and that of those who are welcomed into the kingdom, separating them, not by gradations, but absolutely and finally, from the righteous.

THE ISSUES OF THIS JUDGMENT.—If the issue of the judgment upon the living nations at the coming of Christ is so clearly marked, it cannot be less certain concerning those who live and decide as to Christ during this dispensation of the preaching of the Gospel. 1. As to the righteous. (a) They are saluted with Christ's blessed word, "come." Not as his disciples, but as "the blessed of his Father." This differs essentially from the commendation—"Well done, good and faithful servant!" which applies to his personal disciples. While I think there is a real difference here, as there will be a difference between the place and standing of those saved of the nations and that of those believers who make up the church, I have no doubt that their blessedness will be, in its way, quite as great. (b) They are appointed an inheritance, perhaps with the saints. Their salvation was planned from the beginning, even as our election was provided for in Christ from the foundation of the world. God's salvation, whether for Christian believers or for righteous heathen, is an eternal one, based, no doubt, upon the "redemption which is in Christ Jesus." 2. As to the wicked. (a) A sentence of banishment from the King in his glory (2 Thess. 1:9, 10). There is no hint of future probation here. Their separation from Christ is final. Christ, the glorious King, is the center and substance of heaven. To be with him is salvation; to be banished from his presence is to be lost. (b) An appointment to everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. This is in antithesis to the blessing of the righteous. The latter are appointed to the kingdom prepared by God from the foundation of the world, while these go to the company and torment of the devil and his angels, whom they followed in the last great apostasy (Rev. 19: 7, 10). 3. The sentence is final. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." No ingenuity of reasoning, no torturing of the Scripture, can break the plain and terrible force of these words of our Lord. It is as foolish as it is wicked for any one, be he "saint" or "sinner," to attempt to wrest these words.

[From the Christian.]

Then shall he say unto them on his left hand, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. The word everlasting is the same as eternal. The phrase "everlasting fire" is used in Jude 7. "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them.... are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." The eternal fire was no figure of speech, no fancy, no unmeaning phrase, no mere guilty conscience, which grows less and less severe as men are hardened in sin. "On the wicked, God shall reign snares, fire and brimstone and an horrible tempest. This shall be the portion of their cup." Psa. 11: 6. Over and over again this cry of fire is heard throughout the Scriptures. "A fire is kindled in mine anger; it shall burn unto the lowest hell." Deut. 33: 22. And the last solemn warning of God's Word is that the fearful and unbelieving "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

Depart into eternal fire, into fire like that which destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah. And why? Is it on account of differences of opinion, mistaken views, or even manifest errors? By no means. They are to go into a fire which was prepared, not for man, but for the devil and his angels, because "I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat, I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink, I was a stranger and ye took me not in, naked and ye clothed me not, sick and in prison and ye visited me not." They are as unconscious of their demerit as the others were of their merit. The righteous say, When have we done these good things? The wicked say, When have we done these evil things? "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not to me. These shall go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life."

The words are solemn beyond expression. The same adjective, eternal, or everlasting, is used in both instances, but how different are the nouns which the words qualify. One is eternal life, the boundless, measureless gift of the eternal God; the other is the eternal fire, such as fell on the cities of the plain, consuming and destroying; eternal punishment, from which this passage offers no hope of deliverance, no way of escape. It will be safer to lay hold on eternal life than it will be to risk the terrors of eternal fire. Men who spend their time discussing the prospects of future probation will act more wisely and more prudently in improving the present probation which God has given them. "Behold, to-day is the accepted time, behold, to-day is the day of salvation."

Lodge Notes.

The employes of the Edgar Thomson steel works, near Pittsburgh, took a private ballot to decide finally upon Andrew Carnegie's proposition, to pay on a sliding scale. So far only the non union men have voted, the Knights of Labor holding aloof. The result was favorable and the works open again this week.

At a meeting of the locked-out brewers in Cooper Union, New York, Thursday night, the boss brewers were denounced, and President Cleveland was threatened that if the boss brewers, who were pillars of the Democratic party, did not accede to the demands of the men, that party would not fare well in the next election.

The Galena Gazette makes a strong speech for the nomination of Grand Master John C. Smith for Governor of Illinois, because he has a "larger acquaintance" and can call more voters by name than any other man in the State. No doubt he has made a profound study of lodge rolls during the past ten years, but that is his best recommendation.

The Bald Knobber chief, David Walker, is to be hung. His trial closed at Ozark, Mo., April 11th, the jury returning a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. The Court will probably sentence the defendent to be hung on the 18th of May, the day fixed for the execution of the three other convicted Bald Knobbers, John and Wiley Mathews, and Chief Walker's son William.

The Masons have issued the following in the secret society notices in the daily papers:

"Warning to Craft Masons.—An attempt is being made to organize a clandestine body to be called a Consistory of Scottish Rite Freemasonry. No legitimate body can be formed in Illinois without the indorsement and approval of the Deputy and the present existing bodies. Full information can be obtained from John C Smith, Deputy for Illinois; George R. McClellan, Commander-in-Chief Oriental Consistory, or Gil W. Barnard, Grand Secretary."

Considerable interest is manifested in secret society circles in Milwaukee over the reported secession of Hecker Council from the order of the American Legion of Honor. The council will unite with the Northern Legion of Honor, which was organized at St. Paul a few years ago by members of the American Legion of Honor who had become dissatisfied with the manner in which the affairs of the order were being conducted. The American Legion of Honor is an insurance organization, having a total membership of 67,000. It is said that other councils will shortly follow the example of Hecker Council, as the feeling of discontent is quite general.

At a meeting of the Central Labor Union at New York on Saturday it was resolved to organize a vigilance committee in each of the twenty four assembly districts of the city to carry on the boycott against pool beer. The arbitration committee moved that the credentials of the brewery engineers who did not go out with the journeymen brewers be burned and the engineers expelled. The motion was carried. Upon motion of the building trade's section, the secretary was instructed to ask President Cleveland to dismiss Collector Magone for permitting eighteen marble workers, who were imported under contract from Italy, to land at Castle Garden.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with stealthy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association. Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

PLANTING GRAPEVINES.

How shall we plant grapevines in order to secure the best results in the quickest time?

Let the soil be rich and friable, and if there should be six inches of well-rotted compost thoroughly incorporated with it, it [the compost] will do no harm. Even three inches will answer the purpose, and if you have not that quantity to spare or you plead a want of time, then the virgin soil is all that is necessary. If the vine is to be planted in the garden, let the ground be prepared by using the spade and the rake. Spade deep and break every clod; make the ground as mellow as possible. If the open field is selected and the plow is the implement of culture to be used, then plow deep and break the clods with a harrow or rake. Let the work always be done well.

The trellises of the vineyard should run north and south, so that the vines will have an equal exposure to the morning and afternoon sun. In garden planting, where space is valuable, a good rule as to distance is, rows six feet apart and the vines six feet in the row. For field culture I would be a little more liberal in the space occupied, planting the rows eight feet apart and the vines seven feet in the row. When the vines are procured (one or two years old) first dig the holes, not less than four feet in diameter and eight or nine inches deep, leaving a little conical hill in the center. The vines should be heeled in singly in some convenient spot near by, and the roots should not be exposed to the sun and wind for a minute. After the holes are all dug, take the vines out of the ground one at a time planting them according to the following directions: Place the cane upright on the conical hill in the hole, straighten out every root into its natural position, not bending or curving under any circumstances, nor letting one root cross another; then cover with fine earth to the depth of about four or five inches; then turn on a pail of water, and when this has soaked away fill the hole and the work is done.

Many grapevines are ruined by bad treatment at the time of planting. It is easy to ruin the most vigorous vine in a short time. Unnecessary exposure to wind and sun should be avoided. I never allow vines in my hands to suffer. I protect them with a covering of earth before planting and sometimes I immerse them in a tub of water. In this matter, as in everything else, we ought not to expect great and grand results from poor and indifferent work.—Prairie Farmer.

LARGE OR SMALL TREES, WHICH?

Small trees planted on the street, mostly without any protection, and the ground covered with thick sod, will not do well. Besides the multiplicity of danger to life and limb from contact with (often) roaming animals, mischievous boys and the like, it is also a struggle between the young sapling and the luxuriant grass as to which shall obtain the most moisture and fertility from the soil. By slow degrees the young tree, if it lives, will surely obtain the mastery, but in its immature stages it is considerably set back by these causes. A street tree, whether nursery grown or taken from the wood, should be of a goodly size when planted.

Now the advantage of a nursery-grown tree, if in its best condition, is that having been several times transplanted its roots are more fibrous, and nearer to the boll of the tree, than those on one taken from the woods, where it has never been removed, or its tap roots severed. If, then, a nursery-grown tree, of the requisite size, can be obtained, it is always to be preferred. This, however, presupposes that the young tree has not been allowed to stand almost from its seed-bed in the one position; if it has, it is but little better than its fellow of the forest.

Under ordinary circumstances, a well-grown nursery tree, of say four-inch boll, is fully equal to one of double that size taken from the woods. The reason for this is that in the former case the roots and tops being in an equable condition when removed, there is but little check to a continuous growth, while those from the woods, for reasons already given, have the roots so spread out or deep in the ground that the main feeders are cut, and have to be renewed before much new growth takes place, so that the smaller tree very shortly overtakes the larger by reason of its more balanced condition. Ordinarily, too, the nursery tree has its branches in a more favorable position to make an effective tree; this, however, depends of course entirely on the kind of selection from the woods.

Many very handsome trees came originally from the forest—bolls straight and clean, and branches at uniform distances, and tops evenly shaped all around. The best results from trees taken from the woods are obtained by judicious pruning of the tops at the time of planting. Only so much of the branches should be left as will make a uniform, neat head, not more than a quarter of its original limbs remaining. This, with a large boll of earth, in size proportionate to the tree, will generally insure the life, and ultimately the free growth of the forest tree.

For the yard or garden, except in extremely rare cases where immediate effect is desirable, we should certainly select nursery-grown trees, and smaller ones than have been recommended for street planting. Indeed, for fruit trees, we doubt very much the propriety of planting beyond a three-year old, and for quantity even a two-year is better. Of course, if this planting is from very near by, where the greatest care can be taken, and the roots carefully kept from exposure, even several-years old trees can thus be used. But when obtaining stock from a distance, select younger trees every time. They are cheaper, bear carriage much better without injury, and will, in ordinary cases, fruit about as early as the larger trees that take some time to recuperate from the injury received by transplanting. The principal points in tree planting are to obtain all the roots possible, the more of the fine ones the better, allowing no drying of them at all, and in planting fill in the soil carefully about the roots, firm the ground thoroughly and steady, so the wind cannot move the roots when set.—Prairie Farmer.

The Teacher

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, appreciated the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Stoneham, Mass.

"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crerar, Palmyra, Md.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Moluncus, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffitt, Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 79 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is; and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks
ON THE
Labor Troubles,
BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Which Cyclopedia?

It is generally admitted that a good Cyclopedia is a desirable possession for every home. As to which Cyclopedia is the best for popular use, the "Doctors disagree." Evidently the matter of choice should depend somewhat upon the use for which it is intended. A customer of ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA writes to the publisher as follows:

"I have been exhibiting the Manifold among my acquaintances, and expatiating on its excellence and wonderful cheapness. Among those to whom I have shown the volumes, I found but one young man who did not need the Manifold. He has a cyclopedia; a number of large volumes; he did not know how many, nor did he know the name of the editor or publisher; but they are very large, heavy volumes. Believing he did not frequently consult them, I asked if he ever used them.

"'Certainly,' said he, 'I use them every day.'

"'What can you possibly do with them?'

"'Why, I press my trousers with them.'

"'My dear sir,' said I, 'you do not need the Manifold. Mr. Alden publishes books for the purpose of improving the intellect, and not to give shape to the legs. Do you stick to your ponderous, unwieldly volumes; they are well adapted to the purpose for which you use a cyclopedia; but the dainty volumes of the Manifold—how delightful to handle, and how beautiful to behold—are made with a view to ease of reference and convenience of consultation, and cannot be successfully converted into a substitute for trousers's stretchers."—EDWARD EBERBACH, Washington.

The fifth volume of ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA, which has just been published, more than sustains the good reputation of the previous issues, being, especially, more full in its vocabulary, and the entire workmanship, both literary and mechanical, being of a higher grade. It is certainly not only a wonderfully cheap, but a thoroughly excellent Cyclopedia for almost any conceivable use except that of a "trousers's press." In Brief.

The family of a Georgian were awakened the other night by a great noise under the house, which shook violently. At first they were sure that an earthquake was in progress, but investigation with a lantern showed that a cow was under the house. How she got there was a mystery, as she could not stand upright. It was her horns and back that made the noise and shook the house. The householder had to get a pick and spade and dig a ditch, in which the cow walked out.

Judge Foster, of the Maine Supreme Court, who lives in Bethel, Me., was awakened by a large crash in his kitchen the other night. He hastily and scantily dressed and ran into the kitchen, to find the dishes and other things disarranged, and some broken. He looked around to ascertain the cause of the trouble, and saw the dog in one corner of the room trembling with fear. Judge Foster immediately seized him, administered a severe thrashing and then retired to bed again. The next day when the judge went down street every one he met asked him if he felt or heard the earthquake last night; and on comparing time he found it was precisely the time the dog was whacked for up-setting things.

Some white men were steaming up the Itimbiri river, one of the northern tributaries of the Congo, and made a very unpleasant discovery a while ago. They found that the banks of the river had just been ravaged by armed Negroes who had been sent by the Arabs from the north on a slave hunt. Heretofore it has been the Arabs from Zanzibar who have brought sorrow to the Congo tribes, but this time it is the Arabs from Khartoum, whom Gordon nearly drove out of business, but who have now resumed their raids. This invasion of the northern slave-stealers is an attack on the flank the Congo state authorities had not expected. The state is now confronted by unfriendly Arabs both in its eastern ter ritory and on its northern frontier.

There is a regular stampede of Georgia Negroes in the direction of Athens, Atlanta, and other cities where the free-school system prevails. Many farmers are being deserted by every hand, and one farmer in Oglethorpe county, who runs forty plows, has not a Negro to-day on his farm, the last one having left for Athens. Whole neighborhoods have been deserted by the blacks, and every shanty in the corporate limits of Athens swarms with half starved Negroes. There is nothing in Athens for them to do, there being more men than there is work or room for. The farmers say that they would not listen to propositions looking to contracts for another year, but intend all to move to towns where their children can be sent to school the year round without any money.

A miraculous surgical experiment has been performed at Buffalo by Dr. George E Fell, Professor of Physiology at the University of Niagara. Dr. Fell is an enthusiastic vivisectionist, and has made a number of experiments whereby he claims he has discovered a means of saving human life after the patient has taken poison. Several weeks ago a man named Patrick Burns, who had been on a debauch, took a large dose of morpia and was given up as dead. After Burns had been unconscious for five hours Dr. Fell was called in. It had occurred to him that if he had an artificial respiratory apparatus he would be able to bring back the patient to life. He had often applied artificial respiration to dogs and cats at college during his lectures to show the action of their hearts and lungs. Burns was a poor patient, and the physician had very little hope of being successful. There was no pulse, and only a slight flutter around the region of the heart, which showed that it had not ceased to beat. There were a number of physicians present, and the experiment was considered a chimerical one as far as success was concerned. An incision was made in the throat and a respiratory tube was placed in the trachea. The blood which oozed from the wound was a dark coffee color. The lungs of the patient were useless, and when air was blown into them they were so stiff that they could not contract. Artificial means was used, pressure on the chest to expel the air and cause the expirations. This was kept up for fifteen minutes before any change was noticed. The blood soon became more arterial in color as it came from the wound, and the face assumed a life-like expression. The muscles of the eyes twitched when pressed by the finger. After a time the eyes opened and the legs and arms began to move. Water was placed to the patient's lips and he drank greedily. For two hours the artificial breathing was kept up. The tube was removed and the wound was closed with antiseptic dressing. The patient, an hour after breathing was restored, had an attack of delirium tremens, the result of drinking. It took five men to hold him, and the wound commenced to bleed afresh. This was stopped, and when the poison passed from the system, after three days the respiration increased, and it was evident that the patient would re cover. In two weeks he was able to go out and attend to his business.—Demorest's Magazine.

The exhausted and drowsy feelings, common to spring time, indicate an impure and sluggish condition of the blood, which may be remedied by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the most powerful, and, at the same time, most economical blood purifier known.

"THAT'S WHAT MY WIFE SAYS."

"How are all the folks?" asked Brown of Jones "All well, except my wife," said Jones. "I'm worried about her. She tires out so easily; she complains of a backache about all the time, and she is so low spirited that she don't seem like herself at all." "My dear fellow," interrupted Brown, "I'll tell you exactly what she needs. My wife had the same symtoms a few months ago, but to day she is the healthiest woman in town. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cured her, and it will cure Mrs. Jones, too. There's nothing on earth like it for the complaints to which the weaker sex are liable. That's what my wife says, and she knows." Guarantee to give satisfaction in every case, or money returned, printed on the bottle wrapper.

CATARRH CURED.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a ont. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

WASHINGTON.

Friday was the one-hundreth day of the present session of the House. The House has passed 425 bills and the Senate 831. Altogether 209 bills have passed both Houses and gone to the President for his signature. Up to date 12,568 bills and resolutions have been introduced in the fiftieth Congress—the largest number on record.

Secretary Fairchild has given notice that on April 23 and daily thereafter until further notice he will receive proposals for the sale to the government of the United States bonds of the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871. The right is reserved to reject any and all proposals if it is thought to be for the interests of the government to do so.

Senator Spooner will deliver the oration at the exercises on the field of Gettysburg, June 30, at the unveiling of the monument to the Wisconsin soldiers who sacrificed their lives there.

Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood is in the field again as a candidate for the Presidency. She opened her campaign Tuesday night with a reception at her residence, to which she invited the advocates of her cause.

A new dynamite crusier gun-boat, the Yorktown, built for the United States by a Philadelphia company, will be launched Saturday, April 28, in the presence of Secretary Whitney. It carries four pneumatic guns for the hurling of dynamite projectiles, and is claimed to be the most formidable engine of war ever invented. The guns are loaded by steam and the shells, containing 600 pounds of explosive gelatine, can be fired twice a minute.

Senator Blackburn of Kentucky is making an effort to get passed by the Senate, before the spring races begin at the Washington race course, a bill passed by the House to prohibit pool selling and book making in the District.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations have decided by a party vote that the Fisheries Treaty ought not to be ratified.

The House of Representatives has passed a pension-appropriation bill covering the enormous sum of $80,280,000. There are, besides, "service" pension bills and others on the calendar.

CHICAGO.

Judges Tuley, Horton, and Jamison were kept quite busy Saturday disposing of applications for divorce. Judge Tuley descanted on the public love for scandal, and decreed that henceforth minors will be denied admittance to the divorce courts.

John A. Rice, the well-known proprietor of the Tremont House, died Saturday. He was one of the proprietors of the Sherman House before the great fire.

The bakers' union have ordered a strike for better pay, and 1,700 men are on the streets.

The National Tube Works of McKeesport, Pa., has completed its contract for forty miles of 8-inch pipe for the Standard Oil Company's new line from the Lima field to Chicago. The line, which is to be 208 miles long and will cost $7,000 per mile, is expected to be in operation early in the coming summer.

The new cable street-car line on the North Side does its work unsatisfactorily as yet. The West Side lines, owned by the same syndicate, talk of substituting electricity for the cable, being less expensive. The elevated-road projects for the West and South sides are taking shape. A charter has been granted the latter, and many impatient citizens are hoping their work will be hastened.

COUNTRY.

Ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling died early Tuesday morning in his room in the Hoffman House, New York. His funeral took place Friday, and his body was taken to Utica for interment.

Since the Ohio Legislature adjourned it has been discovered that, by a mistake in a bill changing the Aldermanic districts of Cincinnati, the Board of Aldermen of Cleveland was abolished and no provision made for electing a new board, thus leaving the city without a municipal government.

A government officer has reported that an expenditure of over three hundred thousand dollars would be necessary to protect Sioux City, Iowa, from the rapid encroachments of the Missouri river.

Fire in a rag-sorting factory at New York Thursday morning penned in forty-five women and six men, many of whom were forced to jump from the windows, but, falling in the fire-nets, escaped without serious injury. One young woman perished in the flames.

A jury at St. Louis Thursday granted David S. Fotheringham $20,000 damages against the Adams Express Company. Fotheringham, express messenger at the time, had been arrested for complicity in a robbery on the San Francisco road, in which the desperadoes secured $53,000.

Five intoxicated Indians were drowned Tuesday at Trempealeau, Wis., while attempting to drag their canoes across a raft of logs.

A woman, arrested for poisoning her neighbor's chickens, was discharged Wednesday at Milwaukee by Judge Mallory, who decided that the hen is not a domestic animal, and that the law provides no penalty for the alleged offense.

Isaac Kirkpatrick and his wife, both colored, living near Gallatin, Tenn., were taken from their house Wednesday night by a mob. The woman was first hanged in her nightdress, and the man was then shot to death. The woman was suspected of arson, but there was no charge against her husband.

An entire family named Lathrop, father, mother, and three children, occupants of a hovel near Wolf river, at Embarrass, Wis., were swept away by the floods Thursday night and drowned.

Just before 10 o'clock Wednesday night a fire started in the Bethel Home, a five-story building in St. Louis, and soon spread to all parts of the building. The home was used as a Bethel church and a cheap lodging and boarding house, and is said to have contained from forty to seventy people. In the ruins three bodies were found Friday morning, making four dead victims. Four others are in the hospital, badly injured.

About two hundred girls and women employed as machine hands in a clothing manufactory in Minneapolis, Minnesota, struck for the old rate of pay for piece-work, which was cut about 20 per cent net on Jan. 1. At the present rates they say they cannot make living wages.

Monday night at St. Joseph, Mo., two non union engineers were beaten by strikers, and injured in a serious manner. It is feared that one of the victims cannot recover.

An engineer employed in place of a striker at Nebraska City was attacked late at night by three unknown men with clubs, fracturing his skull in several places and breaking his jaw bones. His injuries will prove fatal.

Hotel men at Springfield, Ohio, were fined and imprisoned for passing off oleomargerine as pure butter.

An explosion on a tug at New York caused the death of the engineer and cook, many other persons being seriously injured.

Mrs. Lottie A. James and her newborn babe died from the results of Christian Science malpractice at Boston, Mass.

At midnight last Tuesday night the depot building of the Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan railway at Urbana, Ind., was blown up by dynamite. The shock of the explosion was terrific, and portions of the building were scattered for a long distance. It is thought that some of the best-known people in the place were connected with the outrage, as the old depot was not adequate to the needs of the place.

FOREIGN.

The illness of the German Emperor was alarming all the week, and at any hour a bulletin announcing his death was expected. He revived on Sunday, and favorable symptoms gave his physicians hope that he would rally and be able again to partially resume business.

The Russian government, taking the view that Emperor Frederick's recovery is hopeless, has enjoined the press of the empire to abstain, under pain of severe punishment, from publishing a word in disparagement of the German Crown Prince.

The French General Boulanger receivd an undeniable ovation on his way to the Chamber of Deputies in Paris Thursday. In the Rue Rivoli ladies threw flowers into the General's carriage. There were isolated cries of "Down with the Dictator!" On his return from the Chamber of Deputies General Boulanger was the subject of a similar demonstration. In the Chamber a group of deputies and reporters hissed and cheered for the republic.

While on a train near Wiesbaden, Germany, Thursday evening, Mr. Pendleton, the American Minister was stricken with apoplexy. He is said to be paralyzed in one side, but is in no immediate danger.

Owing to the proclamation of General Marin, in Cuba, declaring certain provinces in a state of siege, the greatest excitement prevails. It is said that the General wants it to appear that a revolt is impending, but the Liberals, whose newspapers have been suppressed, enter a denial. Marin states that his action is due to the increase of brigandage, arson, kidnapping and other crimes.

Seven counties in Ontaria province, Canada, gave large majorities Thursday for the repeal of the Scott temperance law.

In the same dispatch we are told of the improved condition of the German Emperor Frederick, the absence of fever, that he begins to eat beef again, and that he has abandoned beer, which disagrees with him. This is more than a coincidence. There are many men of whom it could be said that health improves, and they can begin to eat beef, and their families also, so soon as they quit beer. Let the Emperor's case be for an example to the thousands of his German countrymen in America.

The selection of Melville W. Fuller, a distinguished and experienced Chicago lawyer, to be the successor of Chief Justice Waite was made on Monday. The news was heard in Chicago with general congratulation of both Democrats and Republicans. Mr. Fuller has been identified with the growth and interests of Chicago since 1856. He has been more or less closely identified with party interests, but is regarded as a Democrat of the old school, who will be as true to the national interests as during the war. As we write little has been said of Mr. Fuller except in respect to his politics. He is regarded as an able speaker and has a decided taste for literature. Like most Chicago Democrats, he will probably be on the wrong side of any case that may involve the prohibition issue, but we do not wish to judge him before the time. If confirmed he will not take his seat till October, and the election occurring soon after may help settle some points of this great question.

The flag issue is provoking a breeze of war in New York, and Mayor Hewitt finds himself the leader of a host. The board of aldermen passed over the Mayor's veto, 20 to 3, the resolution taking out of his control the raising of flags on the city buildings; and in the legislature, when the son of Dr. Crosby introduced an act making it an unlawful act to display any foreign flag on any public building, the politicians of that body said no 104 to 4. But these gentlemen, who are not only spoiling the foreigners who come to us, but subverting the nation also, in their anxiety to get votes, are not to have it all their own way. A mass meeting has been called at Cooper Union Friday evening to support Mayor Hewitt, and to protest against the "impudent bigotry that would fasten upon our nation sectarian holidays, invade our schools, and denationalize this asylum for the oppressed of all nations." Seventeen thousand signatures are on the call. The Catholic press denounces the Mayor and fires the Irish heart, but their work is useful in arousing the dormant American spirit and love for the Stars and Stripes.

PROF. H. WOODSMALL.

Among the Republicans, Judge Gresham, of the United States District Court in this city, is daily growing in favor as a Presidential candidate. His wide experience in public life, and freedom from scandal are much in his favor. He will be also strong with every one in "distress," in "debt," or "discontented," as was David, for reasons given by himself in the Indianapolis Journal: "My experience with criminals when I was on a district bench taught me that there was no man devoid of manhood. Place anybody, however depraved, on his manhood, and you will observe his eye brighten up. I have taken men who have been convicted of serious offenses, and, after sentencing them to the penitentiary, have said: 'Now, I intend to place you on your manhood, for I believe you have manhood in you. I will give you a mittimus, and the marshal will provide you with money to go home and bid your family good-bye. After you have stayed there a day or two I want you to report at the door of the penitentiary named in the papers you will receive, and serve out your sentence like a man. And when you are through I want you to return to me, and I want to see what can be done to restore you to the confidence of your fellow men in society.' I never was disappointed in a man I thus trusted, and those convicts whom I have helped on their return from prison have always been faithful to the trusts imposed upon them."

For two months and more the Prohibition press has been agitated by an effort to throw out the woman suffrage plank from their platform. As we are informed, the opposition began among the Wisconsin Good Templars, who were worsted in their efforts to secure a successor to J. B. Finch and to change the arrangement of delegations to the National Convention. T. C. Richmond, who failed of the chairmanship, is leading the fight against female suffrage, and using lodge methods. He is sending circulars abroad attacking woman suffrage, and hopes especially in the South to unsettle the mind, fire prejudice and create division in his party, instead of giving such reasons as should convince the uninformed. The Union Signal devotes large space to the discussion and last week a supplement is filled with opinions from party leaders, warmly defending the present position of the party. The argument for the change is the prejudice at the South against woman's vote, the objection of Presbyterians, and the loss of party vote because of the plank. Like reasons could be urged against every other Prohibition plank. The Presbyterians of the Presbyterians, the Covenanters and United Presbyterians, are generally for the ballot for women. The South needs instruction, not strife. And the fact that the W. C. T. U. has made the Prohibition party possible makes the attempt seem like the act of an ungrateful wretch who should kick his mother out doors. The plank has been in every platform from the first, and the excuse that votes will be lost shows that the movement is an attempt to shift the party from its rock foundation of principle, to the low and quaking ground of expediency. Such an attempt might be expected to issue from a secret lodge which is the training school in such philosophy.

REV. H. WOODSMALL.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

'Know ye not that a prince and a great man is fallen this day in Israel.—2 Sam. 3: 38. Measured as the world measures greatness, our departed brother had no aspirations for, and received few, of its honors. Measured by the example of Him who "took upon him the form of a servant and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross," he was truly great; for few men have in our times exhibited so much of the mind and spirit of Christ. His great work was to labor for the poor. Like his Divine Master, he "made himself of no reputation."

He came South to complete his theological education in order that he might be among and have greater opportunities to teach the colored people. He spared no effort for the accomplishment of this work. He encountered prejudice, ingratitude and obloquy; and met them without complaint and in most perfect patience. He surrendered positions, to which he was entitled and for which he was eminently fitted, to men of inferior qualifications, for the sake of peace and to avoid the giving of offence. He espoused unpopular reforms and was willing "to stand in the gap and make up the hedge" for the sake of the people of God. As a teacher he was thorough, strict in discipline, yet ever kind and forgiving to those who were penitent. He was not a natural orator, but was always plain, logical and convincing. His marked characteristics were his eminent conscientiousness, humility, intense industry and practical benevolence. Though suffering for years he worked up to the last minute and died at his post.

I first met Bro. Woodsmall at Selma, Alabama, January 6th, 1881. I remember how kindly he received me, introduced me to his school, invited me to address them, and enforced what I said from the testimony of personal experience. I remember, too, how kindly he and his excellent wife received me to their house, and for weeks gave me the hospitalities of their pleasant home. Should this Christian sister and her children read these words, I wish to express to them my warmest sympathy in their deep affliction.

Because our Divine Lord had thus humbled himself, it is written that "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow of things in heaven and things in the earth, and things under the earth, and every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." So, too, our brother; just as he partook of the humiliation and suffering of Christ, he is now exalted in honor and will partake of the glorious triumph of his Lord.

CHRISTIAN TOLERATION AND POSITIVE CONVICTION.

BY A. B. CURTIS.

"At all times," says Carlyle, "a man who will do faithfully, needs to believe firmly." Just as soon as a man's belief waxes uncertain, his practice becomes unsound. Man's deeds are first man's convictions. Error prevails where faith is weak. Strife prevails where faith is narrow.

As I think upon this question of Christian toleration, straightway two important texts take their places over against each other, and crave my careful attention. One pleads for positive conviction: "It is good to be zealously affected always is a good thing." The other text pleads just as forcibly for sympathy with men whose opinions differ from our own. "Refrain from these men, and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught."

These two texts do not contradict each other. That positive conviction which is purest and noblest is most tolerant, most sympathetic. It has the most heart-felt sympathy for those who are unable to accept its truth. That toleration and Christian sympathy, on the other hand, are most wholesome and effective which are positive and firm in the conviction that toleration is not sanction. Toleration is a negative virtue. It does not prevent argument; it prevents quarrels. Toleration itself is neither good nor bad, it is simply the meeting place of opposing factions. Positive conviction is decidedly good or decidedly bad with no intermediate ground. Toleration often leads to inactivity and lack of interest in the great questions of the day. It must constantly guard against the temptation to lethargy. Its motto is too often, "Let alone;" when the moral aspect of the question is by no means doubtful. Positive conviction easily leads to fanaticism. The less a man knows the more certain he is, usually, that he alone is right. Fanaticism leads to irrational acts that bring a reproach upon a good cause. Positive conviction must guard against the temptation of laying undue stress upon questions of minor importance. It often makes mountains out of mole hills. It builds too large an edifice upon one small pillar of principle, and to the looker-on the whole affair seems like a castle in the air. Toleration never does anything. It simply puts up with what it has. Its virtue consists in making the best of what cannot be helped. Positive conviction is always doing, and that, too, with a full soul. But its convictions are after founded upon intolerance.

Positive conviction resting upon Christian toleration seems to be the only correct and abiding principle of action. Is such a thing possible? Is it possible for a church that is out-and-out anti-secret to enjoy association with churches that are confessedly pro-secret? May not tolerant churches justly fear that such a positive-conviction church shall cast a reproach upon their name?

The life and spirit of Congregationalism as a whole must be maintained. Congregationalism is more than any individual church, and sometimes it must maintain its life as a whole at the expense of the individual church. Positive conviction prevails over toleration. But there is another side. Congregationalism without individual churches is nothing. The life of each individual church goes to make its life. Congregationalism cares for itself only in so far as it spreads its protecting wing over each individual church that seeks its care. Toleration prevails over positive conviction by frankly admitting that there are more issues than one in our day over which men can justly and honorably be enthusiastic and positive. Positive conviction is frankness and firmness. Toleration is unselfishness. Frankness and unselfishness easily blend. These are the elements of Congregationalism. No church having them is denied admittance. No church without them ought to claim the name of "church."

But the question arises, How positive can one's convictions be and he still be tolerant? The reply would seem to be, Just as positive as one can make them by argument from Bible, fact or experience. Positive convictions can denounce a certain thing as sin, but at the same time refrain from saying or implying that all who do that thing are sinners. A church may found its very fundamental doctrines upon principles that would seem to imply that all other churches were aside from the faith, without once accusing other churches of being heretical. Differences of belief are necessary to all existence of the intellectual and religious life. Narrow-mindedness or intolerance is due not to positive conviction, but to lack of knowledge. Ignorance is sometimes a vice, but it is not always so. Better to have thought, though wrongly, than never to have thought. Positive conviction is sometimes a fault, but it is a fault that leans to virtue's side. Conviction may be too positive but it cannot be too earnest. Toleration may be too careless, but it cannot be too unselfish.

I will close with a quotation from the Greek Bible (Prov. 10: 10), a passage which is not in our version though many learned commentators think it ought to be,—"He that reproves with boldness is a peace-maker." Is not this good Congregationalism? It is frankness and unselfishness combined.

New Haven, Conn.

ANCIENT GUILDS AND MODERN TRADE UNIONS.

The report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of New York for the years 1885 and 1886 are replete with information on the labor question, relating to the ancient guilds as well as to the modern trade unions. As some of it may prove of interest to the readers of the Cynosure it is briefly noted below.

The old guilds have been likened to the modern trade unions, but they were also for other purposes. They not only united to regulate trade and settle wages, but they banded together in defense of the common interest against princes, nobles and oppressors. The following indicates the manner of their descent to modern times and their present state.

The guilds, otherwise called trade companies of Great Britain, once had, like the continental guilds, important uses, but with the changes in business and the altered conditions of society and the factory system, they fell away from their first estate as trade associations and have become largely associations with immense property, the income of which is expended in ways never dreamed of by the original founders and donors. Those of London had become little more than charitable societies with sinecure office-holders, the only duties being the distribution of surplus funds, after extravagant personal and official allowances had been disbursed, and were a scandal when parliamentary inquiries were instigated. Changes resulted and the charitable purposes were retained, but a large portion of the funds were directed to public education of the most practical kind. It was a reversion to the original plan of the guilds, with an adaptation to modern conditions. It is said that eight hours constituted a day's work in the fifteenth century.

The guilds of Germany are associations of master tradesmen. They are suryivals of earlier ages and, after having passed through a long season of inactivity and indifference, have been revived and occupy a position of growing importance. They were reincorporated in 1869, but have no longer the right to exclude non-members from carrying on trade, as formerly. There are fifty-nine, new and old, in Berlin, including every trade, the most numerous of which is that of the shoemakers, that numbers 1,600 members, and dates back six hundred years.

The modern trade unions copied several regulations from the ancient guilds: as, provisions against systematic overtime, instructing outsiders or working with them, blacklisting and limiting apprentices. In England they are thoroughly organized, and the different callings unite in holding councils to which employers and others have frequently sent emissaries as delegates to mislead and defeat them. In this country socialists endeavor to disrupt trade unions and establish organizations of their own upon the ruins. In Germany trade unionism was obstructed in the same manner. The Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners profess not to be a secret organization, and, therefore, may be taken as an instance of a trade union as described above. The Knights of Labor, on the other hand, are pronounced to be a secret society. In their platform of principles they say that they are not a mere labor union, benefit society or political party; that they have a secret work, consisting of passwords, signs and a grip, for the protection of the meetings against outsiders and suspended and expelled members; sometimes an open trade union changes in a body to this secret organization, as the Musical Mutual Protective Union to the Carl Salm Club, an assembly.

The United American Mechanics and others, Mr. Peck, the commissioner, adds, were based upon narrow, protestent, nativistic principles, and accomplished little; but the secrecy and ceremoniousness of the Knights of Labor, as well as their generous treatment of foreign laborers and organized trade bodies, may have enhanced the growth of the order as much as the general convictions of American citizens, that political results can be obtained solely by movements in large masses. The officials of the order speak of 2,500,000 members, but of course it is most likely that large numbers are derelict.

The members of the Knights of Labor are subjected to a secret, absolute power that demands obedience even to self-injury. Moreover, the strike committees are often composed of small tradesmen, and similar persons, who are reckless ignoramuses, and order strikes for insufficient reasons, and then defeat them by incompetency, pretending to do a great deal of secret work as a cover to doing nothing. As instances: strikes were begun because the employer worked and because he did not belong to the Bosses' Association, which required an initiation fee of $500. One strike was precipitated because a boy spinner was promoted when there was an unemployed journeyman, which is a common cause of strikes among all labor bodies. Employers were sometimes subjected to fines of considerable amounts, under penalty of a boycott. One with his son were fined ten dollars each for ordering off a walking delegate. An order from a walking delegate to change shop to union was accompanied with a fine of $200 without cause. Theiss was fined ten or twelve hundred dollars. Employers are accused of organizing unions and strikes to injure rivals. (Freemasonry makes a similar use of them.) Different organizations sometimes wage war upon one another, as the Cigar-makers' International Union, the Knights of Labor, and the Progressive Union, a socialistic body, and strikes, boycotts and the most perplexing complications ensue. The Knights of Labor sometimes pose as an order of charity, and intermeddle when employes are contented, under pretense that one of the fundamental principles of the organization requires the protection of females, but with the prerequisite of initiation into Joan d'Arc assemblies; like Freemasonry, which courts popularity by pretended zeal for widows and orphans—laudable, but refuted by fact—to solicit money from outsiders for females is not chivalry, but beggary to spare personal sacrifice. Nor is it chivalry to make females instrumental in extortion from enemies, but battling behind women and bidding for popular sympathy, i. e., public opinion, which may be as false as when it supported popery in persecuting Galileo for asserting that the earth moved.

The Commissioner adds that positions of trust and responsibility in mechanical departments of establishments, such as foremen and superintendents, are in the hands of foreigners, which will confirm the now very generally expressed opinion that most of the labor troubles of the last few years have been precipitated, not by whole trades, but by sections of them, and that these sections are largely controlled by foreigners, or natives who had by association imbibed foreign ideas on the labor question.

It appears from the above that the modern trade union has not descended from, but has copied certain features of the ancient guilds which still exist. Freemasonry was formed by veiling pagan religion in the symbolism of stone masonry in 1777; and the Knights of Labor by engrafting it upon a labor union, converting it into an auxiliary secret society.

The restriction of apprentices is recommended by Mills and Malthus and adopted by labor unions; but after trades are full there must remain a surplus of laborers, so that a curtailment of population may be with equal reason ultimately advanced as a remedy, and as this is among the many bad uses to which Freemasonry, by its control of the law, may be applied, as seen in the Whitney, Carpenter, Michigan, and other cases that have appeared from time to time in the columns of the Cynosure. This order may be entitled to the extravagant praise which it is wont to bestow upon itself as a beneficent institution. More of this feature of Freemasonry, of its real character, of its antagonism to Christianity and government, of its false claims to charity, chivalry, and other virtues, and of its connection with the labor question, may be learned by a reference to "My Experiences with Secret Societies by a Traveler," advertised in the Cynosure. It is a new book containing new light on the subject of secrecy from extended personal experience in which corruption and murder are continually encountered. *

A GOOD FIGHT.

The man who stands up for the truth of God in opposition to the atheism, agnosticism, infidelity and anarchy of the present day; who stands up for an open Bible for all the people, in opposition to the priestcraft and superstition which prevails; who stands for the name and Word of Christ alone in opposition to the sectarianism and division which dishonors his cause and distracts his people; who stands for a vital and personal regeneration, religion, and righteousness, instead of the dead formality and worldliness which wraps the pall of death over so many who have named the name of Christ, and who have a form of godliness but deny the power thereof, will need to strengthen his heart in God, and put on the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left.

His enemies will be many, and his friends will be few; and while his enemies will be subtle and fierce, his friends are liable to be lukewarm and indifferent. His enemies know what he is doing; his friends will perhaps find it out in season to erect a monument to him when he has been dead half a century. Of old, God's professing people stoned the live prophets and honored the dead ones, and history often repeats itself.

It is no light thing for a man to set the battle in array against such a host of foes, but the battle is the Lord's, and those that fight for him are on the winning side. Many a man has suffered fines, imprisonment and death itself for the truth of Christ. Many a man has entered the conflict well aware that there were men who thought it no sin to shed his blood.

The power that "made war with the saints and prevailed against them till the Ancient of Days came," has not yet finished its work; nor has the scarlet-robed woman, who was drunken with the blood of saints, yet lost her blood-thirstiness nor met her doom. Those who fight in this warfare must expect to encounter opposition, danger, and perhaps death itself. Who then will join in such a warfare? Who will, by hand and voice and purse, by sympathy, by encouragement, and by prayer, strengthen the hearts of those who are in the battle's van? And who will leave such men to fight the battle alone in the midst of discouragements, embarrassments, privations and dangers?—The Christian.

NO PLACE FOR A CHRISTIAN.

Rev. Dr. William Johnston of College Springs, Iowa, writes a kind word of remonstrance to the members of Grand Army lodges in the Christian Instructor: "I wish to say for the information of any member of the G. A. R. who may read this, that I got my clearest ideas of the order from one who had been there, and knew what he was talking about. I lodged with him a week, and had good opportunities to know the man. He was an elder in the United Presbyterian church, and a brother to one of our honored and useful ministers. He is recognized as a man of God by those who know him, and his word will be considered as good as his bond. He was a captian in the army, and did not turn back in the day of battle. He went into the G. A. R. but soon found it was a mistake. I asked him if it was oath-bound, and he said it could hardly be called oath-bound, yet the promise had all the force of an oath. But he said his great objection was, it was no place for him, it was no place for a Christian. Now to me there is a great deal in this expression, coming from one whom I believe to be a man of God—"It is no place for me, it is no place for a Christian." I don't entertain the thought for a moment that there are no Christians there, but I do believe there are many Christians where they ought not to be. For many members of the G. A. R. I have a high personal regard, and am sorry that they have felt it necessary to enter into an organization, that throws their influence in favor of the whole lodge system. Though it were one whom I loved as my own soul, yet my love for him would not withold me from testifying against any thing in his course I felt to be wrong.

"And now to some of our Grand Army friends allow me a parting word. I have not a particle of hesitation in saying that those ministers in the United Presbyterian church who are now most decided in their opposition to all secret orders were the men most decided in their loyalty to the country twenty-five years and more ago; they were the best friends the soldiers had on God's green earth; they prayed for them as the mother prayed for her darling boy who had gone down into the valley of fire; they plead their cause with all the eloquence that patriotism and religion could inspire; in many cases they gave them 'the Book' as they started for camp, and charged them to keep it as a 'Vade Mecum' wherever the call of duty led them; they cared for their helpless ones as if they had been bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh; they welcomed them with words of benediction when they returned to their homes, and used their influence to advance them to positions of honor: and in view of all the past it does seem to me there is sometimes a want of manliness and magnanimity in treatment they receive, even from old soldiers, over their adherence to a principle which is a part of their moral being."

FROM MUNICH TO ROME.

Our artist correspondent has some experiences of Italian travel—And behaves like a good American in a Bavarian ducal palace.

MUNICH, Bavaria.

Last year I wrote you of the carnival season, and again for six weeks I heard nothing but "ball," "ball," until I was tired of it. Half the school gave their whole time to it for five weeks. I was invited to two Christmas trees at holidays, in German families, where they gave useful things to poor little children and to the guests candy and nuts. I think there were 40,000 trees in the city. Even some Jews had them. We have on exhibition here a panorama of Jerusalem similar to the one you saw in Chicago, painted by Pigelheim. He paints the best ones.

Of course you have heard of the death of the Emperor. There is not half the excitement about it that there was when King Otto died. The Munich people get much more excited if the price of beer is raised a quarter of a cent!

MAR. 19.—We left Munich at 11 o'clock A. M., on Monday, May 11th, for Verona. Had very bad weather in the mountains and came Tuesday evening to Verona, where we staid till Thursday noon. It is a very picturesque city, but mostly new except the amphitheatre and some old gates. We went to the amphitheatre and into the cells where the wild beasts and the prisoners were once kept, and all round the whole length of the arena under the seats where the 20,000 people used to sit. We reached Venice Thursday afternoon and have been busy seeing the sights.

VIA PALESTRO, ROME, MARCH 24.—After a very tiresome journey from Venice I arrived at Rome last Tuesday evening. The trains between here and Venice connect very badly and run very slowly, at least according to American ideas of railroad speed. The only train which seemed a good one for me to take from Venice left the station there at 5 A. M. I had to get up at 3:30, so as to leave the house at 4 in the gondola which was waiting for me at the door.

It was of course still quite dark and the canals were narrow and lighted only at long distances. The gondolier "whooped" before we turned each corner in anything but a musical manner. We saw twice a person passing over one of the arched bridges under which we passed. It was very cold and damp, but the worst was, the tide was coming in so fast that the gondolier was not able to make the distance in the time he expected and I missed the train, after which I had to sit in the dirty Cafi until 7 and take a slow train to Bologna where I wished to see the galleries and churches. In Venice it had rained every day except one half-day of the four days I was there. Perhaps that is one reason I was not as much pleased with the city as I had expected.

St. Mark's is quite different from anything I ever saw, but it is no use trying to describe it. It is of the most beautiful colored marbles imaginable and the interior is filled with mosaics, a great part of which are gold. Of course it makes it almost dazzling. There is little stained glass, and in the windows none. It was probably necessary to have white glass as the windows are small and few, and with colored windows little light could have entered. The whole immense structure stands on piles and the mosaic pavement is warped so that it looks like waves. We heard one service there. The ragged, miserable-looking people who are always in and about the church and square make an exceedingly unpleasant contrast to the grandeur of the buildings.

Next to St. Mark's is the palace of the Doges, also an immense building, which figures largely in Venetian history. We first ascended the "Giant's stairway" and then a second stair, up which no one was formerly allowed to go except those whose names were written in the book of the nobility. We saw the opening through which secret information used to be conveyed, which is called the "Lion's mouth;" it may be because the person putting his head into it was in as much danger as if he had literally placed it in the mouth of a savage beast.

The different council chambers are filled with wood carving and paintings by several great masters—several by Leonardo di Vinci, Giotto, Tintaulto and Titian. It is very hard work to look at the pictures, as they are all either on the ceiling or very high on the walls. In nearly every picture is a "Doge," kneeling usually, in the most magnificent attire. I doubt if Solomon was grander in all his glory than some of these are represented, but I hope he was not quite so conscious of his fine appearance as they appear to have been. Some of them kneel there as if they were doing the Lord a great favor, and I do not doubt they thought they were.

The largest picture in the world is in the library of this palace. It is a most confusing mass of figures that seem unable to extricate themselves from one another, and it is called "Paradise." Some of the heads are beautiful, but as a whole it makes one dizzy. In the Venetian academy are many very old and some great pictures, also by the same masters I found in the palace. Titian's masterpiece, "The Assumption," is there, and many other like subjects. One room has a frieze around its whole length of 148 Doges.

Of sculpture there is little of consequence. The monument of Titian is in one of the churches, and exactly opposite the monument of Canova, said to have been designed by him as a memorial to Titian, but which was afterwards executed by his pupils and used as his (Canova's) own monument. It is a wonderfully beautiful and original conception and perfectly carried out.

I reached Bologna about 3 P. M., after the gallery was closed. The porter understood nothing except Italian and a little French, but I managed to make him understand that I came from America and wanted to see Raphael's picture of "St. Cecilia" with the harp, and he at last admitted me. "St. Cecilia" is very fairly reproduced in the photographs and the color is still quite fresh. I did not admire it as much as a picture of John the Baptist, by Guido Rani, in the same gallery. The porter told me that he was himself an artist, and showed me his studio in which he had several good water colors and a copy of St. Cecilia which he valued at a thousand francs. But what he particularly wished me to notice was an original painting of "Potiphar's wife," that he showed me without the slightest embarrassment. There are two leaning towers in Bologna which stand quite near each other and look quite insecure. I believe they were built so. Most of the large buildings have very broad piazzas, reaching entirely over the sidewalk and making it possible to go over a great part of the city under cover from sun or rain.

I did not try the Bologna sausages, having tasted enough variety in that line in Munich. But something was for sale in several little shops which I took to be baked apples and ventured to try eating, when I soon discovered that, instead of being baked, the apples were boiled or fried in olive oil. The flavor they had was indescribable.

I took the train again that evening at six, and after staying over night at Pistoia reached Pisa about 9 A.M. Between Bologna and Pistoia there had been an accident two weeks before, and we were obliged to walk and ride by omnibus quite a distance in the evening. It will probably be a month before that place will be repaired. The Italians never hurry about anything. From Pistoia to Pisa the scenery was mountainous and very picturesque. The mountains were covered with snow, but the level land appeared to be drenched and often was quite covered with standing water through which the grass was growing, of that pale blue-green color so often seen in French landscapes. Occasionally an almond tree was in bloom, and we passed several banks yellow with wild jonquils. They say they have never had so late a spring in Italy or so much rain. The Tiber has overflowed several times, and the Pantheon stands so deep in water that there is no possibility of visiting it unless it were in boats.

At Pisa I saw the "Leaning Tower" of which we have read so much. It looks quite new and modern, when I had expected to see almost a ruin. The cathedral is immense and has the first stained glass windows I have yet seen in Italy. In the "Baptistry," an octagonal building with vaulted roof, were also fine stained windows and some mosaics. An old beggar sung inside the door and every note seemed to be repeated in harmonious chords from the roof. Old beggar expected liberal pay for his services. Every one expects pay here if they so much as open a door for one. I have seen little children not two years old already following their family occupation of begging. There is a burial ground at Pisa in which all the earth was brought from Jerusalem. Whether the dead are any more comfortable there I cannot say, but the soil seems very fertile.

A few days before I was coming to Italy my teacher, Mr. Herterich, sent word to me that he had had an application from the court-marshal (if that is not the English of it, I don't know what word to use) of Duke Karl Theodore for a teacher of drawing and English to the two little princesses, Elisebeth and Sophie. Mr. H. had already recommended me, and I was telegraphed to come to Tegernsee, where the Duke's castle is, at once. So the Saturday before I left Munich I took the train there; was met by one of the court ladies, Countess Geldern; and, after being instructed that I must always say, "Your Royal Highness," must ask no questions and make numerous bows, the Countess conducted me through what seemed to me endless marble halls to the door of the Chamberlain, who, in his turn, took us to the Duchess. I expected to see a very stately person in velvet and jewels, of course. Instead, a very pleasant-looking young lady, dressed in a very simple brown cloth dress and with no ornaments whatever, came into the room, said, "Adieu," with a little motion of her hand to the Countess, who was obliged instantly to disappear, and then began to talk in very good English to me. I believe I did manage to say, "Your Royal Highness,"once, and I think I bowed once; but I am perfectly sure I did neither a second time. It was a shocking breach of etiquette in the German ideas, but I think the first attempt must have lamed my tongue as it would that of almost any of our republican Americans.

Well, the Duchess had looked at my drawings and had arranged a "still life" which she asked me to draw for her. She gave me a sheet of glazed paper and an uncommonly bad pencil, seated herself at my elbow and said I was to begin. So I begun drawing and she asked me all manner of questions in the meanwhile, which certainly did not help the sketching. The two little princesses came in later with a few snowdrops they had found on the mountain side, and I wished some of our American women could have seen how they were dressed. Perfectly plain gray felt hats and jackets, round plaid skirts, and such thick shoes as we never see; no ruffles or ribbons, feathers or gold chains; and, notwithstanding they are learning their languages and have already four governesses to torment them, they look as healthy as the peasants' children. They are not little children, either, but are about twelve and fourteen years old.

I had no idea the place would be offered me, but it was, and in such a way that I could hardly refuse to take it for the summer. I thought it was only a fancy of "Her Royal Highness" and she would recall it, but I have since heard from the Countess Geldern, who says "Her Royal Highness" is depending on my coming May 1st.

By the way, the Countess telephoned the train to wait for me, and sent me to the depot in the Duke's carriage; whereupon, every one along the road supposed I was "somebody," and bowed in the most reverential manner possible to the American girl in the Grand Duke's carriage! R.

THE POLITICAL CONFERENCE.

In response to the call from Mr. F. W. Capwell, chairman of the National American committee, for a conference in regard to political action by voters of whatever party, a meeting was convened in Carpenter Hall, N. C. A. building, Saturday morning. Pres. L. N. Stratton was electad to the chair and W. I. Phillips, secretary. Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist, offered prayer, the call was read and a statement made of the conference held last fall during the meeting of the Prohibition Convention of Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, 1887, and copies of the appeal prepared for that Convention were distributed. This was introductory to the presentation of a paper by W. I. Phillips,which recommended the plan of an anti-lodge league, to secure pledges from those who will not vote for secret society members, and generally influence the action of all parties against the lodge.

Rev. B. T. Roberts moved that this conference recommend to the Board of Directors to organize, on the plan outlined, a department of the N. C. A. work under its constitution, with the name, the American Anti-secrecy League. The suggestion was discussed freely before adoption. A new organization was objected to,and some thought the N. C. A. should appoint a superintendent of a department to make our influence felt against the lodge in the conventions of every political party. A committee was also proposed to prepare and present an appeal against the nomination of lodge members at the Prohibition Convention at Indianapolis, May 30th. Copies of an appeal prepared for the Prohibition Conference, Dec. 1, 1887, were in the hands of most present, and Rev. B. T. Roberts spoke in approval of the document, moving that it be adopted as an expression of the present meeting. But it seemed advisable to make a general memorial to be sent to all political conventions, and it was voted that B. T. Roberts, J. Blanchard and E. R. Worrell be a committee with power to prepare such a memorial. It was also voted to request the N. C. A. to send a representative to the Prohibition, Democratic and Republican National conventions to present the memorial. To the State conventions it was thought unnecessary to send delegations as generally some one could be found to present the protest. Two of the brethren present, Rev. Christie and W. I. Phillips, are delegates to the Prohibition convention at Springfield, Ill. It was also recommended that if a superintendent for such a department of N. C. A. work against the lodge in politics be appointed, that he make Washington City his headquarters.

Space being given for short speeches Rev. J. A. Mackelvey, Prohibition organizer and lecturer, was called upon. He said he had been raised a Covenanter, but left that church because he wanted to vote against the saloon. He was in perfect sympathy with the work represented by the conference and believed that voting on the lodge would be a question soon to come to the front. His work for the Prohibition cause had been somewhat scattering and to little pecuniary advantage, and he had not fully understood why it should be so. But a proposition now in his pocket explained some things. It offered him a permanent engagement in Minnesota until after the fall election if he would join the Good Templars and Sons of Temperance. It is always and in every respect thus with the lodge. Neither ability nor principle, but lodge membership that secures its favor. Secret society students in the Covenanter (Geneva) College, were always a torment, conspiring and plotting. The lodge is growing on every hand like the liquor power, and the more it is hammered the more it seems to grow, but its day will come and God will overthrow both in his time.

Dr. Strouble of Humboldt Park, Chicago, said he used to be a Prohibitionist, but was now working in the interest of the laborers. Had just returned from the State convention of the Union Labor party. He found all this effort for reform in politics was an uphill business; no political business seemed to prosper but Republicanism, Democracy and boodlerism. He had come to see that the money question was the leading one before the people. Farmers are losing their farms by mortgages, and the grasping of wealthy and great corporations is more and more severely felt by workingmen. But when an effort is made to help them in politics it seems to be a failure. He came home from Decatur heartily disgusted with the Union Labor party. He did not see how he could work with them longer, but he was in favor of the effort to clear up politics and get rid of the secret societies.

The meeting was in good humor for another speech, and Rev. B. T. Roberts was called for; but the committee on memorial wished to finish their work and adjournment was had after prayer by Rev. T. B. Arnold.

There was a good representation present from four political parties,four States and six religious denominations; and all gave their names to the secretary to be recorded on the roll of the anti-lodge league as follows:

L. N. Stratton, W. I. Phillips, J. Blanchard, B. T. Roberts,(Judge) Zearing,E. R. Worrell,C. A. Blanchard, T. B. Arnold, J. A. Mackelvey, Henry L. Kellogg, John Strouble, Thomas Hodge, E. A. Cook, B. B. Blachly, C. Hillegonds, George W. Clark.

MEMORIAL TO POLITICAL NOMINATING CONVENTIONS.

GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned are a committee appointed at a conference of those opposed to secret societies held in the city of Chicago, April 29th, 1888.

We are instructed to lay before you a few facts and to request that, in your nominations, you present to the American people for their suffrages those who are not under obligations to secret organizations.

1. The administration of justice requires that those to whom it is intrusted be free from all obligation to favor any parties upon whose interests they may be called to decide.

2. The object of secret societies is to secure for their members advantages to which, in the natural order of things, they are not entitled. Though, in general, they disavow political purposes, yet their members secure offices of public trust, and handle public funds to an extent that their numbers, in proportion to the rest of the community, do not entitle them.

3. The history of the French Revolution, and the communistic war in Paris, more recently, show how dangerous these societies are when they obtain a controlling influence in the administration of the government of a country.

4. George Washington in his Farewell Address to his fellow countrymen uttered these words of warning to which our people at the present day would do well to take heed:

"However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion."

Able statesmen since his day, as Millard Fillmore, Alexander Hamilton, Wm. H. Seward, Charles Sumner, S. P. Chase, Charles F. Adams, Richard Rush, Wendell Phillips, Chief Justice Marshall, Thaddeus Stevens, Daniel Webster, and a host of other patriots have declared secret societies hostile to free government.

5. The derangement of the business of the country; the stopping of the wheels of commerce; the general spoliation of the farmers; the notorious perversions of justice by our courts, through the influence of secret societies,ought to awaken every well disposed citizen of this country to the necessity of suppressing their influence, instead of giving them any additional political power by elevating to office their sworn adherents.

An examination of the obligations of Freemasonry will show what appears to be an elaborate provision for the perversion of justice where Freemasons are concerned. The Mason swears to keep the secrets committed to him by a brother Mason, to obey his signs, to warn him of approaching danger, etc. All these obligations we deem inconsistent with the oath taken by a public officer. Still further, the secret signs and tokens of these orders afford means of communication between the bench, the jury-box, the witness-stand, and opposite sides of the halls of legislation; which we believe to be entirely inconsistent with honest dealing between the citizens of a free government.

Religious denominations, aggregating more than seven hundred thousand members, for various reasons oppose them, and a large and increasing number of our journals antagonize them.

We therefore request that in your nominations you will present for our suffrages men, who, being under no secret obligations to a portion of their fellow citizens, will be able equitably to administer their trust for all.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS.

WASHINGTON, April 26th, 1888.

I reached this city on Tuesday morning last. I was met with cordial greetings at anti-secrecy headquarters, but as Bros. Bailey and Johnston were packing, preparatory to removal, I did not intrude upon their hospitality and took lodgings with our Prohibition friend, Mr. Wheelock, at 207 Pennsylvania Avenue. Bros. Bailey and Johnston are both occupied in Government employment from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M., and for that reason the transit to East Capitol street is rather slow. Both families, however, occupy their new domicile to-night and expect to gather up the fragments to-morrow. I hope to have one room in order Saturday and to open the N. C. A. office some time next week. I have found and conferred with some of those who were very friendly and helpful when we began the work here and find their interest unabated. Senator S.C. Pomeroy seems as youthful and active as five years ago, and Milton Ford assures me that he was never in better health or more in sympathy with our work than now.

For two days the papers have been heralding the coming of the I. O. O. Fs. from several neighboring cities to celebrate the anniversary of the founding of their order in America. They came, and marched and counter-marched with music and banners through several of the principal streets. At 3:30 P. M. they marched through the carriage drive in front of the White House and were reviewed by President Cleveland. Standing within a few feet of the President on the broad marble step I made a careful count as they filed between the marble columns, and found there were just one hundred and forty in the procession! The President simply stepped out of the door unattended as the first in line came under the archway, and stood with his hat on his head and both hands behind his back, with an expression of perfect indifference on his face,and when the last in line were opposite, he turned on his heel and entered the door, which closed behind him. It was the tamest affair I ever witnessed, and yet, no doubt, it will be heralded over the country as a glorious epoch in the history of Odd-fellowship in America. When I last saw the "Fellows" they were standing on the south approach to the Treasury building, having their picture taken. The published program includes a ball to-night. The morning papers announce meetings of seventeen different secret lodges in this city to-night, and this is prayer-meeting night in most of the evangelical churches. The effect of these lodge meetings upon the meetings for prayer will be to diminish both the attendance and the spirituality of the churches.

Last evening I attended the Central Union Mission and was blessed in the exercises. There were about 100 persons present and in the testimony service several spoke of the great depth of sin from which they had been rescued by the Gospel of Christ. To-day I met Mr. White and another friend from Worcester, Mass., on the Avenue, and hope that this will be only the first in a series of meetings at N. C. A. headquarters, where all friends visiting the city will find a hearty welcome.

AT WORK IN THE OLD DOMINION.

BLOODLESS VICTORIES ABOUT THE OLD SEAT OF WAR.

RICHMOND, Va., April 24th, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Abbyville across to Boydton, the county-seat of Mechlinburg county, Virginia, is a rolling country near the north side of the Roanoke river, on whose banks are raised nearly all the cotton which Virginia produces. Boydton is but a small village and probably has not grown for the last fifty years. Its one hotel and few stores are strictly first-class—in prices, but not in any other respect. The colored population are a large majority in this part of the State and will probably elect J. M. Langston to Congress.

Boydton Institute is the excellent school started and sustained by Dr. Cullis of Boston. It occupies the fine old building formerly the Randolph Macon College. It has good buildings, is fairly equipped and is doing an excellent work. But as there are three similar institutions in the county it has not so large attendance as some farther south. They enrolled about 150, ranging from primary to classical. The present principal is Rev. Mr. McArm, an M. E. minister from Vermont. He received me very kindly, said he had never joined any secret order, but had been often much hindered in his work by Masonic influence. He arranged for me to lecture in the evening, where I met more than 100 in the College chapel who listened with attention and mostly with hearty sympathy. Dr. Cullis recently visited the school,and, I believe, expects to start a new one in Alabama.

From Boydton I went to Chase City in the north part of the county. Thyne Institute, under the care of Rev. J. H. Veazey, has had a prosperous year. They have enrolled 250 students and have a flourishing church and Sabbath-school. An able corps of teachers are doing an excellent work. They are putting up new buildings. Pres. Veazey is not only an excellent preacher and instructor, but an earnest reformer, and feels a deep interest in the anti-secrecy and temperance work. I was most kindly entertained at his pleasant home and aided in many ways in my work. By his request I spoke on Saturday night on prohibition and the need of a Prohibition party.

On Sabbath I preached once,gave a lecture on Africa and the mission work, and at night preached again in the First Presbyterian church in the town. The attendance during the day was large. On Monday morning I addressed the students on the secret lodge system. This made twenty-six lectures and sermons in twenty-three days. At noon I left for Richmond, leaving behind some of the kindest friends and the most interesting field I have found in the State.

No city of the South except Birmingham, Ala., or Atlanta, Ga.,shows such marks of growth, thrift and enterprise as Richmond,Va.; and there are probably few cities in the nation that have so great natural advantges. A sea-port, with deep water navigation, a vast unused water power, a fertile country and a most pleasant and healthful location, it would be strange indeed if Richmond did not prosper. That her people failed in making her the permanent capital of a Southern confederacy was to them a mysterious providence, but in reality a most beneficent one.

After reaching the city I went to the Baptist Theological Seminary at 1900 Main St. I was most kindly received by the president, Rev. C. H. Cory, D. D. He said that previous to my former visit he had never seen the Cynosure and knew little of our movement. Since then he had learned to appreciate our paper and our work. He would be glad to have me address the students and would give me as much time as I wished. It seemed best to make it from 11 to 12 A. M. The school is strictly a theological seminary. The course of study is thorough and the examinations are rigid. They confer a degree on their graduates, and there are but two in the graduating class, though the attendance is over sixty, several being pastors in this and neighboring cities. Some of them are Masons and nearly all have had experience in secret societies. I spoke about an hour and was for some time kept busy in answering questions. Dr. Cory said to them that he thought I had successfully sustained all my points and he commended the subject to their careful consideration.

I also visited Hartshorn Memorial Seminary, where I found ninety young ladies in attendance, and under the care of Rev. Dr. Taft. I was asked to conduct the morning exercises and address them, which I did, occupying half an hour in my remarks on the lodge system. All seemed intelligent and interested; and with many there was no evidence, in their appearance, that they had a trace of African blood. This is one of the excellent schools sustained by the Baptist Home Missionary Society.

I should fail to do justice to Richmond if I did not speak of its new electric street railway. This is said to be the longest electric street railway in the world—over twelve miles. I was greatly surprised at the rapidity and smoothness with which they ran up the steep grades, of which there are a number. Mysterious power! The emancipator of the long-suffering car-horse.

Among the church enterprises in this city is the new structure just completed for the congregation of Rev. A. P. Dunbar (colored Baptist). It is a fine, fire-proof building, with a seating capacity of nearly 1,000. It has cost $16,000 and $10,000 remain to be paid. The church has about 500 working members, and is in a part of the city where a large majority of the people are colored. They are poor, and have $3,000 to raise in a year. The church is doing a good work. Bro. Dunbar is in sympathy with the anti-secrecy reform, and doing what he can to bring up his people to a just idea of Christian living. Any help given them will be a good and needful bestowment.

H. H. HINMAN.

PENNSYLVANIA PROGRESS.

YORK, Pa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It will encourage our Pennsylvania anti-secret friends if I again report progress. Rev. Nathan Callender, of Brown Hollow, Lackawanna Co., will act as our president; W. B. Bertels, of Wilkesbarre, Luzerne Co., will be our Eastern District vice-president; J. C. Young, of Custer City, McKean Co., treasurer; Edward J. Chalfant, of York, York Co., will act as corresponding secretary,at least until a reorganization is completed. The remaining offices will soon be filled and reported in Cynosure. Lecturers are preparing to go out; and a list of those prepared to answer calls will be reported in due time.

An effort is being made to induce our friends in the sixty-seven counties of the State to organize county anti-secret associations, to support and invigorate the State Association. Many of our most wide-awake men now see that this will be a bundle of straws that will break the back of the lodge camel.

The importance of obtaining as many readers and subscribers for the Cynosure as an aid in State work as we can, has been impressed upon many of our workers; and much is expected from this method of giving "more light," both to insiders and outsiders.

Many matters of importance are being considered; and there is a strong desire to do all that can be done to rescue the old commonwealth from the sly and cunning conspirators who are using all our public offices "for the good of the order." I am glad so many Pennsylvanians are up and doing. Forward, friends! Yours truly,

EDWARD J CHALFANT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NATIONAL REFORM CONFERENCE.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—On last Sabbath night I preached in the Presbyterian church on Pacific Avenue, Rev. Samuel P. Halsey, D. D., pastor. We had a very interesting and attentive audience. Dr. Halsey was pastor of the Franklyn Avenue Presbyterian church for fifteen years. He is a very successful pastor. On Tuesday evening I addressed the Brooklyn Prohibition Club. Through their president, Mr. Williams, they extended an invitation to speak to them on National Reform. They have over 1,300 members. Their president is getting them in line for the coming Presidential campaign. At the same hour a National Reform meeting was held in the Puritan Congregational church. It is not often that two National Reform meetings are held the same evening in one city.

The National Conference on the Christian Principles of Civil Government in Philadelphia Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, was a success. Association Hall was crowded the second evening to hear Miss Willard on "Woman's Work for Christ." Dr. Crafts gave an excellent talk on "National Sabbath Reform." The argument he gave in the current number of Our Day. Rev. Terret gave a masterly argument for "the kingly office of Christ," and Dr. Greir thrilled the audience with the thought that Christianity would heal all sectional animosities. A profound paper was prepared by Dr. Harper on "Romanism and American Institutions." Rev. McFall showed the absurdity and danger of the secular theory of education. Dr. Baldwin discussed the Chinese question; Dr. Herrick Johnson, divorce; Dr. Pierson, the press; Dr. Morris, the liquor traffic; Dr. Barr, foreign missions. The following contains the items in my report as District Secretary from April 1, 1887, to April 1, 1888:

The first five months were spent in Cincinnati and vicinity; the remaining seven in New York State. I have preached on National Reformation in twenty of the Brooklyn churches. Lectures were delivered in Newburgh, Walton, Rochester, Oswego, New York. We addressed the students of Syracuse University, Hamilton College and Union Theological Seminary. Invitations to address the Teachers' Association of Ohio, and Eastman's Business College of Poughkeepsie, could not be accepted. We have obtained a hearing in the county, State, and metropolitan press, and in various religious journals. The Prohibition platform has furnished many opportunities to speak for Christ as King. We have reported to the treasurer over twelve hundred dollars. Our reception has been everywhere hearty; in many cases most cordial and enthusiastic. The door is wide open. The Mediatorial Dominion of Christ over the nations is the most acceptable theme of all.

RALLY AROUND THE "CYNOSURE!"

YORK, Pa., April 23, 1888.

All the great city newspapers are sold by newsboys on the streets and in various places of resort. Why shall we not thus sell the Cynosure?

I regard the Cynosure as one of the best powers of the anti-secret reform movement. No man or woman can read a single number of the paper without gaining much valuable information in relation to secretism and secret societies. It seems to me every anti-secret worker should strive to scatter as many copies of the paper as he or she possibly can, in his or her own town or county, in self-defense, to gain friends and sympathizers.

I have been canvassing for subscribers in the city of York, and these ideas have been deeply impressed upon my mind by my experience. I have observed that many men and women who take a York daily, and also a weekly church organ, but who say they cannot afford to take the Cynosure regularly, are very glad to get a number of the paper occasionally, to see what the sly and cunning craftsmen are doing.

I have asked some of these persons if they would buy a number occasionally; and in all cases the answer was in the affirmative. And I believe we can introduce the Cynosure and the reform to thousands all over the United States by this plan.

Now, I suggest that every six weeks, or on certain occasions, as the Fourth of July, the 22d of February, etc., the editors make up a number, for the occasion, expressly for sale to these anxious friends who are groaning for facts giving "more light." Notice being given to us in time, each worker can send an order and money order for the number of papers required on each occasion. This will enable us to obtain subscribers for six months or one year, very readily; for many would in time feel the need of a weekly drink from the great fountain of anti-secrecy, just as the moderate liquor drinker soon feels the need of a regular dram.

I hope to hear that this plan will take with anti-secret workers everywhere. I am sure it will inaugurate a new era in the great anti-secret crusade.

To make a good beginning, I suggest that a number of the Cynosure be prepared to expose the great lodge circus-performances which are to come off on Decoration Day. In York it is to be a great secret society parade of a number of secret orders, invited from other towns and cities, to join with our local secret orders. I will take forty copies of the Decoration Day Cynosure. Will all the readers of the paper take a hand in this effort to give the hoodwinked "more light?"

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

—The Religious Herald states that 28,000 of the 35,000 members added to the Baptist churches in New York, came from the Sabbath-schools.

TEXAS BAPTISTS READY FOR REFORM.

ROCKDALE, Texas.

MR. EDITOR:—I am truly sorry to say that my life has been stained with connection or membership in secret societies. I was somewhat like Eve. I desired to be wise. But, thanks be unto God, I learned that there was too much evil practiced there for a Christian, so with shame of face and guilty conscience I stepped out.

For two years I have been traveling in the interest of the Baptist State Convention. I have a very good opportunity of seeing the evil of secretism, which is kept up by the ministers and members of our churches. It is strange that I never speak to a minister about the evil of the societies, who does not see as great wrong in the lodge as I can show, yet they have not the Christian manhood to come out. In the last two weeks I have spoken to several brethren who all admit that the lodge is a fraud; yet they are holding onto their false oath. These brethren all preach in different cities and communities in the State, which shows that the lodge is a deception everywhere.

I don't think it will be hard to bring the colored Baptists of Texas to a reform, because the majority have not been hood-winked and the rest are tired of their heavy taxations and no profits.

I am negotiating with Messrs. E. C. Cook & Bro., Chicago, for a tent,to hold a camp-meeting in,to commence the first of June. Will some one help me buy the tent? The tent will cost $154. The success of our Master's cause depends upon reaching the masses. At this writing I am holding a revival at Hillsboro. I go from here to Corsicana, Fort Worth and Sherman. The opposing army is well organized; if we would win we must be up and doing. "United we stand, divided we fall."

J. TOLIVER.

"FRIENDSHIP, MORALITY AND BROTHERLY LOVE."

When, conformably to the appointment of conference, I moved into this city, the craft declared that they, the members of these "charitable and religious institutions," would "starve him out in less than two months!" Just think of the official members of one of our churches waiting on a senior or junior warden of one of the numerous lodges of our country to inform him that, as a result of the teachings of their religion and the deliberations of their conference, synod or council, they proposed to "starve out" the newly appointed worshipful master of the lodge! Depraved, indeed, would be the moral nature which could not rise to the moral dignity necessary to declare such a religion to be begotten of the devil and well worthy of its sire.

When small-pox was in town and the people of the surrounding country were so alarmed that quarantine was declared against this city, it looked, from a mere human standpoint, that the declaration of Baal's prophets in reference to your humble correspondent would surely come to pass. To add to the perplexity of the situation, I had filled two appointments in a blizzard and caught cold in my vaccinated arm, which swelled enormously. Dr. W. S. Hoyt, an old and experienced physician, said he had "not seen such an arm in forty years!" But we have faith in God, and "know in whom we have believed, "and our experience teaches us that God still has his "barrel of meal," his "cruse of oil," his "widows," and his "Obadiahs." He did use ravens once, and has them yet, but they are so full of carrion now that they can only sit around and croak about what their "ancient brethren" did "on the highest hills and in the lowest valleys;" and one peculiarity of the ancient fowl has descended to the modern bird, so that he can smell a dead Hiramite just as quickly as his ancestor, and loves the odor fully as much.

We had about reached the bread and sweetened-water stage, when the Lord sent a white-winged messenger of his providence from a staunch reformer in Lyons, our county seat. The money did not croak much, but it worked wonders for our fare. The supplies thus obtained were just about exhausted, when there came a box, "charges paid." I thought it thought might be a Masonic box, but seeing that it was shipped from Lyons I took it home, and found groceries enough in it to keep us supplied for two weeks, with a nice ham for a foundation under them. You can depend upon it that the sender reads the Cynosure and American, if not the Wesleyan and Free Methodist, which all true reformers, if able, should read.

I have five appointments on this work; at four of them I have preached, according to previous announcement, on the "Anti-Christian Character of Freemasonry and Kindred Societies," once in each place. Never before have such crowds attended services in these places. True to their character, the craft are mad—mad is just the word.

Rev. J. A. Richards struck Hiram right between the eyes in a sermon on the camp-ground here and he has been walking around in a dazed condition ever since. Hiram (Masonry) rallied sufficiently to be so far conscious that if the truth so driven home should produce conviction it might prove the destruction of their temple. Therefore, on the sulphurous aphorism that "a lie well adhered to is nearly as good as the truth," the Hiramites have adopted as their line of defense,—"What does Mr. Richards know about it? He never was a Mason." They also proceed to prop it up with any number of hypothetical statements which in their judgment will prevail over sound reason and common sense.

They could take some fancied comfort in the thought that Bro. Richards had never gone to any degree of degradation in Masonry; but to have a seceder come here as pastor of the Wesleyan church and confirm the truth of what Rev. J. A. Richards uttered from personal experience in the lodge, is too much.

Rev. J. W. Lane comes from Illinois, where he claims to have been made a Mason. In a very sulphurous atmosphere he cracked the "good man" chestnut for my palate, and showed by his defense the nature of the craft. "You preachers," he said, "never preach about anything else. Every sermon you've preached since coming here,you have preached on secret orders."

This of course can have but little force with those who come to hear me, but it is calculated to reach and influence people at a distance.

Another grave charge he laid at my door was that during one of my many sermons on Freemasonry, I averred that no Mason dares to utter some syllables which he uttered aloud, and, if my memory does me justice, were, "Mizzer, izzer, aizim."

To the first my reply was that we do not have to consult the craft as to what we shall preach, nor when we shall preach it; that we leave such consultation to those who choose to be governed by such dictation and direction. Further, that I have preached but once in four of the five places on this work on the subject since conference and am announced to speak at the fifth. Next, that I did not say that Masons did not dare to utter aloud the words he used, but that I did say and now say that no Mason dares to say aloud, "Mah-hah-bone." "Now," said I, "you say it."

"Oh! That is quite a different thing," he responded.

"Say it," I insisted.

"Oh! That is quite a different thing. They said that you said—"

"Hold a minute," said I, "just say, 'Mah-hah-bone.'"

He dodged it as before and did not say it, and to this moment keeps his "jewel." He finally said, "When you argue with me you must remember I argue for victory," and then turned and acknowledged that "Freemasonry is all exposed,"that he had not been in a lodge for years and did not know as he ever would enter one again. But if a snake is in your cellar and does not bite it is because he is either cold or you are not to his taste. Just you warm him up and he's all snake, and if he can't bite, his fangs being gone, he will hiss. These "haven't been in a lodge for years" secretists are like the snake.

The ranks of reform here have lost one veteran in Eleazer Crandall, a seceder from Freemasonry.

G. T. DISSETTE.

PITH AND POINT.

SOWING THE SEED.

I am interested in this movement more than I can tell, and shall make it a life work. I have scattered those tracts and the two bound volumes to all whom I have had an opportunity, and who would take the least interest in them. I keep the Cynosure loaned out all the time. The "Sons of Veterans" leaflet is good. I let the son of a neighboring veteran read it, and he too thought it only too true. Those orders, most assuredly, do our country more harm than good.—M. M. BURNAP, Prairie Creek, Oregon.

DECORATION DAY PERFORMANCE.

Concerning the celebration of decoration day by a reunion of the "Gray" and "Blue" soldiers, I desire to say a word or two. With all due charity and Christian toleration for the South, truth must not be unheeded or ignored. Admitting there were many good meaning men of the South who were misled into the rebellion, yet the fact is all the same that the rebellion was a wicked attempt to perpetuate the barbarous crime of human slavery. It was more than a "difference of opinion" that brought on the carnage of war; it was a solemn necessity on the part of the boys in blue to save their beloved country. * * * Let the South by its actions of loyalty, prove its earnestness, and the Christian hand of fellowship and forgiveness will not be withheld, and the penitent boys in gray will be cordially greeted by the patriotic "boys in blue." But to prove their loyalty and gain such brotherly feeling the South must desist from waving the Confederate flag of treason and boosting Jeff. Davis as they did not long since at Mason, Georgia; and above all, let the colored man exercise his right of citizenship. Let him vote and then count his vote.—J. M. STANTON, Quakerton, Ind.

It is announced that for financial reasons the Royal Niger Company, which to a large extent controls the traffic of the Lower Niger and of Central Africa, has adopted the policy of prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors in its commercial territory. It has become obvious that if the native races are destroyed it must also involve the destruction of legitimate commerce.

LITERATURE.

JUDAISM ON THE SOCIAL QUESTION. By Rabbi H. Berkowitz. Pp. 130. Price 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

No thorough discussion of social or economic questions can proceed far without going back to the Mosaic record, and learning there how Jehovah made laws for a homeless, landless nation, and provided such legal checks for the greed of wealth and provision for the sustenance of the poorest and meanest, that the Solons of every age have confessed the divine origin of such regulations. The young Rabbi Berkowitz devotes one of the series of brief discourses comprising this volume to the question, "Did Moses solve the Social Problem?" His work would have been perhaps more satisfactory had he given twice the space to the discussion of the spirit and methods of the Mosaic laws, especially had he more devoutly acknowledged the source from whence Moses drew his wisdom for the regulation of social order. He rather exalts Moses instead of God. The author in every part manifests a sincere sympathy with toiling, underpaid and suffering men, and denounces "the social agitator of to-day, who poses as the champion of labor," as the real enemy of labor, guilty of the frenzy of the poor against the rich, and the propagator of the false and pernicious doctrine that the poor are growing poorer and the rich richer. The remedy for the social ills of the day he does not seek in the philosophies of such modern Jews as La Salle and Karl Marx, whose fundamental doctrine that physical labor is the creator of all wealth he repudiates. Theirs were doctrines of discontent and despair. From the standpoint of Judaism, he says, "The socialism of to-day, worshiping as it does at the shrine of pagan justice and immorality, can never be admitted as the true solution of the social question." This little volume is eloquently written, and ably presents, though somewhat briefly, the objections to socialism, communism and anarchy in their boasts that by them shall the world have her millennium. We heartily commend it to all who wish honestly to investigate this great subject.

Scribner's Magazine for May will open of itself to every lover of English literature at Austin Dobson's article on Alexander Pope. The two hundredth anniversary of the poet is appropriately recognized, and the essayist, with his rare knowledge and appreciation of the writers of Queen Anne's reign, has sympathetically described Pope's works and friendships. He appends a fine critical estimate in verse, written, in the manner of Pope, in the rhymed pentameters which he brought to such perfection. A number of rare portraits accompany the article. "In the Steamers' Track," by William Perry Northrup, is the true stroy of an exciting cruise on the New York pilot boat, David Carll, during which a daring attempt was made to tow into port an abandoned bark. The illustrations are marine sketches of great spirit. Professor James Baldwin's second paper on "The Center of the Republic" is a surprising review of the intellectual activity in the West. It clearly shows that many of the great reforms in educational methods, which have been adopted with enthusiasm by the East, were originated and developed by sturdy Western pioneers, and that the great Northwest Territory covered by the Ordinance of 1787 is the true center of our Union. "Modern Explosives," by Charles E. Munroe, Chemist of the U. S. Torpedo Corps, explains clearly the composition and action of the various explosive agents now used in war and peace. The illustrations show the results of many elaborate tests which have been made by the government.

Our Day again presents a welcome number, without a dull or unprofitable page. Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, the late missionary and college president, shows that his hand has not lost its cunning. He writes on "The First Principles of Protection," and if all who maintain the necessity of a protective tariff would argue their case as clearly, simply and kindly, there would hardly be such division of sentiment on this great question of public policy. We commend this article to readers of every shade of opinion. Miss F. E. Willard writes of "Woman as Preacher" and pleads for the breaking down of every barrier to the pulpit. We doubt if her argument will convince every reader either of the expediency or the Scriptural authority of her demand. C. K. Ober on Prof. Drummond's work among our American students is a feeble indication against such objections to the learned Scotchman's theology as Dr. J. F. Brookes makes in the Truth. "Co-operation in Church Work" by Dr. Josiah Strong, "National Sabbath Reform" by Wilbur F. Crafts, a poem by Dr. Rankin, and Mr. Cook's third lecture of this year's Boston course fill up the number.

Vick's Magazine for May has a peculiar value for its article on the care and adornment of cemetery grounds, which are too often controlled by miserly corporations, and are a shame to a community in spite of the efforts of individuals. Raisin grapes and ornamental vines and "arbor day" have also a place in the number.

Cora L. Stockham and Emily A. Kellogg are editors of a new magazine for parents and children—the Kindergarten—which will be the exponent of the best that the justly popular Kindergarten system can teach us. It will be a useful assistant in home and school, and especially will aim to be an aid to the inexperienced mother or teacher. This first number is very handsomely printed and illustrated, and the enterprise is in the hands of publishers who know how to make it a success. Price $2 a year. Alice B. Stockham & Co., publishers.

The second number of the Map Graphic, published by Rufus Blanchard, 143 Wabash Ave., Chicago, is out. The student will find abundant instruction, and the curious satisfaction in its pages. The main feature is a sectional map of the district of which Chicago is the center, comprising a tract 25 miles long by 17 broad, showing all the suburbs for several miles in either direction. All the street names in this great district are distinctly shown, the railway lines, streams, and thousand points of interest are located. Historical maps of Chicago in 1812, before there was any Chicago, and again in 1851 when the city numbered some 28,000. with another of northern Illinois in 1835 are finely printed. The letter press includes an account of the city, published in London in 1833, with chapters 4 and 5 of the account of early discoveries in this country. Few libraries in the country, public or private, are so well stocked as Mr. Blanchard's with rare and curious books upon the early history of the country, and especially of the Northwest which is now having its centennial, and which Prof. James Baldwin in Scribner's shows is the true center of commercial industry and national strength of the Union of which Chicago is the metropolis.

OBITUARY.

MRS. SALLIE WILLIAMS, one of the pioneer settlers of Galesburg, Ill., died March 12, of pneumonia, aged 80 years, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Hunter.

She was a native of Brookfield, Madison county, N. Y., but lived more than half a century in Illinois, much of the time confined to her bed by illness, but gentle and patient under it all, giving evidence that she was a sincere and earnest Christian. She impressed her character on all around her, having rare qualities of mind and heart. Two sons and three daughters survive her. How high their honor, "a mother passed in to the skies." May each of the surviving follow Christ as did our dear sister, and like her meet a welcome in the better land when life ends, and earth vanishes away.

M. A. B.

DEACON H. P. CHAMBERLAIN, died at his home in Morrison, Ill., April 7th, 1888, of cancer of the stomach, aged nearly 84 years.

Another of the veteran readers of the Cynosure has gone to his rest, like a shock of corn fully ripe. He was born at Newport, N. H., May 4, 1804. At the age of nine he moved with his parents to Plainfield, Vt., where he lived till 1873. When 22 years of age, both his parents died in one week, which devolved on him the care of the family. Of the six members of that family he has been the sole survivor for forty-seven years. His first wife died in 1876, and he was subsequently married to Mrs. Elizabeth Russell, who survives him. Of his six children only two are living—a daughter, Mrs. Quackenbush, in Morrison, and a son on the old Vermont homestead.

Mr. Chamberlain was converted at 18 and joined the Baptist church at Plainfield, Vt., in which he held the office of deacon for forty years. During his residence of fifteen years in Morrison, he showed an untiring zeal in the work of the Baptist church, of which he was a deacon the last five years. The temperance cause found in him a staunch friend; for the sick and sorrowing he always had a word of sympathy, and when necessary something more substantial than words; and he was one of the firmest friends of the anti-secret society reform. He was so positive in his convictions on this subject, and so faithful in teaching his views, that he earned the reputation of being a peculiar man. Would that all Christians had the same peculiarity of standing up for their convictions.

WILL YOU READ THIS FOR $500?

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, who are abundantly responsible financially, as any one can easily ascertain by enquiry, have offered, in good faith, a standing reward of $500 for a case of nasal catarrh, no matter how bad or of how long standing, which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at 50 cents.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 3, 1888

Have you read the action of the Conference in this number memorializing the national political conventions to place in nomination for our suffrages free men? Shall we go farther and form a league pledging ourselves not to vote for any other than those free from secret lodge obligations? Let every friend of the Cynosure send in his answer at once, and if favorable to such a movement the Cynosure will give all the information which it can obtain as to the standing of candidates, if the friends on their part will push the subscription list for the campaign, and so help educate the voters of each party. The petition to the delegates of the national convention is good, but to be effective the Cynosure must reach the voters. Who will canvass for the campaign edition?

FRANK S. GRAY, late publisher of the Interior, and son of its editor, goes to New York as publisher of the Mail and Express. Dr. Gray, evidently pleased with his son's promotion, gives the good part of a column of agreeable witticism on the occasion.

THE Southwestern Presbyterian (New Orleans) is down on Chicago Presbytery for favoring reunion of the Southern General Assembly with the North. We were told, at Natchez and elsewhere, that if Dr. Palmer, the high priest of the rebellion, were converted, the Assemblies would be united in six months.

MUGWUMP (a word not found in Webster's Dictionary) is a name of an Indian powwow or conjurer, given to dissenters from a political party. Sam Jones, who is pushing the third or Prohibition party in Georgia, says the opponeuts of prohibition are "jugwumps." The Cynosure goes steadily for a third or American party. But it rejoices when even Masons and Odd-fellows vote for Mugwumps instead of Jugwumps.

A NEW CHICAGO PAPER, a sixteen page quarto, weekly, issued its first number April 7th ult. Its name is simply America, without even the article "The" before it. It claims to represent a capital of $100,000 with an august corps of contributors, among whom we notice the gifted review writer, Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart of New Orleans. It is altogether a brilliant paper in ability and style of execution, and, by attacking at once the most difficult problems of American politics, seems resolved to justify its title, "America."

THE daily Chicago press often gives three or four solid columns to "Secret Societies," including "Temples, Commanderies, Fantasuja (the festival of the Gyptian Venus), Consistories," etc., etc., illustrated by double-headed eagles and strange gewgaws, fit to adorn a mock auction at Bunyan's "Vanity Fair," and sprinkled with Latin mottoes which the lodge-members and even their leaders often understand as pigs understand algebra. Every one who buys a copy of such a print pays to support jugglers, swindlers and sleight-of-hand men, who, in a sound community, would be taken up by the police.

The Times-Democrat of New Orleans prints from the Madison Times of Tellulah, Louisiana, of March 29th, last, the following letter:

DEAR SIR:—To prevent violence and bloodshed in Madison Parish, we hereby withdraw our names as candidates for the Legislature from the parish of Madison, and most respectfully ask our friends to "stop the advocacy of our names for the House." In order that the public may be placed in full possession of our withdrawal, we ask that you publish this card in your paper.

Very respectfully, W. W. JOHNSON.
GEO. HAWKINS.

Two men armed with revolvers called on the men named above, and ordered them to leave Louisiana, their home, where they were candidates for office, at once, and not to return until after election, at the risk of their lives. They then took refuge in Vicksburg, Mississippi, and sent out their call, as above.

PHILANTHROPY APPRECIATED.—The new Iberia Democrat speaks warmly of the educational work in that place which has been so ably promoted by Mr. Howe:—"A few days ago we had the pleasure to receive a much appreciated visit from Mr. Peter Howe, of Wenona, Illinois, the liberal philanthropist who contributed so much towards the establishment of a high school in our town for the colored people. He was accompanied by Rev. Byron Gunner, who certainly ranks at the head of our colored citizens, for his true spirit of enlightened progress in behalf of his race. Liberal in our opinions, priding ourselves of our 'True Democracy,' we hope that the generous gifts of Mr. Howe will be fruitful in every way, tending to instruct, moralize and improve the present and future generations of the race he has thought proper (right too) to thus materially help towards the goal it is meet it should attain."

PROFESSOR WOODSMALL.

It is seldom so extraordinary a person appears in the stream of human events, as the man whose likeness appears in this paper. He was a student, lawyer, captain, major, missionary, theologian, divine and saint. As a soldier he fought for the Union, was wounded, came home and returned South when but imperfectly recovered. And as Thomas Clarkson, while a Cambridge student, was so overwhelmed with the miseries of the Negroes, while preparing a Latin essay on slavery, that he consecrated his life to the overthrow of the slave trade; so Mr. Woodsmall was so overwhelmed by what he saw of the slaves and slavery in the South during the war, that he gave up the practice of the law, and other openings to distinguished success in life, and devoted himself to the temporal and eternal welfare of the ex-slaves with the zeal of an apostle and the spirit of a martyr.

His success was equal to his devotion. Indeed, his is no ordinary obituary but a journey of life, where the milestones were schools and institutions of learning, which sprung up at the touch of the wand of his genius in Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas, and which now stand like electric lamps along the dark tunnel of a railroad to guide the future thousands, not merely by the lights of human science, but by the stars of eternity, to bring them safely "through the valley of the shadow of death," to that land where "the Lord God giveth them light and where the Lamb is the light thereof."

Prof. H. Woodsmall was born in Owen county, three miles from Gosport, Ind., June 9, 1842. The Baptist Encyclopedia gives the leading facts of his life. Born three miles from town, he was, of course, a farmer's boy, who, like thousands of others, learned to think while working under the open heavens; to "endure hardness" by toil; and learned the fear of God and the love of man in the atmosphere of a farmer's home. While a student in Bloomington, Ind., he enlisted and went as captain in the 115th Indiana regiment, July 7th, 1863. In a month he was promoted to be major, and was wounded in the bloody battle of Antietam in Virginia, and went home in February, 1864, where he soon united with a Baptist church. After the war he entered the law school at Ann Arbor, Mich.

He practiced law in Indiana, and later in Minnesota, and while attending a Baptist convention at Mankato he became convinced he ought to give up law for the ministry. He returned from the convention to his law office in Minneapolis but could not work. He shut himself up in his office, and spent an entire day in prayer that God would show him the path of duty; and consecrated himself entirely and without reserve to the service of God, a consecration from which he never went back.

While engaged in law practice, he was devoted to the cause of instruction and education; was engaged in Sabbath-school labors, and was a trustee of Franklin College. But as an American citizen and Christian he was overwhelmed with the sight of four millions of people, one million more than were here at the Revolution, turned from things into men, unable as citizens to read a ballot, or as Christians to spell the name of Christ. And in 1873–4 he attended the Southern Theological Seminary at Greenville, South Carolina, near the home and head center of the great Rebellion, where his room-mate was an ex-confederate officer. They had fought each other in the war. They now became fast friends, united in the plan of Mr. Woodsmall to kindle the fires of Christian civilization at the bottom of the grate to burn up the dangerous mass of ex-slave illiteracy by letters and the fire of God from heaven.

He began his work by visiting associations and conventions to make the acquaintance of leading white brethren and the work among the colored people. The same year (1874) he married Miss Mary E. Howes of Macon, Georgia, with whom he returned to Greenville, where they continued, united in the study of his great mission till April, 1875, when he entered on work for the colored people under appointment of the Sabbath-school Board of the Georgia Baptist Convention. Later he was employed by the Baptist Publication Society for six months; then the Home Missionary Society commissioned him to hold institutes for colored teachers and preachers in Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas. These institutes were traveling theological seminaries, like Moody's colleges for Christian work.

While engaged in this great enterprise for Christ and the country he went to work like the good Moravian missionaries who first found access to the hearts of the slaves of the West Indies. Other missionaries had pitied and attempted, as agents of the masters, the conversion of those slaves, but they made no converts. But the Moravians put on the coarse slave garment slung about the neck, and thus habited they went out with them to the sugar fields, and then the slaves were converted by thousands. So Mr. Woodsmall went among the Negroes as if they were human beings and he their brother and friend. This offended his white brethren. They accused him of "associating with niggers," and his agency was dropped by them; but his work went on all the same. Two or three years he went North in behalf of his work and his employers found he could do without them better than they could do without him. As these traveling institutes were transient and temporary, he began to plant and endow permanent schools. He founded thus a school at Selma, Alabama, in 1878; and Miss Emma Jordan, now Mrs. McLain and Miss Heustis, both of Indiana, became teachers in it, and the colored ministers and leaders co-operated with him in it. As this was the first school founded without the aid of the "Home Mission" or any other white association, failure was predicted; but the grand success and wisdom of his plan has been fully proved by the colored teachers who have gone out from Selma Normal and Theological School.

In 1883 he gave the school up to a colored president qualified to run it, and he went back to Atlanta, Ga., to hold institutes in that and adjoining States till the fall of 1884 when he went to New Orleans and took charge of the theological class in Leland University. In the fall of 1885 he organized the Baptist Normal and Theological College in Arkansas, and continued to hold institutes in Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas, besides acting as general friend and adviser of pastors, teachers and missionaries.

During these great and arduous toils Prof. Woodsmall saw the secret societies, into which the colored people had been engulfed, thwarting every effort for their temporal and eternal salvation, putting them under the lead of the worst men among them; devouring their time and money for gaudy regalia and picnic night parties in which thousands of girls as they came to womanhood were ensnared and broken by villains with pompous titles on the wheels of promiscuous prostitution. Becoming acquainted with the work of the N. C. A. he wrote us pleading to have the colored clergy of the South supplied with the Christian Cynosure. He urged that the people would follow their pastors, and that one dollar now used to enlighten the pastors would do more than a hundred dollars in a few years. In 1886, he came North by the request and at the expense of the N. C. A. Directors, spoke at Wheaton College and in Chicago. In this trip he was accompanied by Rev. R. N. Countee, whose struggles are familiar to our readers as household words.

While in Illinois he visited Mr. Peter Howe and secured the benefit of his standing offer of $10,000 to begin a Baptist school in the South which should be modeled after Wheaton College. Pursuing this plan he procured a meeting of delegates (60 or 70) from eight Baptist Associations at Memphis, Tenn. Almost every delegate was a member of secret societies—Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, etc. But, enlightened by Prof. Woodsmall, whom they all knew and loved, and inspired by the eloquence of Countee and the benevolent offer of Mr. Howe, after an earnest debate in which the lodge leaders were on hand and did their utmost, all but four of the delegates of the eight associations voted to accept Mr. Howe's offer and shut and seal the school at Memphis forever against secret societies.

Prof. Woodsmall was holding a three-months institute in this school, with a large attendance of ministers, hoping with this institute to close his labors at Memphis. He had planned already to go to the Indian Territory in April, 1888, to hold an institute for the colored people there; but God had higher work for him. Two days before his death the deed for the school lot was executed. On Friday he taught his usual classes, and attended church on Sabbath. When told he could not go to his family, as he had planned, he meekly said: "Only the good Father can do me good now;" and in a few minutes he passed quietly away, his head, like a tired child's, resting on the hand of Prof. Steele, principal of the Congregational Lemoyne Institute, who, with Miss Kinney, the matron, had tenderly taken him to their Teachers' Home, and cared for him in his last moments. Prof. Steele had his body embalmed in his own room.

These memoranda are furnished us by his beloved wife, who closes her sketches with these words, after mention of the kindness of the Congregational faculty with whom her husband died:

"I deeply sympathize with the colored people in the loss of their best leader and friend. I have often told Mr. Woodsmall I considered it a mistake not to have some younger, stronger man working with him on whom his mantle might fall. His influence over the colored people was wonderful, persuading them to give up whisky, tobacco and secret societies."

Thus for thirteen years this eminent patriot and saint has "trodden the winepress alone," aided and guided by the Spirit of God; and he has literally laid the foundations of many generations. The colored people and their friends will see to it that his devoted and interesting companion and their children have all needed care and sympathy, and that the memory of the just is blessed.

THE WASHINGTON BUILDING AND WORK.

The editors of the Cynosure not being members of the National Board of Directors and seldom attending their meetings, we have read with interest the exhaustive report adopted by the Directors published in the Cynosure week before last, April 19th, the sum of which is seen in the action of the Board, June 21st, 1883, where it is stated that "the Washington property" was "purchased for the use of the National Christian Association." (See report.) And the charter of our National Association, of which the Cynosure is the organ, states its "business and object" to be, "To save the churches of Christ from being depraved," and "Redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption." The preamble to our platform states our "political position" thus: "The National Christian Association does not ignore politics but seeks to elevate and purify it by all honorable methods."

We are happy to perceive, by the full historic report published week before last, that the N. C. A. has strictly followed and carried out the object and design set forth in its constitution, and that the Cynosure has steadily and scrupulously sustained it.

The growth and spread of every reform, from that of Luther to the abolition of American slavery, has been attended with diversity of sentiment and opinion; and the anti-secret reform, so deep and wide-spreading, cannot be expected to prove an exception to this rule. The Cynosure proposes to sustain the action of the N. C. A. and its Board so far as its action seems to us just, and to avoid weakening our cause by division by replying to criticisms, however erroneous or ill-natured, if such criticisms come from those who are sincerely opposing the secret lodge system, which is corrupting our churches and menacing our national existence.

But one thing the N. C. A. and its Board has insisted on and must insist on or the reform attempted must prove a blank failure, which is this: a complete divorce and disfellowship of the lodge-worshipers. Those who practice, take and administer the oaths and secret ceremonies of lodges must be either reclaimed or cast out of the church of Christ. One glance at Bible history will show that this was the divine method. The lamb on Abel's altar was "the Lamb of God." It maintained the unity of God, though with occasional apostasies, and kept up the law of God and the Hebrew Commonwealth for fifteen solid centuries; during which other nations, Assyria, Chaldea, Egypt, Greece, Carthage, crumbled and went down, and their gods sank with them.

Moody, Sankey, Jones, Small and the other evangelists, burn over the surface of society, but leave the lodges standing; and though Mr. Moody insists on Christians separating from the lodge worships, no such separation is effected as by Nehemiah, Elijah and the Jewish reformer kings, and the lodge-tares speedily choke the wheat. The College Church in Wheaton questions candidates, and if they belong to secret orders they are required, under Christ's law, to leave them. Other denominations and associations thus enforce their testimony by discipline; and the National Christian Association from its formation in Pittsburgh in 1886, by Covenanters, United Presbyterians, etc., etc., has taken and held the same ground. Its Washington property was purchased for the purpose of planting, at our seat of government, a lodge-excluding religion. But at this day and hour, no such religion is planted there. There is neither church, society nor prayer meeting in our National metropolis where faithful testimony is or can be given against the lodge worships, without danger of disturbance; and that after these years of labor.

The National Christian Association, by its constitution and charter, is also required to rescue American politics from the grip of the lodge. But the American, which was established only by large assistance from the Association to promote this end, has ceased to be the organ of the American party, as its editor tells us.

But this is to be said: the American is an interesting paper, and its editor writes and admits able articles against the lodges. But if the Washington building is used to support a lodge-excluding Christianity and anti-secret politics at our national seat of government, sending out lecturers and colporteurs, then the American will answer a great and valuable purpose by aiding our national reform work. All that Mr. Bailey then writes against the lodge will come to a good market and aid mightily the cause which at heart he loves. But he cannot get time and strength to lecture and lead in the movement against the secret lodge system, and at the same time run a government clerkship week-days and his mission on Sabbath and publish three other papers beside the American.

The National Board of Directors is, therefore, doing wisely and well. Indeed, it could do no otherwise without failing to fulfill its trust. Nor should it grieve Prof. Bailey to be treated by the Board of Directors as they would be bound to treat Mr. Moody himself. Much as they love Mr. Moody, rejoice in his school and tracts against the lodges, they would be guilty of malfeasance if they should allow the Washington building to be turned into a headquarters of evangelism; or, as Mr. Bailey proposed to do, turn it into a publishing house; while in four years and a half he has delivered no lectures, as we are aware, in Washington and regions adjacent, in behalf of the reform for which the Washington building was bought, and formally dedicated.

But with the American and other papers, and the Central Union Mission work, with the friends Bro. Bailey has made by his urbane and courteous manners, with friendly relations at the Washington building as a lecture headquarters, and its rents devoted to the support of lecturers in the opening and widening fields about, and especially backed by the Cynosure subscribers who are sending him money and moral support, and the blessing of God in answer to constant, earnest prayer, the change now being made by the Directors will resemble the overflow of the Nile, which feeds nations by the fertility which it produces along the banks. There may be two channels, but there will be but one mighty river.

—Bro. Davidson's report from the New Orleans work came in too late for this issue. We regret always to lay aside such letters. The closer our readers come to the brethren who are in the front, the warmer is their sympathy and more earnest their prayers.

—George W. Clark returned from his Southern trip last week, and spent a few days in this city with his daughters. He is in good health, though somewhat wearied with an arduous campaign in Louisiana and Texas. The Dallas and Galveston papers print very complementary notices of his visit to those cities.

—Mr. A. G. Laird of this city, who has for years been identified in our reform in Chicago, part of the time on the National Board, has helped to enrich the N. C. A. reference library. He has turned over his valuable collection of works on secret societies, donating part of the price. As he is expecting ere long to make a visit to Australia and possiby settle there, he wished to put these volumes where they would do most good.

—Among the visitors at the N. C. A. office last week were Elder J. L. Barlow on his return to Guthrie Center, Iowa; Rev. T. P. Robb, Linton, Iowa; Rev. J. P. Richards of Kansas; Rev. J. A. Richards of Lee Center, Ill.; Rev. A. Ethridge and Rev. W. L. Ferris of this State. Every friend of our reform should plan to visit us while passing through Chicago. The office is not far west of the Union depot, the terminus of the Burlington, Alton, Fort Wayne, Milwaukee and St. Paul and Pan-Handle railroads.

—The little note of Secretary Stoddard's mother, whose remarkable age and activity were mentioned lately in these columns, brings us word of another instance of equal celebrity. This old lady, whose name we have not learned, died in 1859 at the age of 92, and among her descendants are Pres. H. H. George of Geneva College, and Rev. T. P. Robb of Iowa. She was grandmother to the latter. She was for forty years a widow and had fourteen children. Her oldest child at the time of her death was 75, and of her children at that time 10 were living, with 87 grandchildren, 134 great-grandchildren and 4 of the fifth generation—in all a company of 235.

MICHIGAN SOLDIERS, ATTENTION!

To the Grand Army of this Republic:

GREETING:—As soldiers of the cross of Christ, enlisted to strive against all sin, we propose to hold an Anti-Secret Convention at Salem, Washtenaw Co, Mich., beginning May 22, in the evening, at 7:30 oclock.

Let there be a grand rally, with every soldier at his post.

A more extended call soon. Let all interested watch for it. Remember the date, May 22, 23, 24, 1888.

D. A. RICHARDS, Pres.
H. A. DAY, Sec'y.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 27th, 1888.

The House of Representatives has given exclusive attention during the week to the great work of the session—the consideration of the Mills tariff bill. In that end of the Capitol one tariff-speech has followed another at the rate of five a day and two at night, evening sessions having been decided upon for the sake of hastening action on the measure. An agreement has finally been reached after much trouble, that the general debate is to continue two weeks longer, with three night sessions each week, and an equal division of time among the Democratic and Republican speakers.

An unusual scene was witnessed in the Senate Chamber on Tuesday last when Rev. Dr. Mendez, rabbi of the Spanish and Portuguese congregation of New York, opened the Senate with prayer. He rayed with his hat on, according to the Jewish custom. This is the second instance in the history of the Government when a Jew has offered prayer in the Senate.

The sudden passage by the Senate on Tuesday of the bill prohibiting book-making and pool-selling in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, was well timed. It was in view of the approaching races that Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, was anxious to press the bill to passage. Of course the bill passed does not correct the evil, but it gives the pool-sellers a good deal of inconvenience in compelling them to move their room out of the city. "The horse-pool business," said a police official, "is one of the greatest evils that we have to contend with here. It is similar to a game of policy or lottery. It has been the cause of the downfall of many a promising young man. They become infatuated with pool-gambling, and put up their money from day to day until their last dollar is gone. By that time he is in such a frame of mind that he will do anything to raise money, or is tempted to take money that does not belong to him, and the next thing he finds himself behind the bars. Oh, we receive letter after letter from parents concerning their sons' habits of hanging "about and spending all their money in these places."

A cigarette bill was introduced in the Senate on Tuesday by Senator Chace, of Rhode Island, and furnished the occasion for quite a little impromptu discussion. Petitions were presented signed by eighty-six pastors of churches, 554 superintendents, officers and teachers of public schools, and 257 physicians of the District of Columbia, asking legislation to prohibit the sale of cigars, cigarettes, or tobacco to boys under sixteen years of age. In his remarks upon the subject, Senator Stewart, of Nevada, stated that the use of cigarettes was destroying the rising generation and effecting injuriously the prosperity of the country.

The Chief Justiceship is still an unsettled question. The party of Congressmen who called upon the President a few days ago to advise against the appointment of Minister Phelps to that office, could not make sure what Mr. Cleveland intended to do about it. Indeed, they said they were unable to form any idea from their interview with the President whether the latter ever had any intention of appointing Mr. Phelps. "I would like to see the man who could go to the White House on such an errand as ours," said Representative Campbell, of New York, "and come back with any knowledge of what the President intended to do." One thing he noticed that surprised him, however, and that was that Mr. Cleveland has a wonderful knowledge of the men in this country. At that interview he said the names of a great many good lawyers were mentioned to him, and in every instance the President seemed to know more about the man than was known by the one who suggested the name.

THE HOME.

"GOD KNOWETH BEST."

Sometime, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forever more have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned.
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue,
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called, he heeded not our cry
Because his wisdom to the end could see;
And, even as prudent parents disallow
To much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.

And if sometimes commingled with life's wine
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this portion for our lips to drink.
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach his face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so,
But wear your sorrow with obedient grace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend;
And that sometimes the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life
And stand within, and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find the key.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies, pure and white unfold.
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart;
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if through patient toil we reach the land
Where tired feet with sandals loose may rest,
Where we shall clearly know and understand—
I think that we shall say, God knew the best! —Anon.

AMONG THE POTS.

"Though ye have lien among the pots, yet ye shall be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."—Ps. 68:13

This text has been a sealed passage for ages. Bishop Lowth declared it "unintelligible." In the latest work on the Psalms, "The Treasury of David," Mr. Spurgeon calls it "a hard passage, a difficult nut to crack." But new light is constantly breaking out of the Scriptures. Miss Whately, traveling in the East, observed a fact which gives us the lost key to this text and unlocks its beautiful imagery. In her work entitled, "Ragged Life in Egypt," she thus speaks concerning the flat roofs of the houses:

"They are usually in a state of great litter; were it not that an occasional clearance is made, they would assuredly give way under the accumulation of rubbish. One thing seems never cleared away, however, and that is the heap of old broken pitchers, sherds and pots that are piled up in some corner. A little before sunset numberless pigeons (or doves) suddenly emerge from behind the pitchers and pots and other rubbish where they have been sleeping in the heat of the day or pecking about to find food. They dart upward and career through the air in large circles—their outspread wings catching the glow of the sun's slanting rays, so that they really resemble yellow 'gold glow;' then, as they wheel round and are seen against the light, they appear as if turned into molten silver, most of them being pure white or else very light colored. This may seem fanciful, but the effect of light in these regions can scarcely be described to those who have not seen it. Evening after evening we watched the circling flight of doves, and always observed the same appearance." "Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

This beautiful passage is thus illuminated for the first time in modern days. It is a precious, comforting truth to the children of God. The doctrine unfolded is the promise of God that a holy character may be maintained in this sinful world, despite unfavorable surroundings. From among the pots, covered with dust and dirt, these beautiful doves rise clean and unsoiled, to soar into the heavens, flashing their wings covered with silver and their feathers glistening like yellow gold.

Many Christians find their lot cast amid the dust and grime of the pots, but they need not be soiled thereby. Out of such conditions they may soar unsoiled, on wings of faith gleaming like silver and clothed in beatitudes shining like burnished gold.

No honorable business will grime the soul. The machinist, mechanic, artisan and laborer may have grimy work to do, but he can be clean as a dove in character. Your character is not cheapened because your work is in the kitchen or at the forge, nor is it ennobled because you handle diamonds, write poems, thrill breathless audiences, or sit behind mahogany office desks. There are men in coal mines with souls like the wings of a dove; and there are men in decorated mansions with souls sooty and black with sin as the miner's face with coal dust. One has the soot on his face, the other on his soul.—Dr. J. O. Peck, in Homiletic.

"WHAT MUST I GIVE UP?"

"Where," it is asked, "does this common ground end, and the realm of the world begin?" We may be helped to answer if we look first at the opposite boundary, and ask where the common ground ends and the domain of the church begins. What is the gate through which every one passes who enters the church? Is it not the confession of subjection to Christ? Within that enclosure Christ is recognized as supreme. His word is law. His authority is paramount. His sovereignty is undisputed. The man who enters there pledges himself to honor Christ everywhere; and so long as he is where he can be recognized and understood as being loyal to Christ, everything is well. Now, with that thought in mind, pass to the other side, and where now do you find the world begins? It commences at the point where another than Christ is recognized and acknowledged as ruler. Call it fashion, or pleasure, or whatever else.

The moment you pass into a place where, not Jesus, but another is recognized and reputed as the sovereign, you are guilty of conforming to the world. Wherever the world is acknowledged as ruler, there, even though in the abstract he might think the place indifferent, the Christian should not enter. Gesler's cap in the abstract was nothing at all—a mere thing of cloth and feathers; and, in the abstract, it was a small matter to bow to it; but bowing to that cap meant acknowledging allegiance to Austria, and William Tell showed his patriotism by refusing so to honor it. The question, therefore, is not whether in other circumstances the things done in the world's inclosure might not be done by the Christian without sin, but whether he should do them there, where his doing of them is recognized as homage to the world. Whose flag is over a place of amusement? Whose image and superscription are on a custom or practice? Christ's? or the world's? These are the testing questions. That which a Christian renounces when he makes confession of Christ is the supremacy of the world, and every time he goes where he is understood as acknowledging that, he is guilty of treason against the royalty of Christ.—Wm. M. Taylor, D. D.

"MORE THAN THEY ALL."

A very humble but God-fearing Scotch couple had a son—their only child. From his birth, they devoted him to the Lord, and sought, as his mind opened, to teach him the way of truth, and to impress his heart with the love of Jesus.

To their great delight, he yielded in early youth to the call of the Gospel; and at length he offered himself for mission work among the natives of the west coast of Africa. While studying for this purpose, his parents labored hard, and denied themselves not a little, in order to support him at college; and when he left for the foreign field, his old mother spun harder than ever, so that, by the sale of her thread, she might help her son in his noble work for Jesus.

By-and-by her husband was taken home to the Father's house above; and though she well knew where he had gone, nature would have its tears. But a few weeks had passed, when a heavier grief had to be endured. Tidings came to hand of the drowning of her son when he was crossing an African river in the discharge of his missionary duties.

Soon, however, did she dry her weeping eyes, and with humble cheerfulness remarked, "My son is nearer to me now in heaven than he was in Africa." For a considerable period she had managed, by great diligence and economy, to send him £10 a year to assist him in his work; and when he died she did not cease her labor for Jesus. "Now my dear son is gone," said the noble old woman, "my £10 a year shall go to some other servant of Christ."

This beautiful example of consecration recalls the case of the poor widow, whose two mites, cast into the temple treasury, were more precious in the Saviour's eyes than all the gifts of the wealthy. "This poor widow," said he, "hath cast in more than they all." Love to her God impelled the sacrifice; and with what emotion did the Lord Jesus behold the act!—Presbyterian Messenger.

WATCHING FOR THE COMING LORD.

The Christian is to watch for the coming of the Lord. This includes not only the negative side of guarding against evil, but diligence in the discharge of Christian duty, together with a lively expectation of the Lord's return. This latter is graphically described by Peter as not only "looking for" but "hasting unto the coming of the day of God." Whether this means, "hastening to get ready for the day," or "eagerly reaching out toward it," we have the same idea of a living faith in its approach, and activity in Christian life inspired by the nearness and certainty of its coming.

It may seem strange that the early Christians should have been required to take this attitude toward a day that was then confessedly so very far away. They were destined never to see it, and yet they were to be constantly on the lookout for it. Several reasons may be given in explanation of this. (a.) The distance of the event had not been indicated to them. They knew just what we now know, no more, no less,—that the day was coming, that its appearance would be sudden and take many unawares, but that time though definitely fixed was not revealed. .... (c.) The feeling of the godly in reaching out toward that day is the same whether the time be long or short. It was therefore proper that it should be enjoined on all, and maintained by all; and even if thousands of generations should be kept watching for it when it comes, its awful grandeur will show it to be well worth waiting long and patiently for its appearing.—Rev. David M'Fall.

OLD TIME AND TOMMY.

In the morning it was "Hurry, Tommy, or you'll not be in time for school;" at noon, "I think you'll have time to do that errand after dinner;" and at night, "Now, Tommy, the clock has just struck bedtime;" while at school he was rushed through one class to prepare for another. Now and then he had a playtime—five minutes long, so it seemed to Tommy.

One evening it was very cold and stormy outside, but bright and warm in the house. Tommy was looking at pictures, and his mother was busy with her sewing. Suddenly Tommy exclaimed: "There! I knew the old fellow was lean and tall; for I, with my short legs, can never get away from him. I think Old Time must love to drive little boys."

"Oh!" said mamma, laughing, "I have just found out who 'the old fellow' is, to whom you have taken such a dislike. What does he seem to be doing in the picture?"

"He is resting on a scythe like a farmer, and in one hand has a—a—"

"An hour glass," finished mamma.

"Is that what he keeps the hours in?" asked Tommy.

"No; that is an imaginary picture, and the hour glass stands for the clocks and other time-keepers."

"What can keep time but clocks and watches?"

"Before clocks were invented people sometimes told the time by the shadow on the sun-dial; then they had hour glasses and half-hour glasses, putting in enough sand, water or mercury to run through the little opening from the upper part of the glass to the lower in just an hour or half an hour, then turning it over."

"I read once," said Tommy, "that people, somewhere, burned candles an hour long. I'm glad we have clocks. But what does the scythe mean?"

"That as time goes on, many people, young as well as old, die."

"I don't like to think of that."

"Do you not think," answered his mother, "that if we used the time we have given us in the right way, and really trusted in our Father, we should not think it so dreadful to go from one life to another that is better?".

Then she said, "Keep your eyes and ears open tomorrow, and learn all you can about time, and in the evening we will have another talk."

Tommy was up early next day, intent on getting ahead of time, if possible. He spent five minutes in the clock-keeper's store, and listened to the ticking of the many clocks, each intent on telling all it knew of time.

Tommy tried hard to be diligent in school, and though a little absent-minded in the reading-class, succeeded pretty well.

When his mother was ready, he began: "O mamma! I thought about those clocks all day; and when the scholars were all talking together at recess, I couldn't help laughing. There were the little clocks that talked so fast, and those that talked so loud and made every word so big. When the teacher called them to order, I thought of the regulator ticking so quietly and steadily and always right.

"Can you think of any one who is the only true regulator of all our thoughts, words and actions?" asked Tommy's mother.

"Jesus Christ," he answered softly.

"Wasn't it strange," he continued after a pause, "our lesson in arithmetic to-day was about 'sixty seconds make one minute, sixty minutes make one hour?'" and Tommy proudly recited the time-table up to "one hundred years make a century."

"But, mamma, I don't see how any one can take care of all these months and years; it makes me dizzy to think of them."

"When you ate your dinner to-day, did you take all the meat and potato at one mouthful, and your pudding at one swallow?"

"Why, no! I couldn't," and Tommy laughed and blushed, for he had been reproved for eating so fast and taking such big mouthfuls.

After thinking it over, he said, "But I can't remember every little minute, either."

"No; though, if you try to do each little duty at the right time and faithfully, and be gentle and unselfish in your play, you will find at the close of the day that the minutes have been rightly used, and that the hours have taken care of themselves. There is a story that the devil went fishing for men, suiting the bait to each person; but he caught the idlers the easiest, for they swallowed the hook without any bait on it."

Tommy understood that, for he knew that if he had a fit of idleness, he was quite sure to do some mischief that he would not have thought of otherwise.

"Do you think God notices how we use every hour and minute?" asked Tommy.

"Certainly he does. Some one says, 'Hours have wings, fly up to the Author of time and carry news of their usage. All our prayers cannot entreat one of them either to return or slacken his pace.'

"Now look at the picture again. Old Time does not look so very unkind, does he? He is very just, for he brings each person the same number of minutes in a day. If we will put our hand in his, and walk patiently by his side, he will lead us safely through the years, until God bids him put our hand in that of eternity; for God gives us time that we may prepare for eternity. Now, my child—"

"Yes, I know, it is bedtime. I'll go right off. I'll not call the old gentleman mean any more;" then in a lower tone, "and I'll ask God to help me use the time he sends me in the best way."

"That is right," said mamma, bidding him goodnight.—S. S. Times.

THE GRUMBLER.

HIS YOUTH.

His cap was too thick, and his coat was too thin;
He couldn't be quiet; he hated a din;
He hated to write, and he hated to read;
He was certainly very much injured indeed!
He must study and toil over work he detested;
His parents were strict, and he never was rested;
He knew he was wretched as wretched could be,
There was no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

HIS MANHOOD.

His farm was too small, his taxes too big;
He was selfish and lazy, and cross as a pig;
His wife was too silly, his children too rude,
And just because he was uncommonly good!
He hadn't got money enough to spare;
He had nothing at all fit to eat or to wear;
He knew he was wretched as wretched could be,
There was no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

HIS OLD AGE.

He finds he has sorrows more deep than his fears;
He grumbles to think he has grumbled for years;
He grumbles to think he has grumbled away
His home and his children, his life's little day;
But alas! 'tis too late! it is no use to say
That his eyes are too dim and his hair is too gray;
He knows he is wretched as wretched can be,
There is no one so wretchedly wretched as he.

SLAVERY IN BRAZIL.

With the year 1887 slavery became extinct in three Brazilian provinces, although the gradual emancipation will not be completed throughout the empire until all the slaves born before September, 1871, are dead. These three provinces, Ceara, Alto Amazonas and Rio Grande do Sul, have, by a spontaneous and voluntary movement among the slaveowners, and by private philanthropy, anticipated the general emancipation. In September, 1871, a law was passed in Brazil that after that date every child born should be free. The same law provided an emancipation fund to be annually applied to the ransom of a certain number of slaves.

The Roman Catholic clergy of Rio Grande do Sul, which contains a large percentage of black people, have led an anti-slavery movement, and formed a plan to celebrate the jubilee of Pope Leo XIII.—the fiftieth anniversary of the pope's ordination as a priest—by the extinction of slavery in the provinces. They believed that no better way could be found to make the pope's name memorable among the Negroes of that region, who are nearly all devout Catholics. In 1884 there were set free in Rio Grande do Sul 40,000 slaves, and only 9,000 remained to emancipate. These were all liberated at the end of last year.

Brazil is the only American state in which slavery exists, and there, as we have seen, it will exist not many years longer. It is an interesting circumstance that, with the abolition of this barbarous system, which the slaveholders not many years ago regarded as necessary to the prosperity of the country, the Brazilian Empire is rapidly advancing, both in wealth and in education.

The certainty of the extinction of slavery has attracted immigration from Europe, mostly of German, Swiss, English and Italians, who go to the southern provinces of the empire, where the climate is coolest and most settled. One southern province alone, Sao Paulo, during the year 1887, received more than thirty thousand immigrants from Europe. The whole country has felt an economic growth, and the Brazilians begin to hope for the development of their manufactures. Heretofore the country has been almost wholly an agricultural one. The climate of the southern part of the empire is not unfavorable to manufactures. A state of slavery, however, seems always to have been unfavorable, wherever it has prevailed, to any other industry than the tilling of the soil, and is not even favorable to the highest development of that one industry. It is not strange, therefore, that the Brazilians throughout the empire should be inclined to hasten the emancipation of their slaves.—Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

LINCOLN ON TEMPERANCE.

When the committee of the nominating convention came to Abraham Lincoln at Springfield, Ill., to inform him of his nomination, some of his neighbors, acquainted with his temperate habits and consequently unprepared to give a political committee the usual treats, sent to his house some bottles of champagne, but he said: "It won't do here," and ordered it back where the committee might be assembled. When offered wine at Cincinnati on his way to take the reins of government, he said: "For thirty years I have been a temperance man, and I am too old to change;" again, when asked by a friend, after his inauguration, "if he was not overawed in addressing that immense audience of intellectual men?" "Not half so much," he replied, "as he had been in addressing a temperance meeting."

Afterward during the war the Sons of Temperance were holding a meeting in Washington, a delegation was sent to President Lincoln asking that drunken officers might be discharged from the service, and that facilities might be extended to organize divisions and hold temperance meetings in the departments and hospitals about the city. From Mr. Lincoln's reply, a report of which follows, it will be seen that, while favoring the effort for temperance, he gave no favorable answer to the request to start a lodge propaganda among the troops. His reply to the delegation was as follows:

"As a matter of course, it will not be possible for me to make a response co-extensive with the address which you have presented to me. If I were better known than I am, you would not need to be told that in the advocacy of the cause of temperance you have a friend and sympathizer in me.

"When I was a young man—long ago—before the Sons of Temperance, as an organization, had an existence, I, in an humble way, made temperance speeches, and I think I may say that to this day I have never, by my example, belied what I then said.

"In regard to the suggestions which you make for the purpose of the advancement of the cause of temperance in the army, I cannot make particular response to them at this time. To prevent intemperance in the army is even a part of the articles of war. It is a part of the law of the land, and was so, I presume, long ago, to dismiss officers for drunkenness. I am not sure that, consistent with the public service, more can be done than has been done. All, therefore, that I can promise you is (if you will be pleased to furnish me with a copy of your address) to have it submitted to the proper department, and have it considered whether it contains any suggestions which will improve the cause of temperance and repress the cause of drunkenness in the army any better than it is already done. I can promise no more than that.

"I think that the reasonable men of the world have long since agreed that intemperance is one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, of all the evils amongst mankind. That is not a matter of dispute, I believe. That the disease exists, and that it is a very great one, is agreed upon by all.

"The mode of cure is one about which there may be differences of opinion. You have suggested that in an army—our army—drunkenness is a great evil, and one which, while it exists to a very great extent, we cannot expect to overcome so entirely as to have such successes in our arms as we might have without it. This, undoubtedly, is true, and while it is, perhaps, rather a bad source to derive comfort from, nevertheless, in a hard struggle, I don't know but that it is some consolation to be aware that there is some intemperance on the other side, too; and that they have no right to beat us in physical combat on that ground."

NATIONAL ANTI-NUISANCE LEAGUE.

"No Legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. Government is organized with a view to their preservation and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them."—U. S. Supreme Court.

This League has been formed to give practical expression to the logic of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the "Kansas Cases," in which decision this court cites and reaffirms the doctrine it laid down in the "Mississippi Lottery Cases," in 1879.

If it is unconstitutional to jeopardize the morals of a community by the maintenance of a gambling scheme, it is insisted that it is equally unconstitutional to jeopardize and impair both the morals and health of a community by the maintenance of the liquor traffic, one of the most demoralizing agencies, financially, socially, morally, physically, and politically, the world knows. By incorporating it in this recent decision, the Supreme Court has settled any controversy as to whether the doctrine applies to the liquor traffic. The evidence to substantiate the demoralization caused by the rum curse is overwhelmingly abundant, is all of it available, and is in black and white. Indeed, no stronger testimony against it can be produced than is found in this very decision.

Under this and numerous other judicial declarations, it is proposed to institute suits in several States and Territories, seeking the abatement, by summary proceedings, of the saloon as a PUBLIC NUISANCE The success of this movement will practically annihilate the liquor traffic.

To perform this work in part; to advise, counsel, direct, and co-operate in like action at all possible points; to everywhere agitate the doctrine herein upheld, and thus to educate the public mind up to the point of demanding and compelling judicial decisions in harmony with this sublime teaching, is the purpose and work of this League.

The hearty co-operation of all persons of like mind and heart is asked, irrespective of social or political differences. Any service that can be rendered individuals or communities along the lines herein indicated will be cheerfully and freely given. Frank C. Smith of No. 10 East 14th St., New York, is the secretary of the society.

DON'T BE AFRAID

to express yourself about the whisky question. The highest court of these United States has decided the liquor business a nuisance, and such being the case, are you not doing wrong—yes, committing a sin—by keeping your mouth shut on the subject of prohibition? It is your duty, as a Christian, to give publicity to the facts. Unfortunately, the lovers of drink need arguments to tell them it is wrong to sell the accursed stuff, called whisky, and wrong to drink it. The Christian people must array themselves against the infernal traffic, if they want to do the cause of Christ the most good, for the saloon is the greatest enemy of God.

At the present time there is more respect shown to Christians and God-fearing people by every and all classes of sinners than is shown by the saloon-owners and its devotees. If you want to save drinkers, remove temptations from their path, and, when they are from under the influence of the appetite for drink, you can argue with them and not before. Thousands of men sign a pledge to stop drinking, and mean it when they do so. But the appetite has a hold on them, and they pass so many dens of vice on their way about the city that it is impossible for them to withstand the temptation without the power of the Saviour to assist them, and they not asking him for help, from the fact that their reasoning faculties are warped and twisted in such a way as to lead them nearer the saloon and farther and farther from Him who has the power to save, even a poor, weak, fallen drunkard.—Southern Journal.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VII, Second Quarter.—May 13.

SUBJECT.—The Lord's Supper.—Matt. 26: 17-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—For even Christ, our passover, is sacrificed for us.—1 Cor. 5: 7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

THE SACRAMENTAL BREAD. V. 26. (1) The element. Jesus took bread—literally, "the loaf," one of the thin cakes left from the passover. (2) The actions. Blessed—made it a means of blessing by asking a blessing on it; thanksgiving was mingled with supplication (1 Cor. 11: 24). Brake—as a sign that his body was to be broken. And gave—so Christ offers himself to all who would be nourished. (3) The significance. This is my body—Paul adds, "broken for you" (2 Cor. 11: 24); Luke, "given for you" (Luke 22: 19). The bread represents the nourishment provided for the soul by the bruising of his body. The bread remains bread; but the benefits of Christ's redemption are present with it for all who have faith to receive them.

Observe, Jesus took bread—not the flesh of the paschal lamb—in selecting an emblem of his broken body. He chose nothing that could leave room to suppose that his expiation was not complete, as the flesh of the lamb would have done. On the other hand, bread represents that which is wholly ready to be received for nourishment. The reaping and threshing are over; the grains have been crushed beneath the millstone; the bread itself has been baked in the oven. Everything has been made for appropriation. So is it with the Lord Jesus Christ as our propitiation. For our sakes he was made flesh. For our sakes he endured a life of poverty and trial. For our sakes he was bruised beneath the upper and nether millstones of Jehovah's wrath. And now the Gospel message is, "All things are ready; come ye to the supper!"

THE SACRAMENTAL CUP. (1) The element. V. 27. He took the cup—containing wine, called in v. 29, "This fruit of the vine." Wine is not mentioned in the Old Testament accounts of the passover, but it had long been used by the Jews (Mishna).

(2) The actions. Gave thanks—offering a second prayer of thanksgiving. If Jesus gave thanks when he knew that the ordinance he was instituting pointed to the suffering he was to endure that very night, how much more should we? He gave thanks because he was providing for the redemption of perishing souls. We should give thanks that he has made such provision and is freely offering it to all who will accept Gave it to them—so is he offering the cleansing virtue of his blood to all who will receive it. Drink ye—representing our need of personally receiving Jesus. All of it—All of you drink some of it.

(3) The significance. V. 29. This is my blood—representing the benefits purchased by the shedding of his blood. Blood of the new testament—Revision, "blood of the covenant"—the covenant of grace. The covenant with Abraham was made in connection with sacrifice (Gen. 15). So also was it with the covenant made on Sinai (Ex. 24: 8). Shed for many—Christ did not die in vain. Many shall be saved (Rev. 7). For the remission—that their sins may be (1) pardoned; (2) put away.

ITS NAMES AND THEIR SIGNIFICANCE. "The Lord's Supper is called a Sacrament, that is, a sign and an oath. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace; an oath by which we bind our souls with a bond unto the Lord. It is called the Lord's Supper, because it was first instituted in the evening, and at the close of the Passover Supper, and because the Lord instituted it, and in it we feed upon him. It is called the Communion, because we therein commune with Christ and his people. It is called the Eucharist, a thanksgiving, because Christ in the institution of it gave thanks, and because we, in partaking of it, must give thanks also."—Buck.

THE NEED OF PREPARATION TO OBSERVE IT. "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup" (1 Cor. 11: 28).

"It is required of them that would worthily partake of the Lord's Supper, that they examine themselves of their knowledge to discern the Lord's body, of their faith to feed upon him, of their repentance, love, and new obedience: lest, coming unworthily, they eat and drink judgment to themselves."

"For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation (Rev. Ver., "judgment") unto himself."

Shall we, therefore, remain away from the Lord's table through fear of eating and drinking judgment? Nay, to do so would be to take our place with the world; and is it not better even to receive judgment—fatherly chastisement—from the Lord, than to "be condemned with the world"? And "when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world."

And there is something better still: "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged" (1 Cor. 11: 29-32).

AN ANNOUNCEMENT. V. 29. I will not drink hence forth—This was the last sacramental occasion he would observe with them in the flesh. When I drink it new—A new kind of feast, that of which the Lord's Supper is only a foretaste.

THE CLOSING HYMN. V. 30. Commentators generally agree that this was probably some part of the Great Hallel (Psalms 113-118), which was usually sung at passovers. "It was customary to commence the Passover service with singing or chanting Psalms 113 and 114, and to conclude with the 115th to the 118th from the Scripture, in which not only the events of the exodus are commemorated, but there is a direct reference to the sorrows of the Messiah and his resurrection."—Jacobus.

After referring to the same Jewish custom, as proven by the Talmud, Dr. Broadus adds: "It is interesting to read these psalms in this connection, remembering that Jesus himself took part in the singing. The term hymn must not here be taken in our common sense as differing from a psalm, nor is there any real distinction between the two in Col. 3: 16; Eph. 5: 19."

PRACTICAL POINTS. 1. The Lord's Supper is our Saviour's keepsake, reminding us of his death, and assuring us of his return.

2 We are liable to forget him, notwithstanding his great loving kindness.

3. We must feed upon Jesus's broken body and shed blood, if we would inherit eternal life.

4. We should thankfully observe his dying command. Even he gave thanks when instituting it, although about to suffer.—United Presbyterian Bible Teacher.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The young people of the church in Bartlett, Ill., Rev. Alexander Thomson, pastor, are supporting a scholarship in one of the Utah mission schools.

—Rev. Thomas L. Johnson, an African missionary, recently addressed a large and rather distinguished audience in the big dining room of a Chicago restaurant, where several years before he was head waiter. He spoke on invitation of his former employer, and made an effective appeal for aid in sending colored missionaries to Africa.

—Mrs. Prindle, so long and successfully connected with the Anchorage Mission for unfortunate women in this city, was obliged to resign last fall on account of ill health. Now that she is recovered she goes this week to Columbus, Ohio, under engagement to take charge of a mission in that city. Mrs. Prindle has been, under God, a blessing to multitudes as a teacher of the Word, who has herself been taught of the Holy Spirit.

—The Reformed Presbyterian congregation of Morning Sun, Iowa, held their communion services on Sabbath, April 15th, Rev. Isaiah Faris assisting the pastor, Rev. C. D. Trumbull. There was an accession of ten to the membership of the church.

—A meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Reformed Presbyterian church was lately held at Beaver Falls, Pa. The principal aim of the Society is the establishment of a mission among the Indians. Prof. W. A. Coleman having been appointed to investigate the relations existing between Indian missions of other churches and the Government, placed the results of his inquiries before the convention in an interesting paper, showing that the conditions placed upon Indian missions by the Government did in no way interfere with the principles of the church and placed no obstacle in the way of establishing such a mission. Prof. Coleman received the hearty thanks of the ladies, and was appointed to represent the Society at Synod and urge the opening of an Indian mission.

—There was an attendance of over seven hundred ladies, four hundred from out of town, at the opening of the seventeenth annual session of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions for the Northwest, at Freeport, Ill., Wednesday.

—The Churchman will publish in its next issue a letter to the pope from the Right Rev. Monsignor Leon Bouland, of New York, withdrawing from the Catholic church. Monsignor Bouland asserts that he cannot subscribe to the teachings and doctrines proclaimed by the Vatican Council, nor can he admit the pretensions of ultramontanism, because it claims absolute authority in scientific, philosophical, social and political matters, as well as in religious affairs.

—The Presbytery of Louisville has adopted the following concerning the union of the Northern and Southern churches: "In reference to the question of union between the Presbyterian church in the United States of America, and the Presbyterian church in the United States, commonly designated as the Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches, the Presbytery of Louisville, now in session, expresses the following judgment, viz: Until our Northern brethren can see their way clear to adopt the policy of organizing the colored people of the Northern States into separate churches, presbyteries and synods of their own; and until there shall be a clearer and fuller understanding brought to bear upon the minds of many of our people in reference to their interpretation and application of those points of our common ecclesiastical doctrines that now deal with secular and political questions, we judge that the quiet, peace, and prosperity of both churches will be best secured by ceasing to agitate or prosecute the question of organizing a union, at least for the present."

—The mission house of the French Protestant churches was recently opened in Paris. This beautiful building, which has cost 242,000 francs, is more than the centre of the administrative machinery of French Protestant Missions.

—One of the German papers states that "at Vienna last year no less than 363 Jews became Christians," and another paper tells us that "at no period since the first century have conversions from Judaism to Christianity been so frequent as they are at the present."

—Mr. Christie, of the Central Turkey Mission, reports his attendance at communion services at three places within a week, eighteen new members, in all, confessing their faith in Jesus Christ. One of the places was Tarsus of Cilicia, no mean city, one of whose ancient citizens, when he found Christ, went out to testify, both to the Jews and Greeks, the Gospel of the grace of God.

—Notable spiritual results of special labor for souls are reported in a number of churches in Northeastern Connecticut. Marked mention is made of the churches of Danielsonville, Windham and Putnam. Among other churches which have felt revivifying presence those of Plainfield and Brooklyn are spoken of. There has been no revivalist among the churches. Early in the year at the ministerial association great hungering for spiritual blessing was felt, and pastors made plans for rendering assistance to each other. Special services were arranged for one or two weeks in each place. Souls were almost daily brought to a decision, and the work is still quietly progressing.

—The United Presbyterian churches of Allegheny, Pa., have been remarkably blessed during the past winter. In some of them services have been held almost continuously. On a recent Sabbath the Second United Presbyterian church of that city received sixty-six on confession of faith, making an addition of one hundred and fifty-nine since December.

—The Salvation Army of London have established a cheap food depot at the East End, to relieve the distress which prevails there. For one penny an adult receives refreshment and a night's lodging, soup and bread. For a halfpenny he gets either bread or soup.

—Mr. Spurgeon recently stated during a Tabernacle evening meeting, that he was completely inundated with letters of sympathy with him in the present controversy, many of them containing enclosures of money for his training college and other enterprises.

We often use the word charity while failing to catch and appreciate the fullness and beauty of its meaning. We use it as a synonym for beneficence when its meaning arises higher and has a far wider sweep. Acts of a noble and praiseworthy beneficence may not be acts of charity. One may feed the hungry and clothe the naked; he may build and endow hospitals and institutions of learning, and may largely relieve human suffering and yet know nothing of the scriptural charity. Charity means love. It is the word used by the Master in the days of his incarnation and suffering to express his redeeming love for man; it is the word used by inspiration to express the love of the redeemed for their Redeemer—the love that prompts the song of thanksgiving on earth and the eternal ascriptions of heavenly praise. We illustrate the true meaning of scriptural charity only when we feed the hungry, clothe the naked, minister to the wants of the suffering, and do good unto all men as we have opportunity, because we love them with the same kind of love felt for us by the exalted Master when he died for our redemption and salvation. As the charity, or love, felt by him for us covers our many sins, so our charity for others should cover theirs.—Interior.

LODGE NOTES.

The Mormon establishment or church in this country comprises 162,383 persons.

An "Order of Mutual Protection" is one of the latest developments in lodgery in this city.

Rev. Myron Reed, of Denver, is talked of for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Colorado. Mr. Reed is pastor of the 1st Congregational church and a Freemason.

The committee of five appointed by the anti-administration Knights of Labor at Chicago last October, Wednesday night issued a circular to the order, declaring that the membership has dwindled from 702,000 to 240,000; that Powderly's special call for funds for lecturers was really to keep the order out of bankruptcy, and calling on the knights to join the opposition.

General J. C. Smith, Grand Scribe of Odd-fellows, Grand Master of Masons, Past Grand Commander of Knights Templar (also Grand ex-Treasurer of the State of Illinois, Grand Lieut. Governor, and would-be Grand Governor) is to institute a new encampment of Odd-fellows in Chicago. This will be quite an event in Patriarchal Odd-fellowship in this city, the papers say, as over 125 candidates will be admitted, advanced and exalted.

The G. A. R. has adopted a new button of copper bronze with a star-shaped opening under which is shown the color indicating the branch of service of wearer—blue for infantry, red for artillery, yellow for cavalry, etc. The star is five-pointed, and is said to be a distinctive badge of the order. It has also in like manner been held as a distinctive badge of Masonry. To which does it belong; or do both badge and G. A. R. belong to the older lodge?

The two orders of railway conductors and railway section foremen are strongly and firmly opposed to all strikes, and firm believers that no good grows out of them. They believe that there should be a better understanding between the railroad companies and their employes; that they should have greater regard for each other; that no such actions as those which brought about the great strike on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy should be countenanced, as they only serve to lower, in the estimation of the public, both parties; that mutual esteem should be the supreme law and common welfare the only aim.

Masonry is losing its character as a "very benevolent institution" about Chicago, and extraordinary measures are needed to keep up a fair show. A meeting to organize a Masonic Board of Relief for Cook county was held lately in the armory of Apollo Commandery, of Chicago. Twenty-two lodges were represented Mr. D. C. Cregier presided in the absence of Grand Master John C Smith. Chairman Warvelle presented the report of the committee, which organized the Board of Relief on the plan common to all Eastern cities where it has been established. Each subordinate Masonic body which becomes a member of the board is entitled to elect one representative, who shall take part in its councils and procedure. Aid will be given to "temporary sojourners" in the county, and not to residents.

BUSINESS.

Read the Chalfant plan on page 5 of this number, and write what you think of it. Decoration Day will soon be here. Shall we have a special number for that time? How many copies will you take?

SPIKE THEIR GUNS.

A few dollars expended in purchasing tracts and scattering them about through the community will perhaps do more to spike the guns of noisy secretists than anything else that could be suggested. Men have heard the lodges praised so often and so boldly, that they have come to believe that they are what they profess to be. It is high time that the war is carried into Africa itself. This is the work which the N. C. A. has in view, and would be glad to push forward in every quarter of the land. Who will help to do it?

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND; OR, Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY; OR THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH;

BY JENNIE L. HARDIN.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason—and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

HOME AND HEALTH.

PURIFYING WATER.

Alum as a purifier is so grossly misunderstood by most people, says the Sanitary Era, not excepting always the learned, that there is no wonder in the prejudice that prevails against the very name of it. In Richmond, Va., where alum has been a customary palliative for the muddiness of the James River water, the intemperate use of it has made the remedy seem nearly as bad as the disease; a lump of alum in the pitcher being in many families as usual as a lump of ice, or more. It not only clarifies the water, but leaves a plentiful solution of alum to spare for flavoring it. No wonder it is offensive and unwholesome. Only the other day we chronicled, with a note of "admiration," the advice of a Philadelphia physician, to purify the offensive Schuylkill water by means of "a few ounces (!) of alum to the gallon;" that is, a few thousands of times the necessary and proper proportion of the coagulant, as taken by rain water from the clay in the soil, in passing through on its way to Nature's subterranean filter beds, or as infused by the artificial process adopted from Nature, as a preparation for effective filtering.

It is hard to make people believe that half a grain or 1-960 of an ounce, is enough to entangle the microscopic and even the soluble impurities of a gallon of water in exfilterable masses. With our crude natural notion of power, as according to mass, it may not be possible to conceive how a pin's head of alum in solution instantly diffuses itself and acts throughout a gallon of water. But the fact is beyond dispute. It is proved by daily experience in a multitude of Hyatt filters, where this imperceptible constituent insures perfect water, or demonstrates its necessity equally well by the change if omitted.

The laboratory proofs of science are also decisive to the same effect. There was published in the Sanitary Era in 1886, a report by Professor Austen, of Rutgers College, detailing a most beautiful demonstration, by comparative analysis, of the magical power of this coagulant in extremely minute proportions. Not only was the albuminoid ammonia in solution coagulated and filtered out to the extreme extent of 85 parts from 95; the addition of more alum to the water afterwards had no further effect, thus proving that the minute quantity had done the work at once and done it all. Moreover, Prof. Austen's tests for alum in the purified water could not reveal a trace; although, as Professor Chandler states, Nature commonly leaves in her purified water a larger proportion than is used altogether (and used up) in the artificial process. It is probable, however, that precipitation of the subtle impurities by the aid of a coagulant would require considerable time, and therefore it is not to be expected that any high degree of purity would be practicable without the ready action of a filter.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

HEALING PROPERTIES OF WATER.

There is no remedy of such general application and none so easily attainable as water, and yet nine persons in ten will pass by it in an emergency, to seek for something of less efficacy. There are but few cases of illness where water should not occupy the highest place as a remedial agent. A strip of flannel or a napkin folded lengthwise and dipped in hot water and wrung out and then applied around the neck of a child that has croup, and then covered over with a larger and thicker towel, will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

A towel folded several times, dipped in hot water, wrung out, and then applied over the seat of the pain in toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works like magic. We have known cases that have resisted other treatment for hours yield in ten minutes to this. There is nothing that will so promptly cut short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat, or rheumatism, as hot water, when applied promptly and thoroughly. Pieces of cotton batting dipped in hot water, and kept applied to old sores, new cuts, bruises and sprains is the treatment now generally adopted in hospitals. Sprained ankle has been cured in an hour by showering with hot water, poured from a height of three feet. Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic, and hot water taken freely half an hour before bedtime is the best of cathartics in case of constipation, while it has a most a soothing effect on the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued for a few months, with proper attention to diet, will alleviate any case of dyspepsia.—Oracle.

"One breaks the glass and cuts his fingers;
But they whom Truth and Wisdom lead,
Can gather honey from a weed."

Those who are wise, and who love the truth, will believe what we say when we tell them that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has done more to relieve the sufferings of women, than all other medicines now known to science. It cures all irregularities, internal inflammation and ulceration, displacements and kindred troubles. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

That feeling of weariness, so often experienced in the spring, results from a sluggish condition of the blood which, being impure, does not quicken with the changing season. Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by vitalizing and cleansing the blood, strengthens and invigorates the system.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Warranted Seed.

I have founded my business on the belief that the public are anxious to get their seed directly from the grower. Raising a large proportion of my seed enables me to warrant its freshness and purity, as see my Vegetable and Flower Seed Catalogue for 1888, FREE for every son and daughter of Adam. It is liberally illustrated with engravings made directly from photographs of vegetables grown on my seed farms. Besides an immense variety of standard seed, you will find in it some valuable new vegetables not found in any other catalogue. As the original introducer of the Eclipse Beet, Burbank and Early Ohio Potatoes, Hubbard Squash, Deephead Cabbage, Cory Corn, and a score of other valuable vegetables, I invite the patronage of the public.

FARM NOTES.

GRAPE VINES.

1. Plant always on well-drained soil-clay subsoil, rows running north and south if possible. Buy two-year old vines, and be careful to get of a reliable man. You will find they will unitedly praise the Worden, the Brighton, and a few more. Go in for such sorts freely. Of new sorts believe next to nothing. When a grape has been planted for five or six years you can get at the truth. When your vines come bury them in the ground until ready to plant, but better be ready to plant at once.

2. To prepare the soil plow deeply, and manure richly from the barnyard with old manure. I do not like half-decayed manure about the roots of anything. It breeds fungus that attacks the roots. It kills pears, and diseases grapes. If you have ashes use them very freely; and if the soil is heavy, cart on and plow in all the anthracite coal ashes you can get.

3. Plant vines in rows that stand eight feet apart, and vines eight feet apart in the rows. See that the holes are large and the roots well spread, and the dirt firmed down tight. Don't dig holes any faster than you plant, and don't carry a large lot of vines about loose to be dried up. Keep what you do carry wrapped in a wet carpet or sacking. Fill the holes with rich soil but not with manure. Old bones? Yes, if you choose; but there is a deal of nonsense about such doings. When the hole is nearly full pour in a pailful of water, unless it be a wet day. If possible, don't set on a wet day, when the soil is sticky.

4. When you set, cut back the vine to two buds. When these start one will be weaker than the other. After they have grown till you can judge which is best, cut off the weakest. Tie the strongest to a cedar post. Tie frequently as growth continues. In the fall cut off, leaving four buds or about that, and cover for winter. The first year no matter how hardy the variety the vines should be covered; as they are small it will make little trouble. In the spring uncover and this year let two of the four buds grow. In the fall cut off one of these to two or three buds for next year's growth and leave the other four to six feet long to bear. The general rule is to increase the number of bearing canes as the vines grow older.

5. It is on young wood that fruit appears; the object of trimming is to remove as far as possible old wood and keep wood renewed each year. Now we come to what is called systems of grape-pruning. A brief article would not cover this matter. Better do one of two or three things. (1) Buy a good treatise on grape culture and work out the problem under its advice, or (2) go to a good vineyard and study the plan adopted, or (3) hire a vineyardist to come and teach you his system.

6. For a trellis a cheap and simple plan is to set a strong cedar post—the large end of a hop pole will do—at each vine. Run two wires one foot and a half and three feet and a half to four feet from the ground. Fasten them to the stakes with small staples. Brace the end posts strongly. Train the vines to the wires. Heavier posts may be set at a later date and cross-arms fastened on top with wires that carry canes high up. The lower canes will bear, but the buds of the canes most remote from the root will ripen best and earliest. The simple trellis of two wires should have posts set very strongly, and be about five feet high.

7. There will be harm done by growing one row of currents, gooseberries or annual crops between rows or trellises. Cultivate with a plow the first year; with cultivator thereafter. It will not do to tear the roots of vines that grow near the surface. Keep the surface scarified.

8. Shall we enrich the vines? To be sure, always. All vines need it to be profitable. Use ashes and yard manure. Of course bone manure is good. I cover the surface heavily after laying down vines in the fall. Grape-vines are heavy eaters and exhaust soil.

9 Lay down the vines in November and cover choice sorts that are not hardy. The Iona and Duchess are so good I would not be without them at any cost. But most vines need only be cut loose and pressed down to the soil. I have my own fastened down a little closer with stakes set across.

10. If your vineyard is exposed to north and southwest blasts, better set evergreen hedges or tight board fences. Those exposed to thawing in the winter are also in danger. There are specially warm spots that thaw out easily; better throw on snow on a warm day. Vines growing on the south side of a barn or other building are more liable to have buds spoiled than those that get less sun. Thawing and freezing are worse than steady cold.

11. If you desire to cover fences, or buildings, or arbors, or well houses, let the vines run much as they will, only occasionally cutting back thoroughly the old wood. The grape-vine is one of the best of all vines for neatness and beauty, as well as profit. Millions of dollars of grapes might be grown on the bad-looking buildings of our towns and country.

12. If a vineyard or a vine has been run down by neglect cut out the old wood, leave a few new canes to grow; see that these ripen their wood well; look out to rub away the hundreds of new canes that push, and then feed up the soil on the general principles above stated.

13. For mildew use sulphur; for black rot I dare not say any remedy is certain, but the best is probably the application of arsenical mixtures such as is recommended by the Agricultural Department at Washington. As preventives, have perfect drainage and the vines open to air and sun. I dig up and burn a vine affected.

14. For sparrows, wage war. I drove them out of my vineyard last fall with Paris green in meal wet and hung on the trellises in shallow pails. They are cute enough to recognize danger.

15. As to bagging grapes it is a vast trouble, but has all the advantages claimed for it—including one more, that you can then let hens run in your vineyard to keep it clear of insects. However, go slow and experiment.—E. P. Powell, in Independent.

"LOGIC IS LOGIC."

Now there was the case of our friend McKay:
He said to himself in his resolute way,
That a cough which was growing from bad to worse
Must be cured, in spite of a slender purse.
An ocean voyage was out of the question,
A Florida trip a useless suggestion;
Yet die he wouldn't! His money he paid
For the "Golden Medical Discovery," by Dr. Pierce made;
And as sound as a nut is his health to-day—
"Logic is logic, that's all I say."

The marks of premature age may be effectually obliterated by using Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers. It colors uniformly, and always gives satisfaction.

Where Are You Going?

When do you start? Where from? How many in your party? What amount of freight or baggage have you? What route do you prefer? Upon receipt of an answer to the above questions you will be furnished, free of expense, with the lowest rates, also maps, time tables, pamphlets, or other valuable information which will save trouble, time and money. Agents will call in person where necessary. Parties not ready to answer above questions should cut out and preserve this notice for future reference. It may become useful. Address C. H. Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal hy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Democratic papers announce that a part of their campaign this year will be directed to the capture of the Senate. As the case stands now with Barbour, of Virginia, elected to succeed Riddleberger, and supposing that there are no other changes, the next Senate will be a tie, and with a Democratic Vice President that party would control the upper house of Congress.

It is reported that the leading Republican Senators are considering the expediency of adding the direct tax bill lately put off after a ten days' dead lock, to some one of the appropriation bills as an amendment and of sending the appropriation bill to the House in that form.

Secretary Whitney took two train loads of personal guests, Saturday, to the launching of the Government vessels at Cramp's Ship Yards in Philadelphia. The party, numbering upward of three hundred, was composed of Senators, Representatives, army and navy officers, Government officials and newspaper correspondents. The vessels launched were a dynamite cruiser and the new gun-boat Yorktown.

CHICAGO.

General Crook has been assigned to the command of the Division of the Missouri, with headquarters at Chicago. It was generally expected that the command of this division, which is the largest in the army, would be given to General O. O. Howard, who is very anxious to come to Chicago. It is understood that the present arrangement is temporary and General Grook will soon go to San Francisco and Howard will come here.

Captain John Trotter and members of the Salvation Army were locked up at the East Chicago Avenue station for parading the streets without a permit.

A warrant for the arrest of Henry Hoeper, a Thirty-fifth street saloonkeeper, was sworn out by Mrs. Susan Rance, who recently attempted suicide, she alleging that the trouble was caused by Hoeper's supplying her infuriated and drunken husband with liquor.

Matthias Busch, the wife murderer, was found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to life imprison ment. Busch was a drunken employe in a brewery. He quarreled with his wife about her property and her interference with his lodge relations. The murder was most ferocious and cold-blooded.

A horrible double crime was committed by a drunken brute of a father on Law Street in the West Division. The unnatural man was making a criminal assault upon a 13-year-old daughter when the mother interfered and was beaten to death.

There are four different companies asking for permission from the city council to build elevated railways in the West Division. The Yerkes syndicate which owns the horse car lines and their valuable franchises is considering electricity as a motor instead of a cable line.

COUNTRY.

A bill making it a misdemeanor to raise any foreign flag upon any building owned by the State or by any village or city was defeated Thursday in the New York Assembly, 104 to 4. The high license liquor bill passed and now goes to the Governor.

In the platform adopted Thursday by the Maine Republicans Mr. Blaine is not put forward for the Presidency, but is set down as deserving of the thanks of the country for his answer to Mr. Cleveland's free-trade message.

The Democrats of Indiana, in State convention at Indianapolis Thursday, nominated Courtland C. Matson for Governor, William R Myers for Lieutenant Governor, W. E Niblack, George V. Howk, and Allen Zollars for Judges of the Supreme Court, and Senators Voorhees and Turpie and John J. Shanklin and John H. Bass as delegates to the National convention. The latter were instructed to support Gray for Vice President. The resolutions demand reduction of the tariff, oppose prohibition, approve the State administration, indorse Cleveland, and express belief in a civil service that will place in office persons who would harmonize in principles and policy with the National administration.

Another result of woman suffrage in municipal affairs is the action of the Council at Delphos, Kansas, in prohibiting billiard halls or pool tables in this place for the next year.

A cyclone struck the town of Pratt, Kansas, late Thursday afternoon, demolishing several houses, and Mrs. William Fisher was fatally injured and others bruised by flying timbers.

The bursting of a water pipe Wednesday caused a sewer ditch at Yonkers, N. Y., to cave in on the workmen, six of whom lost their lives.

A bridge on the Burlington and Missouri River Road near Alma, Neb., gave way Friday morning, its supports having been weakened by rains, as a through passenger train was passing, and the mail and express cars went down with it, and all passengers coaches except one left the track. One passenger was killed, and several were injured.

No improvement in the condition of the winter wheat crop, says the Inter Ocean is reported. Fears are expressed that the crops will prove a failure in Illinois, while in Ohio, Michigan, and the Pacific slope the plant looks unhealthy. In regard to the spring wheat situation, the weather is backward, and seeding is about two weeks late. Reports from Sauk county and other parts of Wisconsin indicate that the chinch bugs survived the winter in great numbers and vigor, and farmers are discouraged.

It is reported from New Orleans, La., that news was received there Wednesday of the assassination of William Adams in Monroe, Onachita Parish, Sunday, April 22. Adams had been active in distributing Republican tickets during the recent election, and so incurred the enmity of the political bosses of that district.

Recently at Nelsonville, Ohio, Edward H. Davis, Assistant Marshal, arrested Samuel Dow, a young married man, for fast driving. Tuesday night Dow met Davis and shot him dead. The murderer then walked a block, and putting the revolver to his own head, fired and fell a corpse.

Thomas Allen, an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio, was brutally murdered in a low saloon in that city Thursday night. The old soldiers threatened to raid the place, but officers interfered.

The street cleaners of Newport, Ky., struck Tuesday because the boss of the department put a colored man to work.

At Licking, Mo., Tuesday, James Smalley, who had become possessed of an insane idea that his family would go to the poor house, though he was well off, killed his two young children and cut his own throat.

At Bassemer, Ala., Monday night, Hardy Posey, colored, was lynched for an attempted criminal assault on a young white girl, and it is reported that the town is surrounded by armed Negroes who threaten to burn the houses and kill the citizens to avenge this lynching.

The Governors of the thirteen original States, except Massachusetts, met at Philadelphia to consider plans for the establishment of a lasting memorial commemorating the first century of the Constitution of the United States

Judge T. P. Makibben, of Campbell county, Ky., was found dead in bed Tuesday afternoon in his boarding-house, in Newport, Ky., with a half-empty bottle of chloral by his bedside. He was a hard drinker.

Recent rains have encouraged the farmers of Iowa, who have already begun planting corn, the season being about ten days earlier than last year.

The Michigan Agricultural College, at Lansing, has closed until May 23 on account of the breaking out of scarlet fever.

The Toledo, Peoria and Western Railway Company has now settled all claims for damages caused by the bridge horror at Chatsworth, Ill, last Summer. The total amount of claims allowed was about $500,000.

Rushsylvania, a village nine miles from Bellefontaine, Ohio, was the scene of a terrible accident Friday night. A school exhibition was in progress in the second story of a brick building. The hall seats about 400 people, and was crowded to its utmost capacity. Suddenly, without the slightest warning, the floor gave way, and the entire audience went down about fifteen feet. The killed are Mrs. J. E. Alexander, wife of the minister, and Miss Garwood, of Bellefontaine. Many were injured.

FOREIGN.

The Russian Government has decided to expel all Jews from Hessingjors except those who have served in the army. General Ignatieff has been elected President of the Slavonic Benevolent Society of St. Petersburg in place of General Durnovo. His election has produced a bad impression in Vienna, and is considered to bode ill to Europe.

The German emperor is recovering from his last attack and another is not expected for six weeks.

Queen Victoria has returned to England. She had a consultation with Bismarck while in Berlin, but nothing was said of the love-match between her grand-daughter and Prince Alexander.

The steamer City of New York, from China, brings details of an earthquake at Yunnan. The official report says: From the second day of the twelfth month of the last year till the third day of this year there were over ten shocks of earthquake, accompanied with a noise like thunder. Yamens in the cities of Shih Ping and Kien Shui were either knocked down or split right down, and temples likewise; in Shih Ping eight or nine-tenths of the houses in the south are falling down, and half of those in the east; in the northwest 1,000 being cracked or bent out of the perpendicular; 200 people, men and women, old and young, being crushed to death, wounded and injured over 300. At Tung Hiang over 800 were crushed to death and about 700 or 800 wounded. At Nan Hiang there were over 200 dead and over 400 injured. At Si Hang there are over 200 dead and over 500 injured. At Peh Hiang about 100 were killed and the same number injured. In the town and suburbs over 4,000 people are either killed or wounded, eight or nine-tenths of the houses fallen down, and the rest cracked and leaning over.

THE N. C. A. FOREIGN FUND.

W. J. Gladwin, Bombay, India, writes: "Thank God for the aid you are giving to our great mission work in India." He has received books and tracts through the National Christian Association Foreign Fund. The thanks of the Association are extended also to those who have by their timely gifts helped in the foreign work.

SIGN THE PLEDGE.—The plan adopted by the National Board is before the readers of the Cynosure. Now let every man and woman in the land, who is opposed to lodge men in office and is willing to make it the rule not to vote for them, send in their names. Let those who are willing to secure names in their several localities signify that they will do so. Write names and postoffices distinctly, voters and non voters in separate lists.

THE LISTS OF ALABAMA PASTORS received from the president of the State Baptist Convention suggest a cheerful word for our Southern Ministers' Fund, which the report of this week swells to $1073 40. We do not need any editorial appeals when brethren at the South can themselves urge this matter with such eloquence as does Bro. Davidson in his letter this week. Be sure to read it; and reading, let it move you to help. Remember that there are no percentages taken from this fund for office expenses, and the paper is sent hardly at cost of publication.

The Illinois Republican convention last week had fairly to face a resolution favoring a popular vote on a prohibitory amendment. A bold member from Rockford, where license lately was throttled, brought it in. There was a long wrangle and finally the convention agreed to endorse the past record of the party. The Anti-Saloon Convention in New York Wednesday proves that Mr. Griffin is not dead; and if his efforts have no other effect they act as a goad to a fagged steed. In Washington the convention was much in debate. Senator Palmer of Michigan repeated his bold advice of a few months since that the party should take a bold course. He says the thing to do is to cut loose at once and forever from the saloon element and clasp hands with its inveterate enemy. A Prohibition plank in the national platform this year is his prescription.

The Chicago anarchists are interested in the next governor of Illinois. Fielden, Schwab and Neebe had hardly got fitted to their prison garb before petitions were circulating for their release. There is no hope of Oglesby, but the next governor may be susceptible to "influence," and make the life term of these men an affair of a few months only. Here in Chicago the anarchist party does not prosper. The Alarm, Parson's paper, was kept alive by Dyer D. Lum. It lately suspended, reprinting defiantly the famous circular of May 4th, 1886. A saloonist who has fallen under the curse of the anarchists says there are several groups meeting regularly, but like Bunyan's Diabolonians they hide very close.

The four hundred and fifty-six delegates to the Methodist General Conference meeting in New York, after several days' debate decided Monday not to admit Miss F. E. Willard and her lady friends who had been sent up as delegates. The ablest men in the conference took part in the discussion, and the result was a sort of compromise, or shifting of the responsibility, the Conference referring the whole matter to the annual conferences. If now the right of the annual conferences be questioned, as it may be on the same grounds, the matter will come back to the churches, and the vocation of the General Conference will be much limited. It is a step toward congregational rule in the church which we are not sorry to note.

The arrangement perfected by Mr. Finch at Saratoga last year by which the color line should be drawn in the Good Templar order is not happily received in England. It will be remembered that these lodges were divided into two bands by the color line, the half which Finch headed being afflicted with negro-phobia. The plan adopted with great demonstrations of pious joy gives the negroes separate lodges. The English Grand Lodge met lately in London, and the Finch settlement was met with a protest from Rev. Mr. Boyd, and a resolution of regret from the "Grand Councillor," that the law of the order was now for race separation, and pledging the lodge to seek a repeal of the color line act. But the love of the lodge prevailed over justice and truth and the Saratoga plan was confirmed five to one.

The saloon-keepers of St. Louis and Cincinnati are in bitter perplexity. The Supreme Court of Missouri decided Monday that the St. Louis city ordinance of 1857, under which the saloons were permitted to sell seven days in the week, was never legally adopted. The Downing law of 1883 forbids the Sabbath traffic, but the dealers fought it on the ground that the old law was not repealed and won. But now that the old law is no more they have no relief. In Ohio, the new owen law against Sunday saloons is well carried out except in Cincinnati. Some hundred and fifty saloonists were arrested Monday and they are promised next Sabbath an immediate arrest if they disobey. Thus the good work goes on. The strong grip of the law is tightening upon the throat of this evil, and its life must go out.

But Chicago is not so favored. The history of New York shows that most efforts for reform in the city come from the State. Cincinnati and St. Louis have this help, but Chicago has it not in so full measure. Efforts have been made again and again to check the saloon power, but with little success. The latest attempt was to keep saloons 200 feet away from churches and schools, and off residence blocks when a majority of the owners were against them. The churches showed they were in earnest by sending numerous and eminent representatives to the meeting of the Council. Drs. Johnson, Goodwin, Stryker, Little, Withrow, etc., with members of their churches, were present. But they had the mortification to see the measure defeated 30 to 17, by the new Republican aldermen themselves had probably voted for. Among these aldermen were five saloon-keepers whom Mayor Roche did not dare offend by ruling out their vote.

There have been three great strikes in the United States of late which have ended in the total defeat of the labor lodges and tend to their dissolution and overthrow: (1) The Martin Irons strike in the southwest in 1886 in which he threatened to stop every freight train between the oceans, unless the Knights of Labor were recognized in three weeks; (2) the great Reading strike in Pennsylvania last winter; and (3) the Engineers' strike on the C. B. and Q. road, which has just been declared off. Our striking laborers were living like kings and princes in this country compared with the state of the English laboring population in 1843; and they have sunk money enough in the loss of wages to have given one half of them a snug property free of debt. And if to this is added what has been lost by liquor, figures would turn pale at the amounts sunk by our strikers, sworn to secrecy and obedience to invisible dictators.

CHRISTIANITY AND BENEVOLENCE

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

Christianity teaches the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. It assumes that every man is, to some extent, his brother's keeper. It declares that "no man liveth unto himself, and no man dieth unto himself." Its moral code is supreme love to God and universal love to man. Vitalized by this principle, the Christian religion has ever been the world's great teacher of benevolence. It has set on foot and executed many philanthropic and reformatory schemes for the good of mankind. It has given to the world a class of human and charitable institutions scarcely known in heathen lands, and never thought of by skepticism and infidelity. It has built asylums for the deaf, the dumb, the blind and the insane. It has established hospitals for the sick, the aged, and the helpless. It has provided homes for the fatherless, the destitute, and the unfortunate. Where, I ask, has infidelity ever given birth to such institutions of mercy and blessing for the relief of suffering humanity. History may be searched in vain for a legible record of any such commiseration for the unfortunate classes. The Encyclopedia Brittanica says: "The silent revolution which Christianity wrought in social morality cannot be measured by legislation. It is to be traced in a purer literature, a higher moral life, a better public spirit, and, above all, in the establishment of buildings for the reception of strangers, almshouses for the poor, hospitals and orphan houses for the sick and the forsaken, and houses of refuge for the support of helpless old men and women. All these were due to the church, and the bishops vied with each other in the proper exercise of a munificent charity." Vol. V., p. 697.

The great movements of modern times for the suppression of existing evils, and for the relief of oppressed and down-trodden humanity, have been chiefly the work of Christian believers. Take, for instance, the temperance reform. Dr. Rush, the true instaurator, was a "devout Christian." (Dorchester's Liquor Problem in All Ages, p. 170.) The earliest utterances against intemperance, in the inception of the movement, were from religious men, such as Franklin, Putnam, Adams, Sherman, Wesley, Coke, Asbury, Porter, and Prime. The first temperance society was organized with the advice and assistance of a preacher. The first temperance paper in this country, we are told, was edited and published by a clergyman. The leading temperance lecturers and reformers, almost without exception, have been devout Christians, and many of them ministers of the Gospel. Who were Lyman Beecher, Justin Edwards, Heman Humphrey, Colvin Chapin, and Mason L. Weems? All clergymen. Who are Dow, Fisk, Cook, Farrar, Talmage, St. John, Miss Willard, Miss West, Mrs. Foster, and Mrs. Woodbridge? Sincere and practical Christians. Not one of them an infidel.

The anti-slavery reform likewise came through the impulse and effort of men who were fervent Christians. Henry Wilson says: "Anti-slavery was the child of Christian faith. Its early and persistent defenders and supporters were men who feared God and called upon his name." (Rise and Fall of the Slave Power in America, Vol. III., p. 718.) Horace Greeley also says that the "pioneers of modern Abolitionism were almost uniformly devout, pious, church-nurtured men" (American Conflict, Vol. I., p. 121.) To Christianity, then, is due the credit for the abolition of slavery. How small, indeed, would be the extent of modern reforms, leaving out the work of Christian believers.

THE ANGLO-CHINESE COLLEGE, FOOCHOW, CHINA.

BY REV. M. C. WILCOX, PH., B. B. D.

Knowing that the readers of the Cynosure are interested in God's work irrespective of denomination or place, I take pleasure in writing you concerning this institution of which I was appointed to take charge on my return to China in March, 1887. The spring term began ten days ago with over eighty students and the outlook is very favorable. During last year this college was blessed with prosperity, favored with a good attendance, and, best of all, the religious influence has broadened and deepened. Special attention has been devoted to the spiritual interests of the students who, in addition to being present at chapel services, are required to pursue certain religious studies and to attend church Sabbaths. All these requirements are, of course, gladly met by Christian students, and it is also pleasant to state that no opposition has been met in any direction. So there is evidently no ground for fear that too much Christian instruction might repel some of the students and alienate the more wealthy and influential of the Chinese. Our great desire is that while these young men and boys are gaining secular knowledge, they may also "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," so in whatever business or profession they may engage they may glorify God and benefit their fellow men. In addition to the full time given to the college by Mrs. Wilcox and myself, Dr. Corey kindly assisted by teaching anatomy and physiology part of the spring term. Besides the classics and thorough drill in English, the college classes have this year been studying algebra, geometry, trigonometry, chemistry, general history, etc. It is now nearly seven years since this school was founded, and as four years are devoted to preparatory work and four years to the college course, the advanced class is expected to graduate in June, 1889.

Our greatly needed reinforcements, Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Lacy, reached Foochow last November, just in time to be assigned to this department of our work. Their arrival was opportune, as circumstances made it necessary for me to take charge of the Kucheng district as presiding elder, in place of the native preacher, appointed to that office by Bishop Warren. Consequently I shall not be able to devote as much time as usual to the college. Our gratitude is due to the missionary society for means to build a dormitory, which was completed just in time for occupancy at the beginning of the present term.

None who are acquainted with the character and aims of this institution can fail to appreciate its importance as a department of our mission work. Eternity will show that through this instrumentality much good has already been accomplished in the salvation and nurture of precious souls, some of whom might never have learned to know the "true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." One of the greatest needs of China is natives, "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." This, also, is one of the lacks of the native church. It is hoped that the Anglo-Chinese college will in some degree supply this want. Already a number of students, who for lack of means were obliged to leave before finishing the college course, have entered the arena of business life. One of these has passed the customs' examination, and belongs to the staff at Canton. Another is a writer at the Foochow United States consulate. Another has entered the imperial telegraph service, and a fourth is with one of the mercantile houses of Foochow. Applications have been made for the services of others, but it is hoped that most will be able to remain till they finish the entire course of study. So far as is known, those who went from us as Christians are still maintaining that character.

The great empire is beginning to arouse from the lethargy of ages. The steam-engine, the telegraph, the telephone, and other western inventions are already in China, and, sooner than we can believe, railroads will span her rivers, tunnel her mountains, and traverse her valleys. Surely we must not be backward in training Christian young men, that they may help control these new forces of civilization for building up the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ in the land of Sinim.

MASONIC SUN-WORSHIP.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

In our discussion of the "Religion of Freemasonry" we learn that Masonic religion is "Pure Theism," or natural religion, i. e., nature worship. Now let us analyze the system still further. And as Freemasonry is an English import we will begin with Dr. Oliver, the greatest Masonic author in Great Britain, and finish up with American authors.

Dr. Oliver says: "One important question, which appears to have been almost wholly neglected by Masonic writers, is, whether Freemasonry be a servile imitation of certain ceremonies in the ancient idolatrous mysteries, as is asserted by some writers; or whether it be the great original from which the mysteries themselves were derived."—Oliver's Signs and Symbols of Freemasonry, p. 2.

That gives us a point of beginning. Is Freemasonry a reproduction of the ancient mysteries, or is it the parent of all those old heathen mysteries so denounced by Paul and the Apostles?

Albert G. Mackey, the Masonic Past General Grand High Priest, declares: "The fact is, that the philosophic system of Freemasonry is exceedingly comprehensive in its character, and bears a close connection with the general literature of all preceding ages. The history of the origin of the institution, and of its rites and ceremonies, will bring the student into a profound investigation of the manners and customs, and the astronomy, the theology and the mythology of antiquity. The ancient mysteries present a fertile field for inquiry, and without a very intimate acquaintance with their history and character, it is impossible profitably to value the legendary instructions of Freemasonry."—Mackey's Mystic Tie of Freemasonry, p. 43.

Later in his work Dr. Oliver jumps at a conclusion, to-wit: "It is an extraordinary fact, that there is scarcely a single ceremony in Freemasonry, but we find its corresponding rite in one or other of the idolatrous mysteries; and the coincidence can only be accounted for by supposing that these mysteries were derived from Masonry."—Oliver's Signs and Symbols of Freemasonry, p. 76.

Then Freemasonry is the mother of the ancient idolatrous mysteries, and without a very intimate acquaintance with those heathen institutions it is impossible to appreciate the beauties of Masonry. What we want is to learn what Freemasonry truly is. Let every one note carefully these testimonies and evidences from the highest authorities in the order.

"Learned Masons have been, therefore, always disposed to go beyond the mere technicalities and stereotyped phrases of the lectures, and to look in the history and the philosophy of the ancient religions, and the organization of the ancient mysteries, for a true explanation of most of the symbols of Masonry; and there they have always been enabled to find this true interpretation."—Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, p. 41 and 42. See Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, p. 37.

We will follow these learned Masons and see what the rites, symbols and ceremonies of the lodge represent and propose to teach. To do this, we must make the system a profound study.

"Accepting the symbol, have we lost its sense? Our rites will be of little value to us if this be the case. It is our duty, then, to make Freemasonry the object of a profound study. We must consult the past. We must stand by the sarcophagus of the murdered, but restored, Osiris in Egypt; enter the caverns of Phrygia, and hold communion with the Cabiri; penetrate the "Collegia Fabrorum" of ancient Rome, and work in the mystic circles of Sidon."—Sickels's General Ahiman Rezon or Freemasons' Guide, p. 56. This takes us back to the palmiest days of heathen idolatry.

Speaking of the heathen philosophers and sages, Grand High Priest Mackey says: "They, therefore, taught in secret what they were afraid to inculcate in public, and established for this purpose the Ancient Mysteries, those truly Masonic institutions, which by a series of solemn and imposing ceremonies prepared the mind of the initiate for the reception of those unpopular dogmas; while, by the caution exercised in the selection of candidates and the obligations of secrecy imposed upon them, the teachers were secured from all danger of popular bigotry and fanaticism."—Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, p. 35.

Those truly Masonic institutions! To protect the teachers! Wonder how long men with beard on their faces could safely operate a Masonic lodge in open daylight?

The present Grand Secretary of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Minnesota, a Masonic Past Grand High Priest, A. T. C. Pierson, affirms: "The identity of the Masonic Institution with the Ancient Mysteries is obvious from the striking coincidences found to exist between them."—Pierson's Traditions of Freemasonry, p. 13 and 14.

Yes, the identity will be plainly apparent as we proceed. Grand High Priest Mackey declares emphatically: "These Mysteries were all religious institutions; but they were Masonic, also. Their members were initiated by a solemn ceremonial; they had various progressive degrees, in which the light and truth were gradually diffused; and the recipients were in possession of certain modes of recognition, known only to themselves."—Mackey's Mystic Tie, p. 99.

These false religious systems were Masonic in every sense of the term.

TWELVE THESES.

BY REV. JAS. W. RAYNOR.

1. Any system or institution requiring organized, oath-bound, life-long secrecy, "loves darkness rather than light," is hostile to free, popular, government, and opposed to the teachings of God's Word.

2. Complete and perpetual secrecy, as an individual virtue, an essential element of Freemasonry, is a cause of suspicion, and highly injurious to social order and confidence.

3. Strict and habitual secrecy enjoined upon and practiced by the members of large organizations, cultivates a false principle of conduct, robs the individual of personal liberty, and prepares the orders to prey upon the outside public at the dictation of crafty leaders.

4. Wherever the principles and workings of organized societies will not bear inquiry and discussion, there is, or surely will be, corruption and wrong as the root and foundation of such bodies.

5. Societies claiming to do good as their chief aim and end, and yet hiding behind grips, and mystic words and doors guarded by threats, and penalties and "deadly weapons," "put their light under a bushel," rather than lead men to glorify God.

6. Freemasonry and kindred orders are masked batteries of Satan and wielded by the "Grand Master of the pit," to propagate error in doctrine and practice, and thereby to obstruct and oppose the pure principles of Christianity.

7. Every man who heartily and intelligently fellowships any order that rejects the Divine Redeemer, most urgently needs (but has no right to) fellowship with Christ.

8. Whoever joins in religious worship in the lodges with infidels, deists, and other skeptics and idolaters, be he preacher or layman, is disowned of the Divine Head of the church. 2 Cor. 6: 14–16.

9. All acceptable worship of God must recognize and adore him as revealed in the volume of inspiration.

10. The ritualistic formalism of secret societies is not a worship of God in spirit and in truth; for lodge religion is ceremonial, usually led by worldlings, often by errorists; sincerity and humility of heart are wanting, and part of the so-called lodge worship is a travesty of sacred themes, and engaged in with mocking levity by the members.

11. Freemasonry, in its quotations of Scripture, omits or perverts the name of Christ, and in its prayers, deliberately and designedly rejects the mediatorship of Jesus; and this is done to propitiate the motley membership of pagans, Jews, infidels and worldlings in these fraternities. Thus contempt is poured upon the Lord of glory by the haters and rejecters and unbelievers of his atonement and priesthood.

12. Hence any professed Christian, who fraternizes with such orders and worships, denies the Lord who bought him, and will be denied and rejected of the Lord unless he repent and come out from among them.

WHY I JOINED THE LODGE AND WHY I LEFT IT.

ADDRESS OF REV. R. N. COUNTEE BEFORE THE NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION.

When I read the letter requesting me to be here and talk to you on this subject, I said, "Well, what was I doing in the lodge?" You will please look at me and take a casual observation of my proportions, and I have no doubt your conclusion will be void. Well, I was in there learning what it cost a man to be made a fool. After sixteen years of lodge service among Masons, Odd-fellows, Pythians, Tabernacles, Immaculates, and I can't remember how many more, I am called on to tell why I did two things: "JOINED and LEFT." I consented to do so only for three reasons: first, I believe that every man owes something to his God; secondly, something to his fellow man; and thirdly, something to his country. I accept of this opportunity perchance to cancel some of that indebtedness.

In the year 1847 and on the 2nd day of November it pleased God to send me into the world. My parents were fugitive slaves, yet they gave me every advantage their limited means would allow. During the years of my youth I can remember that a number of men used to visit my father's house and discuss the benefits of Freemasonry. They would tell of men who had traveled in remote countries, away from civilization, and be befriended among the uncivilized because of Masonry. At length my father joined them, and our house at once became a kind of rendezvous for the Mystic Krew. When I was only eight years of age, every two or three nights in the week I had to listen to the laudations of secret societies. I then made up my mind that so soon as I became of age I should cast my lot with the Masonic gentlemen.

In the winter of 1855 I had the end of the third finger of my left hand cut off with an axe, and in less than two hours over ten men came to see me, and nearly every one of them expressed their sympathy by saying they hoped the joint was not gone, for if it was I could never be a Mason; you see the whole town seemed crazed on the subject of Masonry. Day after day they came and enquired about the joint. When at last the doctor said no joint was gone, I was glad. I was not to be hindered in that way from being a Mason. I shall never forget what was to me the grandest and happiest day of my boyhood.

A little society called "Juvenile Blues" was organized in our town, and I became a member of it. We were left to ourselves to make of it just what we could. Every boy was provided with a Bible and a regalia, consisting of a blue cambric collar and a white muslin apron, which, after the Masonic order, we called a lamb-skin. We had our poles and gavels and other society paraphernalia. On the tenth of August we had a grand time. It was during vacation, and it was the crowning day, it seemed to me, of all days. I remember my black hat and feather, my blue collar and white apron and my Bible, and how I started from home to our schoolhouse, and from thence two squares to the village church. How I did strut, and how I admired myself!

In December following this turnout of our Juvenile Blues, a man by the name of Hemsley came along, and all the fingers on his left hand were cut off. He was and had been an intimate friend of our family for many years, and I had heard the Masons tell father that John, as he was familiarly called, could never be a Mason. Yet John had now, by some kind of a hook or crook, got into the ring, and it was discussed and rediscussed whether or not John had been legally made. The lodge in which he was manufactured proved to be all right, and so he was allowed to turn out on St. John's day, Dec. 24, and it was a talk among all, how did John get into the lodge. This threw a little cold water on the meetings of the folks at our house for a month; but in February a Master Mason died, and I remember distinctly the bustle and excitement of the first Masonic funeral I had ever witnessed.

It was a piercing cold day, the ground was covered with snow, and it was impossible for the body to be interred, and so all of the service was conducted in the church. I gazed at the performance with my eyes and mouth both open. I saw the sprig of Acacia placed on the coffin; and the whole service filled my soul with renewed determination to be a Mason.

An incident occurred. A peculiar noise was heard, like the falling of a large stone, during the Masonic service, and a lady said she saw a ball of fire come down through the church and fall on the coffin. This furnished gossip for our little town for a long time. Many said the devil had come into the house; but I argued if the devil was a Mason he would make it easy for all of the Masons who went to the grand lodge below; and those who went to the grand lodge above would have a good time anyhow.

Our Juvenile Blues did not survive. Our first demonstration was our last. Finally the war came on, and like the majority of my race I loved a uniform, and thought it a grand thing to become a soldier. I went to the armory every night, and for hours I would stand and look at the men being drilled; and I mustered about fifteen boys and every evening after school I would put them through the facings and wheels; and ultimately we procured wooden guns, and I had in a few months as fine a drilled company as could be found in our neighborhood. I was at this time fifteen years old. Passing along the street one summer day I saw a company of men (white) with baldricks and swords and chapeaus, and I wondered what they were. I knew they were not soldiers, yet our town was full of cavalry men. I sped my way home, and asked my older brother what they were. He could not tell me. At last night came and two or three of the old Masons came in to talk war with my father. I asked about the procession I had seen, and learned that they were Knight Templar Masons. I than wanted to know if colored men got that high, and said "that beats a soldier's uniform all hollow." My father remarked, "That boy is crazy on the subject of uniforms." My inquiry concerning the Knights Templar changed the subject from war to Masonry, and I was determined to be manufactnred into a Mason at the earliest day.

At length colored men were taken into the army; and in 1864 I ran away from home and presented myself at the recruiting office, to enlist and help save my country. At seventeen years of age I weighed only eighty pounds and was but four feet high. I begged to be taken as a drummer boy; and as I stood begging my father came in with a friend, who was going away to the front, and sent me home. I then said, Well, perhaps I am, or will be, too small to be a Mason when I become old enough. It troubled me not a little,—too small to be a Mason, and hence I could never be a Mason. For I had often heard it remarked, that one was no man until he was manufactured into a Master Mason. I kept this to myself and sought to counsel of no one. At last Tom Thumb came to our town; and after his exhibition at night he visited the Masonic Hall and my fears were allayed. Tom Thumb was a Mason, and I was larger than he, and if he could go through the transformation process and come out at the other end of the machine a Mason, I could, too. From henceforth my mind was settled and my heart fixed to have "a little piece of white beneath my bosom." I was a Christian, however; had been baptized into the church at the age of fourteen and was a regular attendant at all meetings. Yet I had only a meager idea of Christianity, and a lofty idea of the lodge which was to develop me into a full-fledged man and a full-fledged Christian; for I had learned that no man could understand the Bible until he had gone through the lodge; then all of his powers of heart and mind would be enlarged on account of the hidden things that would there be revealed to him. I treasured these things up in my heart and impatiently bided the time. But during my wait of three years a man by the name of Long got up a society called the "Enterprising Sons." For a year we had regular meetings every two weeks, and finally it was determined to have this organization initiated into the mysteries of Odd-fellowship; and in solid phalanx the "Enterprising Sons" marched to the hall of the Odd-fellows, and there, amid the chitter-chatters and the ranga-rangers, I was pulled and hauled, and my new black trousers were torn across both knees, and I was made an Odd-fellow and dubbed P. S., and my name soon appeared,

R. N. COUNTEE, P. S., OF THE ENTERPRISING SONS LODGE, G. U. O. OF O. F.

I looked at my name as it appeared upon the bills of an entertainment given shortly after. Those final initials, were to me simply grand; D. D. or L. L. D. passed into insignificance when compared with R. N. Countee, P. S. Well might Shakespere say, "What fools we mortals be." The tinsel and gaudy-trimmed regalia of the order, and the hidden mysteries as they unfolded to me, appeared very simple and childlike, I could not see where the mystery came in.

On and on I went, from one degree to another, hunting for the mysteries of the order, and to my disgust they were only more and more simple and childlike. "It was this to that and that to this," and a continual make-believe from beginning to end, —a farce. I was soon told that it could not hold a light to Freemasonry. I talked with several on the subject and not one man did I ever find who would speak a word concerning the matter.

I was now nearing twenty summers, and an incident occurred which furnished gossip for a long time, and was the means of a ladies' department being opened in our village. A Mr. Ballard told his wife all about his transformation, how he was made a Mason, and she in like manner told her best friend, and so the story went. I remember how the Masonic crew met at our house and organized upstairs a ladies' court, "styled "Heroines of Jericho." My mother was made "most ancient;" and of course I was now bound to be a Mason, for mother and father were Masons. I was now an Odd-fellow, and I thought it was a kind of stepping-stone to the lodge of ancient York Masons.

Passing down town one day I stopped at a second-hand book store, and saw two books, Webb's Masonic Ritual and Morgan's Freemasonry Exposed. Ah! said I to myself, I wonder if I can by those books. I felt a little timid at first about even making an inquiry concerning them. At last I took courage, and when the vender said, For this illustrated one 50 cents, and for Morgan's 25 cents, I did not hesitate, but purchased both of them. I read them over and over. I called in three of my young Odd-fellow friends and together we studied them. Finally each of us decided to become Masons, and on the first Monday in September we sent in our petitions desiring to be passed and raised the same night. We paid $2 each extra to the Grand Master for a dispensation, thus making the three degrees cost us $12 each, outside of our supper.

The petition was accepted. The thing for which I had so long waited was about to be a reality, for in sixty days I would be a Master Mason. The interval was spent in a careful perusal of the books I had purchased. Especial attention was paid to Morgan's exposition, and I waited in feverish anxiety the coming of the happy event. An old man with whom I worked whispered to me the night I was to be made a Mason, and as I was on my way to the lodge, "Be sure you do not write any." I wended my way to the lodge room, and my heart went pit-a-pat, for grave fears had laid hold upon me. I was determined to go through, no matter how hard the ordeal. The nearer I came to the lodge hall, the more rapid became the beatings of my heart.

Finally I reached the steps and the other boys were there. We were escorted into the ante-room, divested of our clothing,—and I need not tell you what took place, for you know. I will say, however, I did not write, but I helped the Master, who had forgotten the obligation of the third degree, to go through with it. I noticed he was leaving out some part and I called his attention to the fact. I observed all they told me was just what I had read in Morgan's, and I knew it better than any man in the lodge. So great was my knowledge of Masonry that I was chosen master in less then three months. There were a few unwritten things I had no knowledge of, but on the whole I was better versed in what they called the "mystic secrets" of Masonry than anyone in our neighborhood; even the Grand Master could not lecture the lodge as I could. Strange as it may appear to some, holding the key to all of Masonry in my hand, I stopped not to think, but on I went, from one degree to another, until I had traveled over a rugged road to the Red or Royal Arch house, and then I remember of saying to an aged friend of mine, "God says, Swear not at all," and he quieted my conscience by saying "that was intended for the Jews, who swore for everything, and does not have any reference to Masonry, as you see Christ and John the Baptist and John the Evangelist were all Masons." My conscience was stilled and I went on to Templarism.

Having clearly defined why I joined, I must now relate, if you will be patient, why I left it.

The African race, as you are all aware, has a vast amount of native fire, and it often burns out in eloquence from them, though they be endowed with a meager store of literary attainment. They often achieve great results and captivate the most learned audiences. The African possesses a considerable amount of human nature, and, like his Anglo-Saxon brother, it sticks out prominently in and around the organ of approbativeness.

I had some of this myself in my younger days, and it is not all gone yet, but in the days gone by it was more prominent, and I was lauded and sought out by the men of the lodge. On all great occasions I was brought forth as the hero and orator of the occasion; so I would make as many as a dozen speeches a year for as many different organizations at home (Memphis) and in different parts of the Mississippi Valley.

In course of time I became a pastor of a large, but not a flourishing church. Gradually I withdrew my time from the lodge and applied it to study and the church. Finally I saw that on lodge nights the church was deserted, and the people were the devotees of the lodge and not of the redeemed church of Christ our Saviour. I became considerably alarmed at this state of affairs, and for my life I could see no remedy. Finally the church split, and I, with a large number of the best-thinking members of the same, went away from the old home and began to erect a new house of worship elsewhere, and the rapidity with which the building went up was astonishing to all in the city. I determined there and then to inaugurate in the new house a new method of attending to the Lord's business, especially the financial part of it.

In my first sermon in our new building I spoke as follows: "If you think you cannot pay me as your pastor, pay your sexton, and your other incidental expenses, without resorting to the ungodly, unchristian way of turning this house into a hall for revelry, bazars, fairs, festivals, and making this place a place of merchandise, you may count me out now, and get yourselves a preacher that can stoop to these unholy practices. God being with me, I resolved, while these walls were in course of erection, to never, never, allow the enemy of souls to use me any more." Many, very many, were the amens that greeted these remarks; and we here, in the midst of the sermon, sang, "All hail the power of Jesus's name."

Shortly after this my eyes began slowly to open to the vicious and immoral status of many of our organizations, known as secret societies. I determined to use my influence to get all of the redeemed of the Lord out of them. I saw the only way by which the church of Christ could arise and shine was to come out of the darkness. I said that these societies were moral blights, eye-sores and a scab on the moral escutcheon of respectable society. They sweep the country, and to swell their numbers they have in them people whose reputation is so black that the man in the moon, if he was to happen to be out, would be compelled to hold his nose as the immoral creatures would pass by. These so-called benevolent organizations are filled with thieves, robbers, cut-throats, and men and women of the lowest moral type. We meet men and women in these halls on the plane of brotherhood that we would no sooner invite into our homes than we would open a case of rattlesnakes among our loved ones. We march in public procession with the thief, the horse-jockey, the professional gambler and the "sanctified preacher."

This was my indictment of the lodge; and upon this indictment I said to the Christians, "Come ye out from among them." The next week I was appointed by the Missionary Baptist Association of West Tennessee to hold an institute for ministers and deacons at an interior town. While at the depot awaiting the train, walking up and down the platform with one of our white Baptist pastors, I suddenly heard my name called. Turning around I saw approaching me a man full of the lodge and over-loaded with liquor. He staggered up, and before I could think he had laid hold of me and said, "Don't you know me (hic)? Is'e a member o' Tennessee Union Lodge (hic). That's your lodge." I tried to shake him off, but could not. I said to him, "Let go of me;" but he would not. He said, (hic), "I just want to see you—goin' on the train—eh." I said to him, "Go away;" but he would not. He was like Mead's mule. I saw there was no sense in losing my temper, so I just stood still. The white preacher left me, and finally I broke loose from my captor and rushed into the car. The preacher said, "You are surely mixed up with some queer brethren. That is not a sample of your colored people's lodge timber, is it?"

I answered, "Yes, sir. They are just like your white lodges. Like begets like, and things that are equal to the same things are kin to each other."

The year 1885 was the consummation year of my lodge interest. I began the year by preaching a series of sermons

AGAINST SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS AND TOBACCO.

I succeeded in getting such a spirit of antipathy against liquor that a resolution was passed making it a church offense for any member to be seen in a grocery or saloon purchasing liquors. The picnic season was drawing near, and I commenced to warn the people against them, and took the position that they were immoral gatherings of the basest hue, and no man could expect to retain his reputation as a follower of the blessed Christ, who visited the places of amusement resorted to by the secret and ical societies of our city. Furthermore, I declared that any Christian who gave his money, his presence and his support to any organization that gave balls, was a party to the transaction, and was as mean a sinner, if not more so, than the sinner who danced at the ball; and that the word picnic was only a cute way the devil had to whitewash his balls, but the thing was about washed off, and now all could see it just as it was, a rum-selling, beer-guzzling, card-playing, dance garden of infamy and sin; as deeply immoral as the most miserable groggery in our city. It was simply gilded immorality. I prayed to God earnestly that the day would come when the church of the living God would rise up above the dust and ashes of worldliness, and put on her beautiful garments, pure and clean, and stand up in this world as a monument of the sovereign grace of God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The church was not prepared to receive this tirade against the picnic business. I could observe that my remarks were very unsavory to many of whom I had hoped to be with me, and I was not slow to see that a crisis was pending. I looked up to Him from whence my strength came, and I was satisfied that He would be with me. Some of the officers talked with me and advised best to let the subject alone; but in the meantime W. A. Brinkley had begun open hostilities in his church on the same subject.

On Sunday, June 7, I preached from the text, "Woe be unto you when all men shall speak well of you." I laid much stress on the class of Christians who were popular with the world, and showed how careless they were in all their duties to the cause of Christ and his church. This talk was not devoid of effect but laid a foundation for the future strong and deep.

The night service was an exegetical discourse from the first Psalm, and I took especial pains here to denounce the pic-nic business again, and advised the members not to attend the pic-nic on the next Wednesday night. As this pic-nic was that of the Odd-fellows, all of them who were members of the same became furiously mad, and some of them quit their work next day and joined with the ungodly, discussing the sermons, and partially denouncing the preacher. They were a little timid in their denunciatory remarks, but gradually grew louder. The following Sunday morning, June 14, I selected my theme from the Sunday-school lesson, viz: "The Priesthood of Christ vs. The Priesthood of Man." After sermon, I announced that all who were willing to leave their ungodly organizations, composed of Christians and sinners, to meet me at the church house to-morrow, Monday evening, at 7:30 P. M., and we should then and there organize a Relief Fund. Each member would be requested to give $1.00 per year, and pay 25 cents per month. This should be placed in a sinking fund for the care of the sick and the burial of the dead.

I was pleased beyond expression when I entered the building Monday evening, for it was well filled, and they were singing and praying and making a joyful noise unto the Lord in song. I read one verse, "For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because you belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward." From this I argued that those Christians who belonged to worldly organizations did all their pretended benevolence because they belonged to the society, and not because of Christ, and hence received from him no reward. True benevolence could be only dispensed in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and was in reality giving without hope of recompense or reward. Such benevolence God gave unto us in the boon of human redemption. And after considerable exhortation in this strain, I asked all who were willing to come forward and enroll their names as those who for Christ were willing to leave the world and be numbered only as among the people of God. Something like 180 came. Thirty-five came out of one society, and they nearly broke the thing up. There were Odd-fellows, Masons, Immaculates, Pythians, Zions, Hams, Benevolents, Friendships, all left their ungodly organizations, and enrolled with church Relief Fund. We sang, we prayed, and a general speaking meeting was the result. Those who remained in allegiance to the societies sat still, and they were loud in their denunciations of such a movement. They said the church would fail; no such work as we were contemplating could be done by the church, and that such a movement was only dividing the church. All of the officials of the church, deacons and trustees, were with me.

Week after week I continued to preach the gospel of separation. The lodge folks attended our services, and finally after I had in public debate severed my connection from them, I was visited at my house on the night of August 3rd, between 2 and 3 A. M., by a yelling mob of infuriated demons in human shape, supposed to be some sixty in number, who riddled my house with bullets, but I escaped them and got away. This mob was composed of Odd-fellows, who are taught to clasp their hands and place them over their heart and say, "With purity of heart," as a password, denoting their hearts to be pure; and Masons, who believe in tearing out hearts, or at least so obligate themselves, and asserting with a brazenness born in the bottomless pit that they are founded on the Bible, and teach the principles contained therein. This demonstration threw the church into great fear; every one in the entire community was aroused, and by sunrise the next morning hundreds of people were at the house, and members of the church and non-members, and they who were in the mob were also on hand to see how we took the matter, but, to their dismay, they found us jubilant. We had committed our way unto the Lord, and he was caring for us. I did not return home from the place to which I had fled until 7 A. M., and the most intense excitement was prevailing.

The devotion of the church was here shown in a prominent degree. Such love, such care, such sympathy, I had never seen. Men and women left their homes, came to the house, and there they remained night after night waiting for the bloody brutes return. Our home being in the suburbs of the city, we were away from proper police protection. Many advised me to leave town. At first I thought favorably of such a course, and finally said, No! Memphis was good enough for me to die in, and heaven was just as near from Memphis as any other point.

The Sunday papers came out saying, Mr. Countee is warned not to preach in his pulpit this day; if he does he will be killed. I had intended to remain at home, but when I read that paragraph, my very soul was inflamed with righteous indignation, and I determined to accept this challenge of the devil. I left home in company with five or six persons, and along the route I was accosted by friends asking, "Mr. Countee, are you going to preach to-day?" I gave all a decided, "Yes!" Having reached the church, the members gathered around me with tears in their eyes saying, "Don't preach, brother!" "Elder, don't preach; if you do, don't say anything about those miserable societies." I asked them not to hamper me, not to prescribe any course for me to pursue in the preaching of the Gospel of Christ, to let me be perfectly free to be used by the Spirit as seemeth best in his sight. It was indeed painful to me to see so many with swollen eyes. Some said, "I have been crying and trying to pray all week; my poor soul is almost broke." Some would come and take me by the hand and break down; others would come to the door of my office or study-room, look in my face and weep like children. I was always easily affected and sympathetic; but on this occasion I was filled with a different spirit, in fact, I was not myself, and I had a word of comfort and a smile of joy to all that gathered around me. I entered the church and preached from the text, "Who is on the Lord's side?" And as I was always uncompromising, I did not fail to be so on this occasion. I related in the course of my remarks the story of David and Goliah, asking "Who is he that dare defy the army of the living God?" And I said more, denouncing the influence of secret societies than I had ever done in my life. The church received it with joy. There was weeping and shouts of hallelujah and glory to God from all parts of the church; the timid ones were made to rejoice, and in the joy of the Lord they found strength.

I left the lodge, first on account of the immoral status of its membership and because I earnestly believed it was not fit for the association of Christian men and women. On this ground I raised my voice like a trumpet, and spoke out. Being undaunted by the mob, the secret society empire intended to do away with me; so on the night of October 18th, (Sunday) while I, in company with several of the members of my church, was returning home, I was shot by an assassin; but God kept me and I am here with a ball in my head, as a souvenir of the religion of Masonry. I left the lodge because it harbors criminals, thwarts the ends of justice, swindles and robs those who are gulled into its clutches. I left the lodge because I am a Christian, and I have the Lord Jesus Christ as my Saviour, who declared that in secret he had said nothing.

There is nothing plainer in God's Word than his command to "Come out of her my people." God will not have his redeemed ones mixed up in all manner of uncleanness. Worldly associations and worldly amusements can by no means furnish the means for spiritual growth or spiritual development. I continue to urge complete separation as the only means to attain holiness before God.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3rd, 1888.

Repairs are progressing on our building here as rapidly as seems consistent with economy. There is much more to be done than I at first anticipated. The first man I tried to employ was a painter. His price was $3 per day. I said, "You furnish brushes at that price, I suppose." His reply was, "No, the union don't allow me to do that." He was a poor man and very anxious for work, and I felt sorry for him; but not knowing what other conditions this "high star commission" might impose, I concluded that if I must buy brushes I would use them, and so have done the painting for myself.

I next applied to a plumber who was recommended by Bro. Ford, and as the work was imperatively necessary and charges reasonable, I did not raise the question of "unions." Omitting wall-scraper and floor-scrubbers, who are, I am told, in "unions," I learned more of the beauty of the union system from my paper-hanger. After looking over the job and naming his price, I asked, "Am I to deal with you or with some 'union' in your line?" He replied promptly, "With me. I used to belong to the union but found it an injury rather than a help to my business. They have a rule that no man shall have more than two apprentices. My son became old enough and I set him at work and the 'union' objected, and I told them I would run my own business in future and have nothing more to do with them, and I have got along better ever since." Thus the oppression of these despotic orders is making "wise men mad," and they are leaving them to the timid, time-serving element who kneel and kiss the hand that rules and robs them.

A pleasant incident of to-day was a brief call from Bro. Wm. Dillon, wife and son, who were spending a day or two in the city. I was sorry that I had not the guest chamber in order so as to furnish a Christian home and save an expensive hotel bill to these fellow laborers. I hope that a week will suffice to have things in readiness so we can give comfortable lodgings to friends passing this way. Bro. Dillon, like the rest of us, shows the effect of time and toil, but was cheerful and hopeful. I hope to have a room ready and start a pray-meeting on the anti-lodge gospel line early next week.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM RICHMOND TO WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, April 28, 1888.

"The mother of States and of Presidents" was greatly benefited by the death of slavery and the new orders which came with it. Her people have yet much to unlearn as well as to learn, but there is manifest growth in all the elements of Christian civilization. A trip down the James River is through a historic region, replete with the memories of more than 250 years. It is a noble river, and the agricultural facilities of the adjacent country are beginning to be appreciated.

At Claremont a colony of Northern people have recently been established, about midway between Fort Monroe and Richmond, and there seems to be a large influx of people. The proposed business is raising and canning fruits and vegetables. Hampton Roads is perhaps the finest harbor on the American coast, and its connections by water and rail will make it one of the most important shipping ports of the South. Already the cotton crop comes largely here for exportation.

We reached Norfolk at 7 P. M. After a night's rest, I went out to the Mission College, the excellent school of the United Presbyterians. I was sorry to find Pres. Wallace in bad health, and with small expectations of entire recovery. The institution is prospering. Over 500 students are on the list, and one-fourth of that number are in the High School grade. Because of the inadequate and inefficient public school system of the State and city, there is a constant pressure on the primary department of this school, and makes it possible to give Christian instruction to this great number. Seventeen young men and women will graduate from the High School grade. This is their first graduating class. All of the officers and teachers of this school are in sympathy with our reform, and I was invited to address the school at the opening exercises. I spoke for forty minutes and was endorsed by Prof. Groves, who acts as principal. I was told that my remarks of last year had made a strong impression on the minds of the students, and had led to much discussion.

After leaving these excellent friends, I called on Rev. W. D. Cook, the pastor of the largest colored church in the city. He has read the Cynosure for a year and highly appreciates it. He says he is in hearty sympathy with its principles, and does what he can for their promotion. Nevertheless the corner-stone of their new house of worship has just been laid by the Masonic Grand Master, and with a great flourish of trumpets, which goes to prove that ministers are largely under the despotism of the lodge and must obey as the price of peace. But the good seed sown in this old Masonic city has not been in vain. A ride across the bay in the steamer brought me to Hampton Institute, with its multiplied activities and its 600 students. About 125 are Indians and the remainder of African descent. In looking them over it is often difficult to know in which of the three races to place them. The fact that it costs $97,000 to carry on the work here proves that it ought to be, and I am sure is, of great practical value. Unlike the other schools of the South it is mainly an industrial school, i. e., the industrial part of education is made especially prominent. About 600 acres of land are cultivated, and almost all kinds of mechanical industries are carried on. Including officers and teachers nearly 700 persons here live together in a little world by themselves. I have nowhere seen a finer or better supplied library and reading room.

Gen. Armstrong received me most kindly and entertained me during my stay. By invitation of Rev. Frizell, the pastor of the Congregational church, and who has charge of the morning exercises, I was accorded twenty minutes, during which I presented a condensed indictment of the lodge system. Mr. Frizell, in introducing me, commended my work, and Gen. Armstrong, who came in while I was speaking, added some new and forcible ideas. He said that the class who were about to recite in Mental Philosophy were learning to oppose secret societies; though the book said nothing about them, it taught principles which were opposed to them. "Secret associations," said he, "are an abnormal condition of society, and a taste for them is only acquired in the same way we acquire an abnormal appetite. Such appetites may be very strong, but they are a perversion of nature. Secret societies are a perverted order of the social constitution."

At 5:30 P. M. I embarked for Washington and reached here this morning at 8 o'clock, grateful for spared life, and for reunion with my family.

H. H. HINMAN.

A KINDLY WELCOME IN CHURCHES OF VARIOUS NAMES.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After finishing my work among the United Presbyterians and Covenanters south of Clarinda, I called upon a minister of the Mennonite church, Rev. Andrew Good. I found that he and his people are opposed to the lodge. He gave a donation to the Iowa Association and took the Cynosure.

I also visited a minister of the German Lutheran church of the Missouri Synod. He declared himself opposed to the lodge and said that no members of secret societies would be admitted to membership in the church of the Synod.

I also visited the North Page United Presbyterian church. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Dodds, received me cordially, and by invitation I preached for him in the morning at North Page, and at Hepburn in the evening. I spent some time in canvassing for aid to the State work, and in introducing the Cynosure. Mr. Dodds and his people were so generally disposed to aid the Iowa reform work that I spent several days very pleasantly among them. I also visited Rev. N. Forsander, a Swedish Lutheran minister, and secretary of the Augustana Synod, who readily subscribed for the Cynosure. Several years ago, he said, they had had some trouble with the grange, and more recently with the Knights of Labor, but throughout the Synod they had succeeded in freeing their churches from all secret society entanglements.

I have engaged to preach for the United Brethren next Sabbath morning at the Copley church, and in the evening I will preach again for Rev. Mr. Dodds at Hepburn. The following Tuesday night I am expected to lecture at the North Page United Presbyterian church.

I find on counting up that I have secured twenty-nine new subscribers to the Cynosure since my last writing, all for a year. By preaching, by lecturing, by family visitation, and by the distribution of literature, we are striving to pull down Satan's stronghold, the lodge, and build up Christ's kingdom, the church. We appeal to you, friends in Iowa, as lovers of Christ and his church, to help financially, to help personally. We ask you, as American freemen, to consider that equality before the law cannot be realized until the secret lodge despotism is broken up. We appeal to you, therefore, as the conservators of American liberty, to help in this reform. We beg of you further to consider that individual manhood is crushed, and the right of private judgment, even in the every day business affairs of life, taken away, by the lords of the lodge. Should we barter our birthright, as American citizens, for such a vile mess of pottage?

Answer, we pray you, by united and persevering effort to withstand and remove the lodge curse from our State and nation. Christian women, while you unite in the declaration that the "saloon must go," do not shut your eyes to the fact that the lodge is an organized conspiracy of Satan against the Christ of God, whom you love.

Rally, then, with Christ, against the lodge, as you would work with him against the saloon.

C. F. HAWLEY.

WAKING UP OHIO.

COLUMBUS, May 4, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just read with interest of the action of those who met in Carpenter Hall, Chicago, to discuss what should be our attitude as reformers on the political line. The suggestions made seem to me to be opportune and wise. I am in favor of organizing a department of the N. C. A. (call it a league if you like) that shall pledge its members to vote only for men free from oath-bound secret associtions. Who is there having our cause at heart that would not be willing to assist in such a noble enterprise, regardless of party lines? The lodge works in the caucus; why should we not meet it there? Say to our fellow citizens, as long as you give us straight-forward men on a straight-forward platform we will work and vote with you. But when you endeavor to nominate men sworn to unknown superiors we can't vote for them if they do stand on an otherwise sound platform, for they must either forsake the lodge or betray their trust. Let pledges be circulated among voters to this effect, and what a watchfulness of the men nominated there would be! How careful politicians would be to secure its favor in communities where it became strong!

In regard to State work, I have been encouraged all along the line. Though the voice of spring has called farmers to their arduous work, I have everywhere found an attentive ear. I have spoken ten times since my last writing to good audiences. Time and space admit of only a few items of interest.

Bro. McClanahan, pastor of the U. P. church, Sycamore, made me very welcome. I addressed his congregation three times. The last lecture was the best attended. I worshiped with the Friends in their monthly meeting at Waynesville by invitation of friend Amos Cook, though a Masonic trustee had previously refused the house for a lecture.

The excitement was intense at Harveysburgh. Secretists made their defence with usual arguments and usual results. The meeting at Chester was well

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN CHICAGO.

The American martyrs and sufferers for preaching the Gospel, and the developing power of Romanism in our body politic, has had recent proof in the cases of the several preachers in Boston who have been fined, and in the case of the Rev. Mr. Davis now enduring the penalty of a year in Boston jail for preaching on Boston Common without a permit. Boston was the cradle of our liberties; what is she now? She is the cradle of such despotism as made the Pilgrim Fathers leave old England for a New England only a few generations ago, but from which has sprung our great country, now free from slavery of color, but not from that which enslaves the higher manhood of our people.

The same Jezebel over freedom of conscience in the exercise of the religion of Jesus as taught in the Holy Scriptures, whilst ever ready to cry out for liberty and to permit theaters and Sunday violation during the hours of public worship and its other hours, and in other ways fosters the saloon and congenial enjoyments, has just discovered that she can aid the Boston policy by fining the Salvation Army workers for their way of trying to draw to their religious services such characters as attend saloons, theaters, etc., etc. These Salvationists preach on vacant lots or wherever hearers can be induced to listen. But the City Council fines them for doing so without its permit! This Council, like its sister of Boston, is largely influenced, no doubt, by the devotees of Rome and lodgery—both being natural foes of the simple "truth as it is in Jesus," whose "kingdom is not of this world."

Americans may close their eyes for a time to Romanism in their politics as they did to slavery, but Romanism and her allies will assuredly quickly develop in like manner until the freedom of our country is endangered so as to cause great convulsion and bloodshed, if not another civil war, for its preservation. Such events have often occurred in Europe, caused by Romish power insidiously usurping the civil powers of state. Even to-day we see the Pope and advisers publishing their popish views on the political topics of Ireland!—a practice always claimed as a right by that power—plausible but false, for Christ gave no such instructions to his apostles, nor to his church. The Sovereign Ruler of mankind exercises his wisdom in his providence through persons and civil governments, Christian or otherwise, but he rules in his church and people only though Christ the Son, their Supreme Lawgiver and King. WE CAN SELL ONE MILLION!

YORK, Pa., April 30, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I believe that "Stories of the Gods" is the most important pamphlet that has yet been published in the present anti-secret crusade. No Christian, or other friend of civil and religious liberty, can read it without becoming convinced that all secret organizations are anti-Christian and anti-Republican.

I am sure that our anti-secret workers can easily sell one million copies in the United States, if they will try to do it. Secret society men buy it as eagerly as Christians; and all read it with much astonishment. I have sold one hundred and six copies, and expect to sell more. To sell it, I turn over the pages, explaining the pictures and the main facts stated in the pamphlet. One man told me that he would read it and pick out a god to suit his own notions. He says that he can't go Vitzliputzli; and I expect he will decide that the Christian religion will suit him best. No pamphlet under the sun gives so much light; and no Freemason should need "more light" than it gives in order to see his way out of all the secret lodge rooms "in the known world."

I sincerely hope every reader of the Cynosure will aid in giving this powerful pamphlet a wide circulation amongst both insiders and outsiders. We can put one million copies on the lodge camel's back, very easily; and that will break his back so it can never be used again "for the good of the order." Yours, etc., EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

TEMPERANCE AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

WARE, Mass.

Not long since I attended a temperance meeting in an adjoining town. Many good things were said, and to those who were not posted in temperance statistics interesting statements were given, that will no doubt be beneficial to all who listened. No truer statement can be made than this: that no person of good moral character ever kept a drinking saloon. The mighty dollar is all they are seeking for, and they care not for their dupes. As regards the misery they cause, they seem deaf to the cries and entreaties of suffering wives, mothers, sisters and daughters, and would spurn them from their presence should they plead that their loved ones be not given the intoxicating cup.

Yet some of these so-called temperance workers would rather have the saloonkeeper go to the ballot-box and cast his vote for license, than let one of these wives or mothers cast a vote against license! "No," one said, "it would be doing wrong that right might be accomplished." I say such temperance workers might as well keep silent, for the time has come when not only by States, but as a nation, this "woman suffrage question" is being agitated. May God grant that the time may come when the women of America may have the privilege of reaching out their hands to save loved ones from a drunkard's grave. If all believed as did the one above referred to, it is my opinion that the women would not be allowed a place to labor in the temperance cause. If I believed as he argued, I would institute some plan to stop the "Woman's Temperance Union" from working, for if they have no business to vote on this momentous question, why encourage them in any part of the work?

It reminds me of a little boy I once knew. He had been chasing a squirrel for a long time, but could not capture him. He called to a sister, younger than himself, to come and help. She carefully watched the movements of the squirrel, and when he would try to hide in the tall grass, she noticed the movements in the grass, and reached out a long stick, pressed it firmly upon his back, and said to the brother, "Now I have him, and will hold him until you kill him." This she did, and in great glee the boy went to the house and in an excited tone said, "Mother! mother! see what I have done all myself. I killed him, I did." The mother had watched the whole affair from the window, and wishing justice to be done, replied, "My son, give your sister credit for catching and holding the game while you killed it, and not show such a selfish spirit."

Now this man that wished to keep the women from the ballot-box, no doubt would like to have the ladies work in the temperance cause, and thus render great assistance in this work, but when the victory is gained, he would arise in his dignity and say, "See what we temperance men have done." "Give honor to whom honor is due." If women do their part of the work, let them also share their part of honor in the victory.

Go to the heathen nations, and there we find the spirit of oppression and servitude reigns supreme, as far as the women are concerned. But where enlightenment and civilization progress, so far this spirit of oppression is done away.

Some claim that women have no right to occupy official positions, they are not capable of doing this. To such I would say, Show me a better or more devoted Christian ruler of any nation than Queen Victoria. If time and space did not forbid I might speak of others. In the evangelistic work, some of our American women have accomplished a work that men might envy. In this temperance work we might name scores whose ability dare not be questioned.

Then why close the doors against them as coworkers in this great work, and refuse to grant to them equal privileges with the "sterner sex"? The idea that "the only place a woman is fitted for is the kitchen and nursery," is fast passing away. Thinking minds are open to investigation, and in my opinion the time is not very far in the future when equal rights will be guaranteed to all. It is no disgrace, but an honor, for a woman to go into the kitchen and nursery and perform her part well there; but why keep her there and extend to her no other privileges? It would be just as consistent to say to the business or official man, because he knew how to groom his horse, or cultivate his garden, why always keep him there? This would be doing him injustice. Let this overbearing spirit be done away. Educate the rising generation to shun this evil monster, and put forth every laudable effort to close the doors of the saloon, and force the inebriate to a life of sobriety and industry. May God grant that the time may speedily come when this curse of intemperance shall be driven from our land. Yours for the right, MRS. L. M. HOYT.

NOTES OF BRO. CLARK'S WORK.

Many good and encouraging words come to Bro. George W. Clark, since his return from the South. One is from New Orleans:—"We have been very anxious to hear from you and are glad to learn you are well and still on the battlefield. Your visit did us much good; as if our own father had visited us." —S. B.

From St. Louis:—"You will be interested to know that a very promising and intelligent young German book-keeper, who heard your address last Sabbath evening, has thrown away both his pipe and beer, and on the next day came in and confessed to conviction; and while we prayed he was gloriously converted. He has gone to work at once among his class of people and took with him a quanity of tracts for distribution. May God bless you. Amen!" —G. W. S.

The editors of the Prohibition Advocate of Dallas, Texas, write:—"You will be glad to learn that since hearing your lectures we have both signed an anti-tobacco pledge never to use the vile stuff again." Bless the Lord for this good news. Editors should be clean and exemplary men! The Vanguard of St. Louis writes this of Bro. Clark and his work:—"Geo. W. Clark.—This venerable champion of freedom and reform spent a few days with us on his return from a tour through the South. His visit will be remembered as a very pleasant and profitable one. Among the earliest memories of our childhood was learning to sing the songs of freedom and read heart-stirring appeals in behalf of the slave in the 'Liberty Minstrel' by Geo. W. Clark. He was one of the leading anti-slavery agitators, and the firm friend of that oppressed people in whose interest he has been recently speaking at the South. He is a noble and rare specimen of a genuine Puritan. Through all his long years of life-and-death encounter with dominant wrong he has preserved the tender and genial grace of a true Christian gentleman. May God bless him. Amen."

PITH AND POINT.

FROM A ST. PAUL MISSION.

Your card inquiring into the nature of our St. Paul mission work at hand. Our mission consists of twelve workers; our work is the promulgation of Bible truth. We hold Bible readings, distribute religious reading matter, visit the people, etc., etc. We nearly all read your paper and are glad to see the effort you are putting forth to enlighten the public on the evils of secret societies. Of course there are some things that your paper advocates that we cannot endorse. We are not able to pay for the paper, as our salaries are a mere pittance, but if you can afford to send it to us for the good it may do we shall all take pleasure in reading it.—E. HILLIARD.

THE VETERANS.

I am one of the veteran subscribers, having taken it from the first. I was a subscriber to the old American Baptist, and received a sample copy I think through it. When the Cynosure went down in the great fire the list of subscribers was lost and I lost a number or two before I learned it was being published again. Wife and I think 'tis the best paper in existence.—J. N. LLOYD.

THE BEAST AND HIS IMAGE.

To prove that Freemasonry is a religion we need only to know that they have temples, altars and priests. According to their titles, they worship the master of the lodge instead of some deified man. This is the only difference between the worship of the lodge and ancient idolatry. The master is called, the Most Worshipful, making him their god. Pagan Rome, the first beast; papal Rome, the second; and Masonry the image of the beast, as recorded in Revelation 13th chapter. Where did it arise from? It arose from the earth by the authority of the second beast (verse 14th) who had power to give life to the image. What is this image doing now? Running the government of these United States and preventing those from buying, selling or working for an honest living who have "not the mark of the beast or of his image."—W. X.

RUM OR BAD MANAGEMENT.

I was reading this morning the sad story in the Cynosure of "Rum's Ruinous Reign," and my heart went out in pity and indignation to think of a woman with ten children to provide for and all her trouble laid to rum. Just as if the woman with near a dozen children must sit in the house and expect one man to take care and support all of them, as she certainly did, or she would not have been out chopping wood herself. Now look at the picture: with eleven children the oldest could not have been less than 15, and what kind of woman would allow her children at that age to sit in the house and squeal, while she cut wood. If there was any spunk or management in her during the two weeks her husband was having his "spree," she certainly need not have let her wood get so low. Remember that ten children are not all babies at once. They ought to have been able and willing to have gone to a neighbor and worked.

Not for the world would I do or say anything in favor of the rum traffic, for I am prohibition to the ends of my fingers, but in that case there was certainly something wrong on the other side of the house, and I think such inconsistencies harm the cause.—MAGGIE WOOLMAN THOMAS.

LITERATURE.

The May number of the Century begins a new volume. The opening article is the first paper of the series by George Kennan on Siberia and the Russian convict system. His preliminary papers on the prisons of Russia have been interesting and vastly instructive, but the future articles promise more intense interest, in which are to be recorded the results of the Century expedition into Siberia and examination of the exile system. The frontispiece of this number is a touching scene at the Siberian boundary post. In the "Author's Preface," Mr Kennan relates the circumstances under which he undertook his Siberian mission. The illustrations are numerous and there is a full page map of the route pursued by the travelers on their extraordinary journey. Theodore Roosevelt, in his series of Ranch articles, describes (and Remington illustrates) his adventurous and amusing pursuit and capture of three boat thieves, a short account of which appeared not long ago in the newspapers. The Lincoln Life deals especially with the efforts made to keep the Border States from secession, and Mr. Lincoln appears not only in this historical setting, but also as a character of fiction in Dr. Eggleston's Western novel, "The Graysons," which is now approaching its most interesting point. Dr. Eggleston publishes also an important chapter in his colonial series, namely, his original account of "The Church of England in the Colonies," with a number of illustrations of churches, etc., and a portrait of Bishop Berkeley. Matthew Arnold's recent address on Milton is here printed for the first time; there is an engraving of Lenbach's portrait of the Pope, with a brief study of his personality by the poet Maurice F. Egan, which is very flattering to the aged pontiff; Professor Atwater gives a chapter in his series in which he deals with various foods and beverages, including gelatine, meat extract, tea, coffee, alcohol, etc., and Mr. Cheney has another chapter on "Bird Music."

In the May number of the American Garden is a continuation of the Open Letters, On the Planting of a Small Place, and there are numerous, carefully illustrated descriptive articles on making flower beds, arrangement of shrubbery, etc. There is a finely illustrated article on the Japan Loquat, a new Southern fruit and beautiful ornamental tree combined in one. The apples, pears, plums, and other fruits are effectively treated by practical hands, and proper vegetable culture is ably handled. Use of fertilizers, etc., contain all that market-gardener or amateur could desire. The page on orchids has an illustration and account of a new pure white orchid that seems destined to become popular with those who can afford to pay for such luxuries. 751 Broadway, New York, $1.00 a year.

Miss Frances E Willard's denunciation of the "wretched, heathenish" doll as fostering the love of dress in little children has given rise to an interesting discussion in the current number of Babyhood. Most of the writers, who relate personal experiences, protest against Miss Willard's extreme views; but not a few mothers admit at least the partial truth of her strictures, judging from the effects dolls have had on their own children. Altogether, the question "Is the Doll Doomed?" is sure to attract general attention. Among the medical articles in the same number are: "Night Nursing," setting forth the bad effects of that practice on both mother and child; "The Need of Stimulants during the Nursing Period," etc. The editorial replies to the various "Nursery Problems" cover a wide range of subjects.

In the May number of St. Nicholas, Thomas Nelson Page begins "Two Little Confederates," a serial story of Southern boy life during the war, and full of amusing and stirring incidents. An account of Girard College by Alice Maude Fenn, fully illustrated by Harry Fenn, gives an interesting sketch of the founder, and a clear idea of life at the college. John Burroughs contributes "Ginseng Hunting." Celia Thaxter has a delicious story of the experiences of a spider, entitled, "Madame Arachne," and it is finely illustrated by A. B. Davies. Noah Brooks tells us how a little boy "Ran Away to Home" fifty years ago, and the story has quaint illustrations by H.W.Hall. There are, also, two articles on "Little Josef Hofmann," with a portrait, the first being by Mary Lang and telling of his piano-playing in England and the second by Emily L. Price treats of the boy as a boy and of a personal acquaintance with him on shipboard.

IN BRIEF.

The largest block of granite ever quarried in this country was recently quarried at Auburn, Me. It is seventy feet long, thirty-five wide, and twenty feet thick, and contains 49,000 cubic feet, and will weigh about 4,900 tons.

Four fishermen at Knoxville, Tenn., report that while crossing the Tennessee in a small boat a fish like a serpent and fully ten feet long capsized the boat and broke it into pieces, the men barely getting ashore with their lives.

Decrease of the United States debt last month, $15 387.320. Decrease since 30th June last, $69,217,655 Net U. S debt due 1st February, 1888, $1,210,211,081. Canadian net debt due 1st February, 1888, $230,028,616. Less than one twelfth the United States people, with more than one-sixth of the United States debt. Nothing but the greatness of the Canadian resources could enable us to stand this.—The Critic.

A significant circumstance in the march of events was the vote lately taken in the House of Commons in Great Britain on the motion of Mr. Labouchere for the abolition of hereditary peerages. The vote stood 163 for, 223 against, a majority of only sixty in a moderate house. The Tory majority since the beginning of the session has averaged ninety. The time would seem not long in England when the hereditary aristocracy must go. Great Britain is really Republican in sentiment.

It is stated to have taken 1,900 suits in the State of New York to convince the makers and venders of oleomargarine and other imitations of butter that the law relating thereto is constitutional. In New York the stuff is now said to be sold in most cases for just what it is. It would seem that the West and the South are now the field grounds for the sale of imitation butter as butter, and probably will be until legislators there make laws as stringent as those of New York, and include in the enactment perfect means for carrying them into effect.

The International Company's steamers City of New York and City of Paris, the former of which is launched, are the largest passenger steamers yet constructed, except the Great Eastern. Their tonnage is 10,500, length, 560 ft., beam, 63 ft., depth, 44 ft. They are to be fitted with twin screws, and two sets of triple expansion engines, each set being capable of four-fifths of the maximum speed. Each ship has fifteen water tight compartments, which can only be entered by descent from the upper deck. Accommodation is provided for over 2,000 passengers. A still further shortening of the passage is looked for from these boats.

The city of Chicago receives an average of 10,000 cans of milk per day, eight gallons per can. This is 320,000 quarts, or a little less than one pint per head of population or 27,200,000 gallons yearly. This is exclusive of the cream used. New York city, according to the Milk Reporter, receives about 55,804,880 gallons of milk yearly. In the State of New York milk must contain not less than twelve per cent of solids, of which not less than twenty-five per cent must be fat. Average milk should exceed the lowest legal standard in both solids not fat and in fat to be good merchantable milk. If the average cow gives two gallons per day the year round, this would require 40,000 cows for Chicago's milk, and 76,500 for New York. Denver, Col., is reported to require 3,000 cows to supply the city with its daily milk.

The man who wrote a letter in the New York Sun a few days ago, asking everybody in the country to send him one cent in order that he may thus acquire a fortune of half a million dollars, recalls to that paper an incident in the life of the original John Jacob Astor, millionaire. A ragged beggar called upon Mr. Astor one day at his office in Prince street and asked for alms. Mr. Astor refused to give him anything. The beggar persisted in his appeal; the millionaire was firm in his refusal. The beggar became pertinacious, and spoke of his hunger as he stood in his rags. Mr. Astor appeared to be unmoved. Finally the beggar, in turning to leave the office, put in what he regarded as a clincher by saying: "Remember, Mr. Astor, that though you are a millionaire and I am a beggar, you are driving out a brother, for we are brothers all the same, as children of Adam and the Almighty." "Ay! ay! Hold a minute," cried Mr. Astor, as he pricked up his ears, put his hand in his pocket, and took out a cent. "That is so; we are all brothers. Now, my brother, I give you this cent, and if you get all your other brothers and sisters to give you as much you will be a richer man than I am." The beggar slowly departed with the money in his palm and a thought in his head. Mr. Astor had told the truth, though his millions numbered over twelve at the time.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?"

Shakspeare said there was nothing, but there is. Would Cæsar have had such notoriety if his name had been Caleb W. Pickersgill? Think of Patti drawing $7,000 a night if the bill-boards announced her as Jane Brown! The idea is absurd. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets is a name that has made a record. These tiny, sugar-coated pills cure sick and bilious headache, bowel complaints, internal fever and costiveness.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 212 East 9th St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburg:—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

The Armory:—Surely the presence of a multitude of secret combinations bodes little good to the church of Christ.

Wesleyan Methodist:—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever reveled in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston:—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati:—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Catholic Review, New York:—It is becoming apparent that secret, oath-bound societies are, in principle, un-American; are contrary to the whole spirit and meaning of our institutions, and are therefore dangerous to the Republic.

Baptist Weekly, New York:—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository:—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness:—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880:—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. . . . .The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880:—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia:—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies. . . . .The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago:—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshipers. . . . .The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1888.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE is not a step backward. It is "moving on their works," as Grant proposed to do when asked for terms at Forts Henry and Donnelson. We ask the nominating conventions at Chicago, St. Louis, and Indianapolis, to exclude secret lodgemen from their national nominations, and thus in the words of Edmund Burke, "bolt them out of their holes." If the Prohibition convention grants our request, they become Americans, for the rest of their platform was ours before it was theirs.

POPE LEO XIII., the present reigning pontiff, has issued a letter against boycotting and strikes in Ireland, though an infallible priest would seem to be little else than a universal boycott and strike against both employers and employed, capital and labor, if they dare think for themselves. Our Saviour said, "The truth shall make you free." But if there is a man in Rome whose dicta are infallible, what have the rest of mankind to do but submit to him, or be boycotted,—withdrawn from, and punished for disobedience if they dare think and act for themselves? No two persons ever walked on earth so completely opposite in character, nature and condition as the pope of Rome and Jesus Christ. The pope lives in a palace with a salary of five million a year. The Saviour had no place to lay his head, yet his ideas are emancipating the world.

The senior editor of the Cynosure happened to be in London in 1843, now forty-five years ago. That year the bread of the United Kingdom (England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales) cost fifty millions sterling; and the liquor drunk cost fifty-one millions. Every eleventh person in the United Kingdom was at that time an absolute recognized pauper on the parish list; and Victoria and Prince Albert went in state, from Buckingham Palace to the Italian opera, two miles, and the streets were crowded thick on both sides shouting, "God save the Queen." Yet at that time Cobden and Bright were overturning the Corn laws; and they showed by facts that the increase in the price of bread one penny in the loaf would put nearly another million people on the poor rates. Farm laborers at that time were earning thirty-six cents and a quart of beer a day in the early mowings.

CASTE.—"No church will prosper that has not room and sympathy for the humblest of people." The Protestant church in our own South land verifies this adage. Blessed as she is with a pure faith drawn from the open Word of God and an earnest, holy life and light pointing to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, yet shutting out the least of his dear brethren from their communion, small scattered audiences testify to the blighting effect of caste prejudice on prospects for doing good. But we pass along to a Roman Catholic church or cathedral. The whites and the blacks are entering the same door, and together bow in the worship of the God who of one blood made all who dwell on the face of the whole earth, and here we find crowds assembled. Instead of a serious, thoughtful pastor, we may find an easy-going, jocund priest, who loves his liquor, cards and horse race; and though free from caste prejudice we sigh as we think how poorly he is fitted to point a waiting congregation in the narrow way to heaven.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, fifty years ago, was the mother of American reviews, even at that early day; and at times in its review life has been conducted with a vigor and earnestness of purpose worthy of the name, "North American." Again, it has sunk to the low level of non-committalism in morals, religion and politics, and become a dead sea of political literature. The present editor and owner, Allen Thorndike Rice, has fallen into the unmanly method of popularity practiced by Byron and Voltaire, and satirized by Cowper in his memorable words:

"One leg by truth supported; one by lies;"

for the single purpose of being read.

The last expedient of Mr. Rice is to pit Gladstone to defend Christianity and Ingersoll to assail it: giving the infidel assailant of Christ and the Bible the benefit of the sun and wind in the duel. In the same way George Q. Cannon has been lifted by this Review into North American literature from his harem at Salt Lake whose only literary merit is his Mormonism, and the detestable ideas of these men are thus introduced into good society.

TERENCE POWDERLY, who appears, by a New York paper, April 25th, to have sunk his Knights of Labor from 702,000 to 240,000 members, now declares that he has never been in favor of strikes. Indeed! What, then, has he been doing all this time with his sworn "secrecy," "obedience," and $5,000 a year? Was his whole administration a farce, then?

But he has now discovered, and proclaims a cure for all the ills of labor and laborers. This is a Lecture Bureau to educate laborers so that they will be able to understand their interests and vote for men who will protect them; and this all the while that secret labor unions are not political! The Knights must not plunge into party politics; not they!

But what need is there of his sworn "secrecy and obedience" to get up a lecture bureau, and a course of political teaching?

"Doubtless the pleasure is as great,
In being cheated is as great,"

or the humbuggery, swindling and fraud of secret labor unions would work their own cure. But the whole system of chicanery and imposture begins in an oath of secrecy and ends in a worship which blinds while it bewilders. And liquor not more surely addles the brain than a secret worship stupefies the reason and conscience of those who embark in it. The mission of Christ was "to open the eyes of the blind;" the worship of Satan "blinds the minds of them that believe not." The two are antagonisms; and while the worshipers of Satan are tolerated in the churches of Christ, their "salt has lost its savor, and is thenceforth good for nothing but to be trodden under foot of men."

THE GRAND ARMY RECEIVING EX-REBELS.

"Heroes are much the same—the points agreed;
From Macedonia's madman to the Swede."

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, the highest surviving name on the military roll of the late confederacy, has sent $10 to the Edward Baker Post of the G. A. R. at Philadelphia, with his application for a "contributing" membership. Two hundred members of the Post were present and hurrahed loudly when the letters were read, and the newspapers print (the Cynosure included) and the people of the United States will read, or have already read, the press notice of the incident, as they read of the fall of Colonel Baker, for whom the Post was named, who fell at Antietam—where the dead lay, seven corpses deep, in a sharp gully or ravine, opening into Antietam creek, through which a battalion were threading their way, when an enfilading fire swept them from the hillside and tumbled them upon each other into the bottom of the gulch.

This Gen. Joseph E. Johnston was a Virginian, graduated at West Point in 1829, three years before Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, who fell at the battle of Shiloh.

Both these Generals held commands in Utah and made friends with Brigham Young and his Mormons, every one of whom was a rebel, and every one still hates the United States flag. John B. Floyd was Secretary of War of the United States; and Holliday's first line of stages was run by mustangs and mules condemned by Floyd, and sold to raise money for the incipient rebellion. The Johnstons acted with and under Floyd in preparing the way to divide the Union by the Ohio and Mississippi, create a confederacy, which was to absorb the states of Central America, and northern portions; and, eventually, perhaps, the whole of the South American continent; forming "an empire whose corner-stone," according to Alexander H. Stevens, the Vice President of the Confederacy, was to be "human slavery". Gen. Johnston is now 81 years old, and a fit hero to belong to the sham G. A. R.

—Secretary Stoddard has been chosen vice-president for Illinois by the Prohibition Union of Washington City.

—Rev. W. W. Satterlee, who co-operated with Secretary Stoddard and others in the last State Anti-masonic convention in Minnesota, is one of the Prohibition delegates to the Indianapolis convention.

—The Beltionian Literary Association of Wheaton College invited the public to attend their meeting last Friday and provided a fine program for the entertainment of their friends. Several of the speakers showed abilities of fine promise, and their freedom from conventionality in discussing reform questions was very encouraging.

—At the meeting of Elgin Congregational Association at Batavia, Ill., this week, Rev. Alexander Thomson, of the N. C. A. Board, and Pres. C. A. Blanchard have appointments. The result of this meeting is awaited with some interest in Wheaton on account of the recommendation of the late council that the College church be received to membership.

—Elder J. L. Barlow has returned from Iowa to Wheaton, where he expects to remain for a season. He is proposing to publish a work refuting the theory of annihilation of the wicked dead, which has for some time been in preparation. He will meanwhile be happy to receive calls from churches which need an occasional supply. He can be addressed at Wheaton, Ill.

—The Republican Register of Galesburg, Ill., published lately the report of a district Good Templar meeting in that city. Mr. E. P. Chambers, an old and well-known citizen of Galesburg, now residing in Omaha, replies to the report in a long and very able contribution, which the editor of the Register does his paper an honor and confers a great benefit upon his readers by publishing.

—The Illinois Republicans nominated Joseph Fifer of Bloomington for Governor last Wednesday on the fourth ballot, 424 being necessary for a choice. The Grand Lodge candidate, John C. Smith, got but 48 votes on first ballot. Fifer is a Grand Army pet, but his canvass has some force in fact that he has merit, while Smith can show little but his Masonic and Odd-fellow record. We are thankful to see how gracefully the lodge pretensions were shelved.

—Rev. W. R. Pettiford, president of the Baptist State Convention of Alabama, sends a good list of some ninety Baptist pastors, to whom he wishes the Cynosure sent, to aid in the effort to rid the Baptist churches of that State from the lodge evil. He will send others soon. On Sabbath next he has announced a sermon on secret societies, and has been making careful preparation to discuss the orders and overcome them with the Word of God. He has invited all the lodges to be present. Let all our readers pray for this brother that he may be led of the Holy Spirit and gain for Christ a renowned victory.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold is again, with his interesting family, beginning his summer tour with his calcium light and splendid collection of views. They are well prepared to win their way in any community with their varied entertainments, musical, illustrative and instructive. They begin at Bartlett, Ill., and go west to Kingston, where their tents are stored in Bro. M. L. Worcester's big barn. Bro. Arnold has just returned from a few weeks' visit to Nebraska, and his efforts, he believes, will be blessed of God in entirely checking a serious and unhappy lapse into lodge sympathy, on the part of a small portion of the Wesleyan conference of that State. May the angel of the Lord encamp with this household on their errand of sowing broadcast the precious truth of the Gospel.

—To see the great painting "Christ before Pilate," by the Hungarian Munkacsy, is the opportunity of a life-time. It is now on exhibition at Central Music Hall in this city, and we take this opportunity of commending all our readers who may be in Chicago within the next few weeks to fail not in giving an hour or two to this most remarkable work of modern art. It is not the place to attempt a description of the great painting, which many have appropriately compared to Niagara in the power of the work to grow upon the visitor with every view of it; but it may be said that for originality of conception and power of execution this will stand as one of the great paintings of the world. The artist's conception of Christ is most noble and truthful. The "man of sorrows," "acquainted with grief"—the Christ of the Gospel, bearing on his shoulders the sufferings and moral debt of mankind, is the central figure. The consciousness of his divine mission, the foregleams of the "joy that was set before him," the marks of his garden agony are all strongly and with almost miraculous power depicted in his countenance. We see the whole story which Thomas Hughes has grandly told in his "Manliness of Christ;" and more, we see Isaiah's prophecy fulfilled. The Pilate and Caiaphas of the painting are also characterizations of remarkable strength. There are forty life-size figures in the twenty-four feet of canvass, and each is a study. In the same hall another grand painting "The Wise and Foolish Virgins," by Piloty is on exhibition. The American public is much indebted to Mr. Wanamaker for this rare exhibition.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

A meeting of the National Board was called by the chairman on Saturday morning, to consider especially the recommendation of the political conference of the week before. There were present brethren Hench, Arnold, Pritchard, Fischer, Britten and C. A. Blanchard; also Geo. W. Clark, A. J. Chittenden, W. I. Phillips and H. L. Kellogg. W. R. Hench presided and W. I. Phillips was made secretary.

Rev. T. B. Arnold opened with prayer and brethren Chittenden and Clark were invited to sit as corresponding members. The discussion of the proposed league in political action proceeded. It was voted that the N. C. A. open a department for this work as follows:

Whereas, A recommendation to this Board has been received, asking that a department of the N. C. A. work be organized under the name of the American Anti-secret League; and,

Whereas, Such a department would be in perfect accord with our constitution; therefore,

RESOLVED, That we organize a department of the National Christian Association to be known as the American Anti secrecy League.

RESOLVED, That the purposes of this League shall be:

1. To furnish information to the people concerning the effect of secret societies upon civil government.

2. To secure the nomination and election of men, without regard to party, who, being under no secret obligations to a portion of their fellow citizens, will be able to equitably administer their trust to all.

3. To secure an enrollment of all persons of legal age, without regard to party, who endorse the objects of this League.

4. To furnish information as to the relation of public men to secret organizations.

The formation of local organizations was discussed and referred to brethren Phillips and Fischer as a committee with power to prepare a form of constitution and bylaws.

For the general work of the League W. I. Phillips was appointed superintendent and was authorized to purchase necessary books and employ clerical help to carry out the measures already adopted.

The Board then gave attention to other business. A letter from the General Agent was read and his recommendation was adopted for the settlement of a claim upon the estate of the late Elder John Finney of Ohio.

Secretary Stoddard having last winter been empowered to arrange with Miss E. E. Flagg for an engagement in New England, a letter announcing her recovery was voted to be sent to Washington.

Some uncollectable accounts for books and subscriptions that have accumulated during four years amounting to some $51 were ordered to profit and loss account.

A very interesting letter from Rev. Dr. M. E. Strieby, secretary of the American Missionary Association, was read as an unofficial response to the communication from the Board through its special committee appointed at last meeting.

Bro. T. B. Arnold, publisher of the Free Methodist, explained that the pressing nature of his business engagements was such that he could not do conscientious and satisfactory work as a member of the Board. He had therefore sent in his resignation, he having been lately appointed to fill a vacancy. As the annual meeting approaches the Board preferred not to accept his resignation, hoping he would be able to give his counsel and prayers with them until the end of the year.

attended. As far as I could learn no secretists were present. At Centre I made the acquaintance of lawyer Doan of Wilmington, who had come out to defend the craft. He is a tonguey fellow, who has had a great deal of crookedness in business affairs. He asked fifteen minutes to tell why he was an Odd-fellow, and why he thought all present (of course only those who could) should be. He used much more than this time in appealing to the people's sympathies. How his father and mother were buried in the grave-yard near by; how sacred that place was to him, etc. His main plea for the order was its charity. Said he, "It has alleviated more sorrow and suffering than any other institution." I showed the friends the facts, quoting from the constitution and a grand lodge report which I had.

As near as I could tell, half of my audience at Grassey Run were Masons. Some denials were attempted. John Sears, a member for thirteen years of Sabina lodge (Sabina is a town near by), assisted me with his testimony. He testified that what I had said in reference to the initiation was true, and that I might have said much more with equal truth; that he assisted in unclothing and preparing Reuben Peelle, one of the most zealous advocates of Masonry here, for initiation.

In Bowersville the preacher of the M. E. church, in which I spoke, was an Odd-fellow. He announced my lecture, and added, "I don't believe in Bob Ingersoll, but like to hear what he has to say." The church was crowded Sabbath evening, many standing at the windows out side. There was a larger attendance on Monday evening than could have been expected under the circumstances. An interesting discussion concluded the meeting, during which a number of young men who made enquiries received light, that will, I trust, keep them from joining the lodge.

A friend has sent me a copy of the Jamestown Tribune dated April 20th. A lengthy article appears on the front page headed, "Humbugs." It opens as follows:

"Our people during the past week have demonstrated Barnum's favorite maxim, that 'the American people delight to be humbugged.' On last Sunday and Monday evenings the Friends' church of this place was filled to overflowing to hear a Mr. Stoddard lecture upon a subject of which he admits, and his lecture showed, he knew nothing about," etc.

"Suppose some ignoramus who had never learned to read should announce that he would deliver a lecture upon the subject of English Literature, Astronomy, Geology, or some other abstruse science, would the people flock out to hear him? Yes. But let some prominent lecturer, who has devoted his whole life to some important subject, announce that he will lecture upon that subject here, and a baker's dozen of our people can be coaxed out to greet him if it is a fine evening."

This editor appears to have a poor opinion of his fellow citizens. I do not know how long he has been endeavoring to enlighten them, but would suggest in the future if he desires anyone to believe him that he should not begin with a bold lie, as in this case.

Those who have given pledges or who can help in our work will confer a great favor by sending their contributions to Rev. C. W. Hiatt, State Treasurer, in this city. Collections of late have been light and more funds are needed for spring work.

FROM THE NEW ORLEANS WATCHTOWER.

ANOTHER MOVING APPEAL FOR HELP.

NEW ORLEANS, La., April 28th, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Louisiana State election passed off quietly on the 17th inst. It had been prophesied that if the ringsters lost their hold they might resort to violence, but the Young Men's Democracy was well organized and prepared to meet the ward bosses and political bummers on any issue. The good citizens of New Orleans seem to be rejoicing over the result of the election, and now anticipate having clean streets and a better system of government in the city. We trust to be able to put an Anti-mason Prohibition ticket in the field in 1892.

I preached at Mount Moriah Baptist church Sabbath afternoon from Jer. 12:5. The larger part of the congregation very strongly endorsed what I said against secrecy, although a few lodgites belong to the church. The secret Tabernacles of Plaquemine gave an excursion to this city last Saturday. They invited Rev. George Holmes, pastor of St. Peter's Baptist church, to accompany them and preach in the Old Baptist church of this city. The church was open to receive the excursionists and Mr. Holmes stepped into the pulpit and chose a text from Acts 2:12: "What meaneth all this?" And to the delight of the anti-secretists the reverend unveiled secrecy in such a way it made our hearts leap up for joy, and we thought surely God is good. He said, among other words of truth: Brethren, we, as ministers and elders and Christians, should not join hands with the wicked: yea, God requires us to be separate from every wicked vice. If we would be ministers for God we must separate ourselves from all sin and sinners.

I learned from Bro. Holmes that he has been a reader of the Cynosure from the Minister's Fund since I preached for him last year. Although he thought my course wrong last year, he now believes it right, and says, although he has had little to say, he has been convinced of the evil of secrecy ever since I preached at his church in January, 1887; and has not been in a secret lodge hall since. Thank God for this!

Dear Northern friends, can't you see how God is blessing this good work? Now won't some liberal reformer swell the N. C. A. treasury to at least $3,000 and send free

TWO THOUSAND "CYNOSURES" SOUTH?

Bro. Holmes likes the Cynosure and is sure our course is right, but he is not able to subscribe for it. We need tracts by the thousand for distribution.

I attended services at Orleans Street Baptist church at 7:30 P. M. Sabbath. Rev. Landry preached an interesting sermon. Bro. Landry reads the Cynosure and thinks a minister should be separate from all worldlings.

While at the T. & P. R. R. depot Saturday, awaiting the arrival of the train, a lady said to me, "Didn't you speak at Elder Davis's church in Carrollton Thursday night?" I said, "Yes."

"Well, I got mad with you, brother, for I belong to a secret order, and you ought not talk that way. I had just persuaded my husband to send in his application to join, and now he has changed and never will join: and I have had to come out, too!"

Thank God for the saving of that man from the secret pit!

I met a lady from Amite City. She was glad to see me and tried to persuade me not to return to Amite City. She says the Odd-fellows are red-hot, and have declared if I come back there I'll never get away alive. She thinks secret lodges wrong, but thinks people must be careful in speaking against them for fear of violence.

A member of Pilgrim Tabernacle No. 4, G. G. A. O. B. and S. of L. and C. F. L. C., was buried Wednesday at 11 A. M. Rev. John Marks officiated. It was somewhat surprising to see these secret "Tabs" get Bro. Marks to bury one of their deceased. However, this proves their weakness. Bro. Marks made some pointed remarks. There were about sixteen "Tabs" in uniform. This shows an unusual decline in secret Tabernacle circles.

I preached at the LaHarpe Street M.E. church, Rev. H. Taylor, pastor, Thursday at 7:30 P. M. There was a fair and attentive audience, although this church, like most of the Methodist churches, is sore afflicted with lodgery. However, Bro. Taylor is a cultured, and an anti lodge man. My sermon was very heartily endorsed by the pastor, deacon and a number of the congregation. This is one of the leading M. E. churches. I have promised, D. V., to preach Sabbath at 3 P. M. at Mount Olive Baptist church, Rev. L. Taylor, pastor; and at St. Mark's Fourth Baptist, Rev. W. W. Davis, pastor, at 7:30 P. M.

I offered the following resolution to the St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church last night:

"Dear brethren and sisters: after a prayerful consideration of the secret lodge system, we are convinced that the whole system of secret lodges is wrong and anti-Christian; therefore,

"Resolved, That we, the St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church of New Orleans, do hereby advise our members to 'have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.' Eph. 5: 11.

"Resolved, That it is the duty of a church of Christ to take care of its own sick and bury its own dead, and thereby keep itself separate from the world.

"Resolved, That this church establish a treasury to be known as a poor treasury, for the purpose of sustaining our crippled, sick and destitute members, and bury our dead.

"Resolved, That we advise all of our members to pay to the aforesaid treasury the sum of twenty-five cents per capita each month for the aforesaid purpose, and thereby obey the teaching of the New Testament Scriptures.

"Resolved, That we advise our members to visit one another and assist each other in times of want."

The above would have no doubt been unanimously adopted had it not been for brother John H. Brandon, an Odd-fellow, who desired to have Eph. 5:11 read; after which he desired to be informed when and what hour the Son of Man would appear. After several uncalled-for remarks, the speaker desired a special meeting to be called to debate the question. Then Bro. Andrew Walker, who chanced to be a secret Tabernacler, grew uneasy and declared that "Dis here church can't never take care of its sick members. We's got a load on us now and if we goes to pay two bits er month to this church to take care of its sick we can't pay for this church." However, Bro. Walker pays 50 cents per month to his Tab., and $2.50 tomb tax, and all assessments when required to do so, and thinks it all right; but to drop the lodge and pay the church only 25 cents per month seems to him too extravagant. Rev. J. A. Cox, although a secretist, favored the resolution. After much unnecessary argument the resolution lay over until the deacons meet the second Friday night in May. We trust to get it through the official board, as the pastor and four of the deacons are Anti-masons. Pray for our triumphant success.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

—Statistical tables in the Baptist Year-Book show the total number of members in the 31,891 Baptist churches to be 2,917,315, indicating a gain of 184,745 members during the year. The number of baptisms reported is 158,373, which is 2,995 more than were reported a year before.

THE HOME.

AN EMPTY NEST.

A grave old man and a maiden fair
  Walked together at early morn;
The thrushes up in the clear, cool air
  Sang to the farmer planting his corn.
And, oh, how sweet was the fresh-turned mould!
  And, oh, how fair were the budding trees!
For daisy's silver and daffodil's gold
  Were full of the happy honey-bees.

"Ah, look! there's an empty nest," she said;
  "And I wonder where sing the last year's birds!"
Then the old man quickly raised his head,
  Though scarcely he noted her musing words;
He tore the nest from the swaying tree;
  He flung to the winds its moss and hay,
And said, "When an empty nest you see,
  Be sure that you throw it far away."

"But why?" she asked, with a sorrowing face—
  "Why may not the pretty home abide?"
"Because," he answered, "'twill be a place
  In which the worm and the slug will hide.
Last year 'twas fair enough in its way—
  It was full of love, and merry with song;
But days that are gone must not spoil to-day,
  Nor dead joys do the living joys wrong."

The maiden heard with a thoughtful face—
  Her first false love had gone far away—
And she thought, Is my heart become a place
  For anger and grief and hate to stay?
Down, heart, with thy sad, forsaken nest!
  Fling far thy selfish and idle pain;
The love that is ours is always the best;
  And she went with a smile to her work again.

HARD TIMES.

"I've got a job, mother!"

"True, Bob?"

"Yes, a whole cord of wood to saw. Got in ahead of everyone else. Followed a load on the street till it got to the place where they'd bought it, and got the promise of it."

Bob straightened up his thin, awkward, overgrown figure with great pride, and then began poking the fire.

"Take care, Bob," cautioned his mother, "the wood's most gone."

"But there'll be an extra dollar to-morrow, don't you see? Fifteen cents I'm to pay Jim Johnson for the loan of his saw and buck. I'm going to buy fifteen cents worth of wood, and going to get a pane of glass for the window; and then, Kitty," bending over a little girl who lay on a miserable bed, "something'll be left for you. I'm going to get you some of those nice white rolls you saw at the baker's one day—yes I am, Kitty! and something else, I shan't tell you till you see. Just wait till I come home to-morrow! The first job I've had for all my trying! I wish the hard times were over."

Bob mused a few moments on all the weary miles he had walked in search of work through cold, storm and snow, since the day when, a few weeks ago, the daily newspaper had lengthened its routes and discharged some of its carrier boys, him among the number.

"Who's hard times, anyway, that they all talk about?" said Kitty, pressing a cold little hand to her feverish cheek, as she turned her restless eyes towards him.

"Why, it ain't anybody, Kitty; it's only that it's hard to get work, and hard to get money, and hard for poor folks to live."

"Yes,"—mother shook her head with an expression of woful realization on her face. "The glass works are closed, so there are boys and men out there; and they're sending the girls out of the shops; and people that gave out their sewing before do it themselves now—that's how it is I get so little—and mills and factories shut up."

"I should think," said Bob, looking gravely into the fire he had stirred into a feeble blaze, "that rich folks would try all the more to give poor folks work; such times."

"They say they can't, somehow," said his mother.

"P'r'aps," said Kitty, "they wouldn't have enough money themselves to last till hard times was gone, if they did."

"P'r'aps so," said Bob. "Never mind," he added briskly, "the lady I'm to saw for gets lots of wood, and may be she'll hire me again, and may be you'll get more sewing, mother, and then we'll get the mattress from the pawnshop, and buy some stuff to make Kitty well; and then it won't be hard times any longer, will it?"

* * * * * *

"It'll take an hour to thaw it out," said Bob, as in the dim light of the following morn he broke into pieces with a hatchet the corn-bread, frozen to the solidity of a stone.

"There'll be warm water soon, and then I can soak it, Bobby."

"I guess I'd better not wait, though," he said, crunching between his teeth some of the flinty morsels. "You see, it's most a day's work, and I want to show 'em that I'm equal to it, so I'll be the surer of gettin' more. Now, I'll move your machine by the stove, mother—it's queer how the poor thing seems to be like folks, and wants to be warmed up before it'll go. Too bad, Kitty, to have to take my coat off you, but the stove's gettin' nicely warmed up now, and I've got an iron on it for mother to put to your feet." He took the coat which had been over her, but stopped to carefully tuck about her the bit of bedding before putting it on. Then, with a caressing pat and a cheery good-by, he went out into the bitter, bitter, stinging cold.

It seemed to enfold his thinly-clad frame in a clasp which might well seem worse than the grasp of death to any but a boy still bearing, through hardship and privation, the blessed spirit of youthful hope, braced by loving solicitude for still feebler ones. The heavy sticks of wood appeared almost to greet him with a friendly look as he went at his work with hearty good will.

But as the hours wore away the boy began to realize that something besides mere energy and will-purpose is necessary to carry one through a day of hard work in the atmosphere of a Northern winter. All his resolutions could not keep off the frequently recurring dizziness and faintness which seemed at times almost to overwhelm him with an impulse to fling himself down upon the pitiless snow beside him. He tried to laugh it off and fight it out, yielding to it once or twice only far enough to sit down for a moment on his sawbuck and rest his head on his trembling hand, springing up suddenly with a fear that some one might see him and think him unfit for hard work.

Finished at last it was, and piled with extra care and neatness to the last stick, each one of which had grown heavier and heavier. Then Bob stood in the comfortable kitchen and waited for the mistress to come and pay him.

"Eighty cents?" she said, offering him some change.

"I—thought—ma'am, a dollar was the regular price."

"Yes, but you're a boy. You don't expect man's wages, do you?"

"It's a full cord, ma'am, isn't it?" said Bob, meekly, driven to say more than he otherwise would have ventured by the strength of his desire to fulfill his promise to poor little Kitty.

"Yes, I know. But it's very hard times, and people can't expect what they used to get. There's plenty ready to do all I want for that."

Bob knew it. More than one sawyer had come into the yard that day, looking with hungry eyes at his job and speculating on the chances of any more work to be had there. As the lady turned away he walked slowly out.

"It must be the warmth of the kitchen," he said to himself as he was forced by the sick feeling in his head and the weakness in his knees to sit down on the step outside.

Mrs. Brainard had no thought of being unkind or unjust. Months before, when her husband had informed her of the pressure which was tightening upon his business affairs, she had dutifully and practically accepted his suggestion of retrenchment in expenses. She had cut down on her charities, worn her last year's cloak, made over for the children dresses and flannels which she had been in the habit of giving away, and industriously labored through the plain sewing she had heretofore given out. Naturally inclined to be generous, and full of sympathy for suffering which really came under her notice, she had made up her mind that liberal giving must be deferred to a more convenient season, and had closed her ears to the cry of the destitute which arose on every side.

She had been dressing to go out, and, having returned to her room, was leisurely brushing her cloak, when she saw the boy she had just paid coming out of her back yard. He essayed to cross the street, and her attention was drawn to his singular manner. She watched for a moment his stumbling, apparently careless steps, and then with an expression of dismay, hastily threw on her wraps, ran down stairs and out into the street. It had not been at all crowded; but she had seen the boy, when directly in its middle, look first one way and then the other with a dazed, confused expression, putting his hand to his head. Whether he had then fallen or been thrown down by passing horses, she had not been able to perceive, but she saw him quickly raised, placed upon a sleigh, and driven around a corner. Hurrying after, she could see men carrying him into a tenement house at the distance of about two blocks. She followed, and opening the door quietly, entered and stood inside, unnoticed by those who were anxiously occupied with him.

"He ain't hurt, is he?" asked a woman's appealing voice.

"No, I think not," said a gentleman with a professional air, pushing back a ragged gingham shirt from a bony arm, in search of a pulse. "What has he eaten to-day?"

"Well, about nothing, I guess. His breakfast was all frozen up, and he wouldn't wait for fear of not getting more work."

"Any lunch?"

"Likely not. It's thawed now, Bobby," she said wistfully, offering it as he opened his eyes. "You'll eat some now, won't you?"

Bob raised himself and took a staggering step or two toward the child.

"I ain't got it for you, Kitty," he said with a half sob. "'Twas only eighty cents, and it was a glass of red jelly I was goin' to bring you—and the white rolls—"

"Never mind talking now, my boy," said the doctor, kindly, holding to his lips something he had poured into a cup. "Clear case of starvation," he said, whispering to a Mrs. Brainard as he came to offer her a chair. "Plenty of such cases, this winter, you know. God only knows how these poor bear so much in the way of hunger and cold. And when the hard work is added, nature is strained to her last point of endurance—sometimes beyond it?"

"And what then?" asked Mrs. Brainard, with her face turning a little pale.

"Death." He laid a coin on the sewing-machine, and hurried away, after saying to the mother—

"Give him something nourishing—in small quantities at first."

"Stop!" said Mrs. Brainard, laying her hand on the woman's arm, as she again pressed upon Bob the uninviting looking corn-bread. "Oh! is it you, Mrs. Finley?"—recognizing with a further sinking at the heart the face of the woman whom she had told some time before that she could give out no more sewing until better times came. The hollow eyes and sunken cheeks—poverty-marks worn deep during dreadful months lived through since then—had prevented her knowing her at first.

"Wait a few moments," she went on. "Let me bring him something."

She hurried home with but one pressing thought, and gave quick orders to her girl, while she herself gathered from pantry and store-room such things as could be most readily utilized. And the two were at Bob's side with hot coffee and tempting food, by the time he had succeeded in making Kitty understand that eighty cents would only buy the wood, and mend the window, and pay the rent of the saw, and not one cent over.

"If that boy had died I should have been his murderer," said Mrs. Brainard, her eyes now opened to the extent of dealing fairly and mercilessly with her own short-comings.

"Ah me! how I have missed the blessings promised to those who consider the poor!"

She was returning from a second visit to Bob's home, undertaken for the purpose of carrying there some of the made-over flannels. She felt as she looked upon them as though a voice whispered to her: "The spoil of the poor is in your houses." And it was with a fully awakened heart that she that night read: "If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; but thou shall open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need."

Mrs. Brainard will hereafter practice her economies upon herself instead of upon the poor, whom the Master has left to be always with us. She will cut off luxuries with an unsparing hand, but will aim to give more work, rather than less, during hard seasons, and will have an eye quickened by the spirit of loving care for others; for she can never forget that a starving boy worked all day in the bitter cold, within the sound of her voice and the sight of her eye and the reach of her comforts, and she had not made it her business to know or care.—Church and Home.

One having precious stones may flash a moment's admiration upon spectators, but good nature brings happiness to scores and hundreds, and the best of it is, that it takes nothing from the possessor.

THE FRIEND OF THE ANIMALS.

In the year 1823 a boy was born in the city of New York.

When he grew old enough to go to school he saw many cruel sights as he passed to and fro through the streets of the city. Often he saw poor, mangy, half-starved dogs that had no homes; he saw cruel boys throwing stones at them, and kicking or beating them, and the kind boy's heart ached to see the beasts suffer so, and he wished he were big enough to thrash all those cowardly boys.

Sometimes he saw forlorn cats that looked hungry and wretched, and the boys would tie tin cans to their tails, and chase them with stones and clubs, and try to kill them.

"Don't do that," said Henry Bergh sometimes; "it is mean and cruel."

"Hold your tongue! None of your goody-good for us! We are bound to have our fun," cried the other boys.

He saw horses which were so old or sick that they had no strength, or so ill fed that you could count all their ribs, and yet these poor horses were harnessed to heavy loads, and the drivers would beat the beasts with clubs to make them go.

"Why do you beat your poor horse so?" he once asked an angry driver.

"To make him attend to his own business, and I'll try a touch of the same treatment to you if you don't attend to yours," said the driver, fiercely cracking his whip. "He is my horse, and I shall do as I choose with him."

As Henry Bergh grew older he saw many other ways in which domestic animals were made to suf fer He found out about the cruel dog-fights and cock-fights. He saw that often when horses had grown too old to work, they were turned out to starve along the roadsides; or when they became lame or injured so that they could not walk, they were dragged through the streets with broken legs or mortal wounds, instead of being shot and put out of their misery. He saw that poultry while yet alive were plucked of their feathers, and that calves and sheep that were being carried to market suffered unnecessary pain. Each one of the poor little beasties had his four legs tied together; then they were all piled in the wagon or car, one on top the other, any way they happened to come, and so they all jolted off to market, crying with pain all the way.

When Henry Bergh became a man he found out that many good men and women like himself did not want the animals to suffer; so he and other men started a society to stop cruelty to animals. The society set to work and had some good laws passed which forbid cruelty to animals, and which punish those who are cruel. Many thousand men have been fined or otherwise punished for beating their horses, or for not feeding them enough, or for overloading them. Boys and men are also punished for maltreating dogs and cats. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has its agents in nearly every place. Sometimes these are ladies, and very active agents they are. I knew a very nice lady who owned beautiful horses, of which she was very fond. She not only looked after the comfort of her own fine animals, but took a genuine interest in all the hard-worked hack horses of the small city where she lived. She could never see a set of horse ribs staring at her but she stopped her own carriage to inquire of the driver what kept his horses so thin. She had a right to do this—indeed, it was her duty—for she was the agent of Mr. Bergh's society, and was empowered to prosecute those who ill-treated animals. I never heard of her doing this, however. She had a very pleasant way of saying what she had to say, and so nobody took offence at her criticisms.

Did you ever see a train of cars loaded with cattle or sheep for the city market? How mournful is the lowing of the beasts when the train stops! It seems as if the sad creatures knew that they would never again gambol and frisk in the fields, but that the very next day they are to be killed and hung up in the butcher stalls. But these animals are not uncomfortable. Each one has plenty of good air to breathe, and can stand up on his own feet in the cage, and when he is hungry an attendant gives him food and drink. Henry Bergh's society looks after all the great cattle trains than come thundering over our western prairies to bring meat to our great cities.

On the morning of March 12th, a day that will be memorable to the inhabitants of New York for a generation to come as the day on which the great blizzard began, Henry Bergh passed quietly away at the age of sixty-five. His was a life that was not in vain, for the world was the better for his having lived in it.

Sometimes boys and girls have a society to promote kindness to animals, and the members promise not to rob bird's nests, or to shoot animals. Do you belong to such a society? Or are you such a society all by yourself and are you helping to bring in the good time promised in the Bible, "when they shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain"? —Harper's Young People.

SATAN'S SERVANTS.

The devil's four chief servants. Here are their names:

"There's no danger." That is one.

"Only this once." That is another.

"Everybody does so." This is the third.

"By and by." That is the fourth.

When tempted from the path of strict rectitude, and "There is no danger" urges you on, say, "Get thee behind me, Satan!"

When tempted to give the Sabbath up to pleasure, or to do a little labor in the workshop or counting-room, and "Only this once" or "Everybody does so" whispers at your elbow, do not listen for a moment to the dangerous counsel.

All four are cheats and liars. They mean to deceive and cheat you out of heaven. "Behold," says God, "now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." He has no promise for "By and by."—Christian at Work.

TEMPERANCE.

REFORM IN CONGRESS.

Congress is no longer a gathering of drinking, fighting politicians. It has not, of course, thoroughly reformed, and anybody who knows the feelings of some of its members will be inclined to disagree with Congressman Dingley when he says that for seven years he has not seen an intoxicated member on the floor of the House. Such a statement is as extreme as would be the assertion that every Congressman is a total abstainer. Drunkenness in the House is, however, exceedingly rare. Only one flagrant public instance has occurred this session, and that occasioned such a farce as to fail entirely in pointing a moral. National legislatures are becoming more temperate, or at least are not so public in exhibitions of their shortcomings. The present Congress actually contains more avowed Prohibitionists than any of its predecessors. Should a temperance debate be started at least a dozen members could be relied upon to picture the beauties of total abstinence, and nearly all of them are good talkers. They allied themselves to the prohibition element through various causes. One Congressman, at least, would to-day be a wealthy owner of large estates but for his father's partiality for wine, and this taught him a lesson he has heeded. —Washington Letter.

CLOSING SALOONS ON SUNDAYS.

The Owens Sunday closing bill, which is now a law of Ohio, takes from the council of municipal corporations the power to decide whether intoxicating liquors shall be sold or not on Sunday, and leaves the law prohibiting all sales of liquor on Sunday. Hasty interviews with a number of saloon-keepers disclose a wide difference of opinion among them as to the propriety of the law and as to its effect. Several of the leading saloon-keepers say they like the law; that they want to have a day's rest like other people; that New York and other large cities close saloons on Sunday and we can endure the deprivation as well as they; that it will be promotive of better order on Sundays and give to all classes better enjoyment of the day. Others claim that it will be disastrous to their business, as the best receipts of the week are those of Sunday, especially in the summer. It is openly predicted that one result will be to make every Republican saloon-keeper a Democrat, though that view is not shared by all. The measure had but two negative votes in the Senate—both Democrats, but Democrats voted for it. The most bitter opponents of it were the Republican Senators from Cincinnati, who abstained from voting.

HER CHILD SAVED HER.

Continued drinking and abuse from her husband caused Mrs. Susan Rance, who lives at the corner of Thirty-first and La Salle streets, Chicago, to leave her home lately at night with the intention of jumping into Lake Michigan. Her little 13 year-old boy thinking that some such determination had taken possession of her, followed and remained with her, refusing to turn back. They wandered down town together, and were found sitting near the Illinois Central Railway tracks at the foot of Peck court, at 8:20 o'clock, by an officer. Both were crying bitterly, and the mother was endeavoring to persuade the boy to return home without her. The officer asked a few questions and then took both to the Harrison Street Station. The little boy was soon released and sent home, but the mother was retained until her son called for her at midnight. She had often spoken at home of killing herself if her husband, who is a blacksmith employed at the Illinois Central shops, would not cease drinking.

THE INDIANA DEMOCRATS.

The longest plank in the platform of the late Indiana State convention is against prohibition, and reads thus: "It is provided by the Constitution of this State that the liberty of the people should be protected, and that their private property should not be taken without just compensation; and we are opposed to any change in the Constitution tending to weaken these safeguards, or to any legislation which asserts the power to take or destroy the private property of any portion of the people of this State without compensation, or which unjustly interferes with their personal liberty as to what they shall eat or drink, or as to the kind of clothing they shall wear; believing that the Government should be administered in the way best calculated to confer the greatest good upon the greatest number, without sacrificing the rights of persons or of property, and leaving the innocent creeds, habits, customs, and business of the people unfettered by sumptuary laws, class legislation or extortionate monopolies. While standing faithfully by the rights of property and personal liberty guaranteed to the people by the Constitution, we distinctly declare that we are in favor of sobriety and temperance, and all proper means for the promotion of these virtues; but we believe that a well-regulated license system, and reasonable and just laws upon the subject faithfully enforced, would be better than extreme measures, which, in conflict with public sentiment, would never be effectively executed, thus bringing law into disrepute and tending to make sneaks and hypocrites of our people."

Albert Griffin, chairman of the Anti-saloon Republican National Committee, reports that numerous letters have already been received from Senators, Congressmen, Governors, and other leaders, including several whose names are being considered in connection with the Presidency, strongly indorsing the movement to commit the party openly against the saloon. The Anti-saloon Republican National Conference, assembled in New York May 2 to continue in session two days.

In her address before the international Council of Women, Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett, of the National Temperance Hospital, Chicago, stated that about seven hundred cases in all have been treated in the hospital during the two years since it was founded. These are from all classes of people, and include all general conditions of disease. There have been no deaths. Experience proves that in the most critical stages the patients are better without alcohol than with it. The requirement of the constitution of the hospital, that all medicines used in the hospital must be prepared without alcohol, has been complied with.

The open saloon is the devil's trap for our boys and he catches them by playing on the social instinct in their natures. The gilded saloons of the city, and the cross-road groceries of the country are the recruiting officers for the poor house, for the jail, for vagabondage, for disgrace and for hell. In the name of God, shut them up! They say that if you close the saloon the drinking of whisky will go on in private; that is too true to some extent. But it will be a great moral victory over the evil thing to hide its ugly head in the dark. The old topers may follow it to its den but we will save our boys. Prevention is better than cure and we all know it is easier.—The Living Way.

A local paper out in Iowa, the Pine Tree Press, says: "Wayne county has just cause to be proud of its position among its neighboring counties as regards court expenses. During the past three years there has never been a court to our knowledge that lasted over one week, and most of them could be gotten through within three days. At this term it is very questionable if there will be a criminal case." It is needless to add that Wayne county is a prohibition county. Such court records were never heard of in counties that have saloons. Nor is this an exceptional case. We personally know of many counties in that State that can show as good a record.

THE STATE MEETINGS.

MICHIGAN SOLDIERS, ATTENTION!

To the Grand Army of this Republic:

GREETING:—As soldiers of the cross of Christ, enlisted to strive against all sin, we propose to hold an Anti-Secret Convention at Salem, Washtenaw Co, Mich., beginning May 22, in the evening, at 7:30 oclock.

Let there be a grand rally, with every soldier at his post.

A more extended call soon. Let all interested watch for it. Remember the date, May 22, 23, 24, 1888.

D. A. RICHARDS, Pres.
H. A. DAY, Sec'y.

MICHIGAN MEETING.

It has been some time since we have undertaken a meeting in Michigan, and we feel especially solicitous for the convention now being arranged for, to be held in Salem, Washtenaw county, commencing May 22, 1888. The convention is to be held in the Baptist church. Rev. D. A. Richards, president of the association, will deliver the opening address. Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College is expecting to be present and speak Wednesday evening. Such workers as C. C. Foote, A. H. Springstein, B. Hampe, A. E. Burt, Esq., and others will doubtless be present to add to the interest of the meeting. We await with prayerful interest the results. Sessions will be held morning, afternoon and evening. The convention will close Thursday evening.

We are especially anxious to see the Board of Trustees all present, so that some necessary business can be attended to without hindrance.

An earnest and interesting letter from Rev. Beatty, Baptist minister in Salem, requests a large attendance and earnest effort on the part of all, to save his church and vicinity from the grip of lodgery. Brethren, do your best. H. A. DAY, Sec. M. C. A.

WHAT PENNSYLVANIANS SAY.

YORK, Pa., April 30, 1888.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I think the Pennsylvania readers of the Cynosure will be much interested in the following extracts from letters, which I have received lately in regard to the reorganization of the Pennsylvania Christian Anti-Secret Association.

Mr. J. G. Stauffer, of Quakertown, Bucks Co., sends me names and addresses of ministers who are opposed to secret societies, and says: "I am yet interested in the anti-secret work, and some more in this place take interest in the same." He reports that many refuse to hear or pay lodge ministers; and that some have tried to advocate secret societies from the pulpit. Mr. Stauffer is a model reformer; for he takes the Cynosure, reads it through, and then sends it to some one needing "more light." He also distributes much anti-secret literature besides.

Elder S. E. Miller, of Clifford, Susquehanna Co., says: "I am inclined to think your movement is from the Lord; for I have felt deeply that something of the kind is very much needed. I have felt to call upon God to move his people in this matter." He is unwell, but is ready to do all he can to arouse those in his locality.

Mr. C. W. Dana, of Tunkhannock, Wyoming Co., says: "I do not like secret societies and have never wished to become a member of any." Mr. Dana is a genuine Prohibitionist, who has reported for the Voice; and he has aided the temperance reform much in York county. He suggests organizing young men to oppose liquor traffic and secretism.

Mr. E. C. Spencer, of Wysox, Bradford Co., says: "I am glad to hear you are going to reorganize the anti-secret association in this State. I am very much interested in the cause of anti-secrecy, and I have been doing what I could." He takes the Cynosure and the American; and has had lectures by Levington, Rathbone, and Raynor and others. He also promises to aid the State work all he can.

Rev. J. T. McCrory, of Pittsburg, who seems to be the busiest gentleman in Pennsylvania, having temperance work, Law and Order duties, and plenty of religious work of all sorts, says he is "heartily opposed to all forms of secretism." And he adds: "I wish success to every legitimate movement against this new form of tyranny."

Rev. W. B. Musselman, a Mennonite minister, of Bethlehem, Northampton Co., says: "I positively agree with the movement against secrecy. I preach salvation; and every one who gets converted leaves the lodge, etc., for they come out from among them. Even in my preaching I make continual mention of secrecy as being one of the vilest devices of Satan."

Rev. William J. Reid, editor of the United Presbyterian, of Pittsburg, "will be glad to publish articles on anti-secrecy, if they are carefully written and of suitable length for a weekly paper."

Rev. H. H. George, President of Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Beaver Co., says: "I do rejoice in the wide extended success of the anti-secret reform."

This is certainly very encouraging to me; and I sincerely hope every citizen of Pennsylvania who reads this cheering report from so many of our thinking and working reformers, will immediately resolve to do all that can be done to arouse the better class of our citizens, so they will aid us to overthrow the grand kings and priests of the secret empire. Yours, etc., EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. J. Augustus Cole has just left England for Africa. He writes to the Wesleyan Methodist from Liverpool, England, April, 14: "I returned here from London on the 12th, but hope to be there again on the 23d, at the invitation and expense of Dr. J. G. Jones, to attend the Congregational annual meeting. I am sailing for Africa on the 5th of May, in the steamship Niger. I have several letters inviting me home, especially from St. John's church. I am taking with me a young Afrio-Englishman to assist me in my work. His mother, an English lady, pays his passage of $112 out to Sierra Leone. He is a very intelligent lad, and just what I need."

—Dr. G. F. Pentecost lately closed a series of very successful meetings at Schenectady, New York, and has gone to Atlanta, Ga. At Schenectady the whole city was moved; the opera house, holding 2,000, was crowded daily, and hundreds were converted.

—Rev. J. M. Hervey, who removed from Los Angeles to Boston last fall, has been preaching during a series of meetings in the United Presbyterian church, Boston. Religious interest has greatly increased in the church, and twenty-seven were added to the membership.

—The evangelist B. F. Mills has been laboring in a union meeting at Providence, Rhode Island. Some 1,400 cards have been returned, from all parts of the city, of persons desirous of leading the Christian life. Of this number, some fifty have preferred the United Presbyterian congregation, whose pastor, Rev. M. S. McCord, is a well-known helper in reform work in Rhode Island.

—It is proposed to erect a monument to the memory of John Eliot, the "Apostle to the Indians," in Eliot square, Roxbury, Mass., and unveil it at the two hundredth anniversary of his death, which occurs in about two years.

—The late Rev. Asa Bullard, who died a few weeks ago at a good old age, was eminently useful in Sabbath-school work in New England especially and throughout the country. A memorial was proposed soon after his death and received with great favor. The Congregational Sunday-school people of Boston have decided to raise $100,000, to be invested, and the income expended in the support of Sunday-school missionary work in this country.

—At a missionary meeting held by the College church, Sabbath evening, Miss Hulbert, the lady principal, spoke on the recent opening of Corea, the "Hermit nation," to the Gospel. There are but five missionaries for the twelve million people of Corea, and their efforts are so urgently required at Sole, the capital, that they are unable to answer the pressing calls for help in various outlying districts. A native church of twenty-five members has been formed after four year's labor. The religion of Corea is ancestor-worship, and there seems to be a general turning of the people toward something more divine. Miss Hulbert has a brother in Corea and her account was intensely interesting. Prof. E. Whipple also spoke with no less interest of the work among the Indians, in which he has taken part as principal of the Romona Indian school at Santa Fe.

—The Presbyterian church, North, resolved to signalize this one hundredth year of the organic life of Presbyterianism in the United States, by raising a million of dollars for foreign missions, besides doing other excellent deeds. The Treasurer of the Foreign Board reports that he has received $865,000, and a strong plea is made for gifts during the ten remaining days of the year to make up the shortage of $135,000. The last General Assembly also urged the raising of $800,000 for the Board of Home Missions, and The Evangelist says that amount has been almost collected "within a mere fraction."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII. Second Quarter.—May 20.

SUBJECT.—Jesus in Gethsemane.—Matt. 26: 36-46.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered.—Heb. 5: 8.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

"And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebadee:" John and James. These three constituted the innermost of the concentric circles of the discipleshood. Our Lord felt for them a love of peculiar interest and complacency, because, as we may presume, he perceived in them some peculiar features of moral strength and nobleness on the one hand, or of moral sensitiveness, receptivity and loveliness on the other.—Morison.

Not having a closet for prayer, Jesus had to make one on mountain top or in leafy shade. He had a secret place to which he habitually repaired. Have some spot sacred to communion with God. In the familiar place there is less distraction; only where we can be thoroughly alone with God, can we feel free to utter our deepest needs.—R. Glover.

Prayer and commuion with his Father was Jesus's refuge in the hour of trouble.

Jesus was intensely human, as well as divine. And while he must "tread the winepress alone," it was a comfort to know that human friends and sympathy were near at hand.

Those who live nearest to Jesus, and learn most of him, and imbibe most of his spirit, can be nearest him in his hours of conflict and victory, and on the mount of transfiguration.

"And began to be sorrowful and very heavy:" or, as the Rev. Ver., "sore troubled." So great was his sorrow now, that all which he had previously endured was as nothing; now, as for the first time, he began to experience sorrow. Mark says that he was "sore amazed;" and the original, which is aptly rendered, implies that the disclosure of the sorrow came upon him, if not literally as a surprise, at least with new and unexpected force. Luke (22: 44) says he was "in an agony."—Abbott.

THE REASONS FOR CHRIST'S GREAT AGONY. Why was Christ so sorrowful, when many a martyr has gone triumphantly to his cross; and to many a hero death has been "welcome as the sight of sky and stars to prisoned men?" It was "something far deadlier than death" that weighed upon his soul. He bore his trial and reproaches and crucifixion more bravely than any hero. What bitter portion was in his Gethsemane cup? "The right understanding of the whole of this narrative," observes Alford, "must be acquired by bearing in mind the reality of the manhood of our Lord."

"The sorrows of the garden were a part of the atoning passion of Jesus. He was our Substitute, and was bearing alone the burden of the sin of humanity. This, above and beyond everything else, must be the sting of this absolute grief of his soul."—Meredith. The unrighteousnesses of the world were, in some peculiar way, accumulated on his soul, and piled up to heaven like mountains upon mountains. He was "bearing the sin of the world" (John 1: 29). "The Lord had laid on him the iniquity of us all." Thus he was being "wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities" (Isa. 53: 5, 6).—Morison.

I cannot help feeling that part of Christ's state of mind in the garden was owing to the deep, awful sense of responsibility, the conception of the supreme importance to man of his standing firm at this crisis. There never was so great a crisis, and he was aware of its length and breadth.—President Woolsey.

"Sorrowful, even unto death:" so burdened with sorrow that it seemed as if human nature could not live under it. Doubtless it would have crushed him to death had not the angels come and strengthened him (Luke 22: 43).

"Let this cup pass from me." The ingredients of the cup were certainly "not the mere present feebleness and prostration of the bodily frame; not any mere section of his sufferings, but the whole,—the betrayal, the trial, the mocking, the scourging, the cross, and all besides which our thoughts cannot reach."—Alford.

"Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Underneath that awful agony there lay, millions of fathoms deep, unmoved and unmovable, the intense desire that his Father's wish and will should be done. That wish and will were in reality his own. And thus he both desired, and he did not desire, that the cup should pass from him. In the surface element of his feelings he desired that the cup should pass. In the ocean of feeling that lay beneath his desire was that it should not pass. And there was the divinest harmony between the two desires. In both there was a longing for what was good. But the good that was longed for in the undermost and deepest emotions was immeasurably the greater, and hence the Father willed that the cup should not pass altogether away, and the Son's will was entirely the same. —Morison.

"And findeth them asleep:" not sound asleep, as we may infer from ver. 43, but in a dozing, drowsy state.—Schaff. Sleeping for sorrow, says Luke. No other evangelist mentions the cause of their drowsiness; but Luke was a physician, and was prepared to speak on this point. —Jacobus. It is frequently supposed that this was proof of wonderful stupidity, and indifference to their Lord's sufferings. The truth is, however, that it was just the reverse: it was proof of their great attachment, and their deep sympathy in his sorrows.—Barnes. There is another symptom of grief, which is not often noticed, and that is profound sleep. I have often witnessed it even in mothers, immediately after the death of a child. Criminals, we are told by Dr. Akerman, the keeper of Newgate, in London, often sleep soundly the night before their execution.—Dr. Rush's "Diseases of the Mind," p 319.

Observe, they forgot sorrow in sleep; Christ conquers it by prayer. Compare with the world's forgetfulness of sorrow the Christian's victory over it (Rom. 5: 3; 8: 35-39).—Abbott.

THE ANSWER TO CHRIST'S PRAYER. Was Christ's prayer answered? and how? At the first glance it would seem to be our only example of unanswered prayer, for the cup did not pass from him, but he drank it all, even to its bitterest dregs. But the Epistle to the Hebrews (5: 7) says it was answered. And a closer examination shows that it was answered in the best, the divinest way. It was answered in the three ways in which God answers our prayers: 1. By drawing us into closer communion and sympathy and submission to him. The man in a little boat trying to draw by a rope the large ship to himself, really comes nearer the ship, though most of the motion is of himself to the large vessel, not of the vessel toward himself. Jesus came in his human nature into the perfect peace and calmness of a submissive will, so that every desire and feeling and choice was in harmony with his Father. This is shown by the variation in the prayer the second and third time he prayed. 2, There was a direct and definite answer to his prayer. (1) An angel came and strengthened (Luke 22: 43). There are two ways of answering a prayer for the removal of a burden. In one, the burden is taken away, and we remain the same; in the other, we are made so strong that the burden is no longer a burden to us; as what would crush a child, is but sport to a man. This latter is by far the best way of receiving an answer. So Paul kept the thorn in his flesh, but God's grace was made sufficient for him. (2) "He was delivered from that which he feared, which was, lest by impatience and distrust, he should offend and disable himself to go on with his undertaking" —M. Henry 3. The third answer to prayer is the giving, not that which we ask for in the form we ask it, but the soul of our prayer, the thing we in our deepest hearts want, and would ask for if we saw all things as God sees them. If clearly before the vision of Jesus there had appeared two choices, the one of escape from the cross, but with that also the failure of his mission, the triumph of evil, the loss of unnumbered souls, no crown, no glory, no abiding on the right hand of God; and the other choice, that of the cross and its agony, but with it also the redemption of the world, the ineffable glory of God, the joys of millions of the saved, the crown of triumph over evil,—who doubts which would have been his real innermost prayer. His prayer was answered, for the cross was changed to a crown, Gethsemane into paradise, death into immortal glory.

VIEWING THE PROMISED LAND.

SQUATTERS ON THE GROUND AWAITING THE OPENING OF AN INDIAN RESERVATION.

GREAT FALLS, Mont.—News of the opening of the Black Feet Reservation is awaited impatiently here and throughout Northern Montana. A large number of persons have gone to the reservation to locate ranches, mines and town sites. The desirable valleys are fairly covered with tents, the greatest rush apparently being to the Big Sandy, the famous hay grounds. Soldiers as well as civilians are on the grounds, and when news comes that the bill is signed there is likely to be a rush. Bullhock Valley, beyond Fort Assiniboine, is all staked off, and the tents of the squatter may be seen all along the valley of the Milk river. There is a silver lode in the Bear Paw mountains that was located several years ago. It is understood that several parties are on hand watching to locate this mine as well as to prospect for others.—Chicago Tribune

[The President has now signed the Bill throwing open for settlement the Indian Reservation in Montana]

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt Wm Morgan By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3 50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each, per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1 00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S L Beach, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TWELVE RULES FOR THE CARE OF EARS.

Never put anything into the ear for the relief of toothache.

Never wear cotton in the ears if they are discharging pus.

Never attempt to apply a poultice to the inside of the canal of the ear.

Never drop anything into the ear unless it has been previously warmed.

Never use anything but a syringe and warm water for cleaning the ears from pus.

Never strike or box a child's ears; this has been known to rupture the drumhead and cause incurable deafness.

Never wet the hair if you have any tendency to deafness; wear an oiled silk cap when bathing, and refrain from diving.

Never scratch the ears with anything but the finger if they itch. Do not use the head of a pin, hair pins, pencil tips or anything of that nature.

Never let the feet become cold and damp, or sit with the back towards the window, as these things tend to aggravate any existing hardness of hearing.

Never put milk, fat or any oily substance into the ear for the relief of pain, for they soon become rancid and tend to excite inflammation. Simple warm water will answer the purpose better than anything else.

Never be alarmed if a living insect enters the ear. Pouring warm water into the canal will drown it, when it will generally come to the surface and can easily be removed by the fingers. A few puffs of tobacco smoke blown into the ear will stupefy the insect.

Never meddle with the ear if a foreign body, such as a bead, button or seed enters it; leave it absolutely alone, but have a physician attend to it. More damage has been done by injudicious attempts at the extraction of a foreign body than could ever come from its presence in the ear.—Health and Home.

THE BEST BED.

Of the eight pounds which a man eats and drinks in a day, it is thought that not less than five pounds leave his body through the skin. And of these five pounds considerable percentage escapes during the night. This, being in great part gaseous in form, permeates every part of the bed. Thus all parts of the bed, mattress, blankets, as well as sheets, soon become foul and need purification. The mattress needs this renovation quite as much as the sheets.

To allow the sheets to be used without washing or changing three or six months would be regarded as bad housekeeping; but I insist if a thin sheet can absorb enough of the poisonous excretions of the body to make it unfit for use in a few days, a thick mattress, which can absorb and retain a thousand times as much of these poisonous excretions, needs to be purified as often certainly as once in three months. A sheet can be washed. A mattress cannot be renovated in this way. Indeed, there is no other way of cleansing a mattress but by steaming it, or picking it to pieces, and thus in fragments exposing it to the direct rays of the sun. As these processes are hardly practicable with any of the ordinary mattresses, I am decidedly of the opinion that the good, old fashioned straw bed, which can every three months be exchanged for fresh straw, and the tick washed, is the sweetest of beds.

If in the winter season the porousness of the straw bed makes it a little uncomfortable, spread over it two woolen blankets, which should be washed. With this arrangement, if you wash all the bedcovering often, you will have a sweet, healthful bed.

Now, if you have the bed to air, with open windows during the day, and not make it up for the night before evening, you will have added greatly to the sweetness of your rest, and in consequence, to the tone of your health.

I heartily wish this good change could be everywhere introduced. Only those who have thus attended to this important matter can judge of its influence on the general health and spirits.—Health and Habit.

We take pleasure in recommending the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer as safe and reliable for restoring gray hair to its natural color.

A feeling of dullness and languor,
Which is not akin to pain,
And resembles suffering only
As the mist resembles rain, is often the first indication of incipient disease. In such cases the famous "ounce of prevention" is the highest wisdom, and may be found in its most potent form in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which, by its wonderful blood-purifying and invigorating tonic properties, will quickly restore the ebbing vitality, repair and strengthen the system, and thus ward off threatening sickness. Its saving influence reaches every organ of the body.

In the spring hundreds of persons suffer from boils, carbuncles, and other eruptive diseases. These are evidences that the system is trying to purge itself of impurities, and that it needs the powerful aid which is afforded by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal hy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

FARM NOTES.

PARASITES ON LIVE STOCK.

At the end of the winter colts, calves, and older stock are very apt to be crowded with these objectionable parasites. They thrive best upon poor animals, and are supposed to be bred by old, worn out, and miserable creatures. However this may be there is no doubt that they find a suitable home in the dirty, matted hair in the late winter or early spring months, and on a sunny day may be seen literally in millions, every hair having nits upon it. One reason of so much rubbish accompanying them is that in the course of their development from the egg to the mature louse the skin is cast several times.

To get rid of them is not always easy, as the length of coat and accumulation of dandruff or scurf makes a waterproof covering that resists many remedies which in themselves are certain destroyers if only brought into contact with the parasites.

A sunny day should be chosen, and the early part of it, when a bountiful washing with soft soap and hot water should be undertaken, so as to clear the skin of grease and dirt before applying the remedy. Staves-acre is an effectual destroyer of lice if prepared by boiling a half pound with a gallon of water and brushing well into the coat with a hard brush.

Tobacco juice is also much in request for the purpose, and can be procured from druggists at a very low rate as it is imported now free of duty, or only a nominal duty, and the old expensive plan of boiling or infusing good shag tobacco is not necessary. By the way, very few people avail themselves of the governmental privileges of growing sufficient tobacco for this and fumigating purposes though they might easily do so.

Paraffin is sometimes used but is a very dangerous remedy, occasionally being absorbed and causing the death of the animal, and not unfrequently causing a blister and much unnecessary pain and subsequent blemish.

There is another kind of louse from which horses suffer, which, if once seen, can never be forgotten—we refer to poultry lousiness. It will sometimes happen that a horse stabled with fowls will become affected and literally tear himself to pieces with them unless promptly treated with one of the foregoing remedies, either of which is as effectual against these as against the ordinary louse.

In washing or applying any remedy, it should always be commenced near the eyes and worked backward, as, if any other plan is adopted, the besieged retreat into the mane and ears, and many escape altogether, like the rats that are left just to keep up the breed after the rat catcher has gone.

It is always well to repeat the dressing and keep the animals moving about till dry, or they may lick off more lotion than is good for them, or stand about and get chilled.—Chemist and Druggist.

DEPTH OF POTATO SETS.—There is a difference in variety as to the depth at which the young potatoes will form, says an experienced cultivator, and it is not entirely due to the way in which they are planted. The Early Rose class of potatoes set near the surface. The white varieties, such as White Star, Burbank and St. Patrick, are deeper in the soil. This makes the white potatoes rather less liable to rot, as the fungus which causes the disease first forms on the leaves and then is washed down to the tubers. Thus, hilling potatoes is a partial protection from rot, and is absolutely necessary for Early Rose and other kinds which naturally set near the surface, and unless artificially covered are very likely to become sunburnt.

HEN MANURE IN COMPOST.—The best way to prepare the hens' manure is to mix it thoroughly with fine loam in the proportion of ten bushels of the manure to thirty of loam. If you first mix two or three parts of hen manure to one of land plaster, it will make a still better compost for use in the hill. Do not use quick lime; it will set the ammonia free, though if you immediately mix it with earth this will take up and hold it. Land plaster will take up and fix the ammonia but earth should also be used. In this way all possible waste is saved.

DRAINED LAND BEST.—A farmer who has had much experience with drains tells the Farmer's Review that the land is looser and more friable; it plows more easily in the wheat stubble, and is not so cloddy as where it is undrained. The corn has a better color and has eared better right over the drains than at a good distance from them. Where the land is drained, he finds that it takes less rain in a dry time to penetrate the soil and do good than where it is not drained as it does not "bake" so badly, and the rain can soak down into the soil; whereas, where it is not drained the water lies on top, and the sun evaporates it and it does not penetrate the roots unless it is a very heavy and continuous rain.

OIL MEAL FOR COLTS.—An Ohio stock farmer states that he has been using oil meal some for two or three years, and thinks it excellent for cows giving milk, mixed with ship-stuff, and for colts that have just been weaned. Last fall he weaned three colts and began to feed some oats, and when cold weather came on added some oil meal. He has got up to one bushel of oats and a half-gallon of oil-meal per day, which is as high as he will go as long as they look as well as they do now. They run to hay at their pleasure, being out of doors all the time. He has a Clyde mare three years old last May that weighed 1,980 pounds in October, that was raised out of doors.

CHESTNUT TREES PROFITABLE.— In localities where land is not too dear, observes a New England farmer, chestnut trees may be planted with a greater certainty of profit than almost any other kind of crop. They will begin to bear nuts in ten or twelve years, and for the nuts alone will pay a good profit. Chestnut wood is valuable for many purposes. It makes excellent railroad ties, and if the trees are cut when of the right size for this use they sprout readily, and the second growth reaches cutting size in half the time required for seedlings. Three or more crops of trees from one stump may be obtained.

THEY "MEAN BUSINESS."

If any one has ever given Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy a fair trial and has not been cured thereby, the manufacturers of that unfailing remedy would like to hear from that individual, for when they offer, as they do, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of nasal catarrh which they cannot cure, they mean just exactly what they say. They are financially responsible and abundantly able to make good their guarantee if they fail, as any one can learn by making proper inquiry. Remedy sold by all druggists, at 50 cents.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. The Christian's Secret
OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

THE SECRET ORDERS
OF
WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

When the Mills tariff bill shall have been reported back to the House of Representatives from the committee of the whole, it is understood a substitute will be introduced by the Republicans, providing for a reduction of $94,000,000 in revenue, of which $3,000,000 would be on tobacco and $6,000,000 on alcohol, besides $58,000,000 from repeal of the duty on sugar.

On Wednesday the Senate passed in sixty-five minutes 105 private pension bills, forty-five of which had already been passed by the House of Representatives. With almost as much rapidity the following public building bills were passed: Indianapolis, Ind., $150,000; Atchison, Kansas, $100,000; Wilmington, Del., increase to $250,000; Woonsocket, R I., $75 000; Fort Dodge, Iowa, $100,000; Sterling, Illinois, $50,000; Dover, N. H., $75 000; Asheville, N. C., $100,000; Duluth, Minn., $150,000. The Senate last week discussed the bill for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, the bill to extirpate pleuro-pneumonia, the railroad land forfeiture bill, the international Copyright bill, and, in secret session, the Chinese Treaty, and the accumulated nominations by the President, among them that of Mr. Fuller to be Chief Justice of the United States. The latter nomination has been most favorably received by both parties in Congress.

CHICAGO.

Navigation opened with a large fleet of grain-laden vessels leaving Friday night just after midnight.

General Crook, the new commander of the military division of the Missouri, has arrived at headquarters in Chicago and assumed his new duties.

Bids for the construction of the heaviest portion of the Eiffel iron tower were opened in Paris Friday, and the contract was given to a Chicago firm. There were competitors from various parts of the world. This is the 1,000 foot tower to be used during the next world's exposition.

COUNTRY.

At Winona, Minn., the Mississippi on Friday reached the highest point ever known. Fears are entertained that the water will carry away the wagon bridge crossing the river to Wisconsin. It reached the structure and dashed against it with tremendous force. The ferry suspended operations, as the cable was not long enough to span the breadth of the water, which is three miles wide.

A Scandinavian female evangelist has been exhorting in the vicinity of Menominee, Mich., for a month past to people of her nationality, and during that time eight persons have become insane. Unless the authorities take some action it is feared that the county will be obliged to erect an insane asylum of its own.

Late Thursday afternoon several buildings in the town of Berring, Mo., were blown down in a storm, and James Myers of Memphis, Mo., was killed.

Friday morning a fire was seen on the farm of Widow Freeze, near Arlington, Neb, which was supposed to be the barn of her son-in-law and family, who lived with her. A party of citizens went out to see if all was well, and were horrified at finding the charred remains of seven human beings, identified as old Mrs. Freeze, Fred Grateluschen, his wife and three children, and Fred's brother Louis, scattered in different parts of the barn among the horses and cows, some fifteen of which were also burned. One theory is foul play; another is that each one of the family tried to save an animal and all failed and were suffocated suddenly. A daughter, who is away visiting, is the only survivor of the family. It is reported that the hired man cannot be found.

There was an enthusiastic meeting at Cooper Union, New York, Friday evening, May 4th, at a mass-meeting called to express approval of Mayor Hewitt's refusal to permit a foreign flag to be raised over the City Hall. Strong speeches were made and a set of resolutions adopted. The audience cheered itself hoarse at every reference to the American flag or the American eagle.

Judge Pugh of Columbus, Ohio, May 4, granted the petition of the Law and Order League for a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the mayor and commissioners to enforce the Sunday saloon-closing act. The authorities, who had previously flatly refused to execute the law, held a meeting Friday night, and, being advised by the city solicitor that there was no way of evading the writ, unanimously voted to instruct the police to enforce the law, beginning with Sunday, May, 6.

Fines were imposed Friday on liquor dealers of Concord, N. H., aggregating $8,000.

A collision of two sections of a long train on the Philadelphia and Reading railway near Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania, caused the explosion of a car load of blasting-powder, by which seventeen workingmen's cottages were wrecked, a woman and five children killed outright, and a number of other people seriously injured. A number of cars were also demolished.

FOREIGN.

Sir William Ritchie, Chief Justice of the Canadian Supreme Court, came to the senate Friday endowed with power as deputy governor-general and assented to the act to ratify the fisheries treaty, which thus becomes a statute of the dominion.

Alarm has again taken possession of the Austrian cabinet owing to the mobilization of the Russian troops. The revolt in Roumania has at length assumed proportions of a menacing character to the peace of the empire. In Wallachia and Moldavia intrigues have been disclosed of a decidedly pro-Russian tendency, and the passage of a Russian army through Roumania would be welcomed by the people and could not be seriously resisted by the Roumanian army. Bulgarian refugees are daily arriving in the Danubian villages, and everything now seems to portend some imminent and decisive action on the part of Russia relative to the future of Bulgaria.

An explosion occurred Friday in a tunnel in course of construction near Messina, Italy. Six workmen were killed and many more fatally injured, several of whom were rescued in a dying condition. At the time of the accident 350 workmen were in the tunnel.

Emperor Frederick Friday evening dined with the crown prince and princess, the empress and his three daughters. The present favorable symptoms give ground to hope that he will soon recover from the weakness remaining from the recent crisis. The weakness especially affects his legs. The emperor makes himself understood better than formerly by whispers and signs, but he uses no phonetic system.

Dispatches from India announce that Delloi and Moradahad had been visited by disastrous hail storms, about 150 persons having been killed. The hail stones were flat and oval in shape and some of them weighed as much as two pounds. At Racebatti, in Bengal, twenty persons were killed, 200 severely injured and 2,000 houses were destroyed by hail stones.

The resurrection of the Panslavist party in Russia has alarmed German official circles, and the Czar's reinstatement of General Bogdanovitch is not an isolated proof that the open adoption of an offensive policy approaches. The avowed aim of the Slav associations, whose revival has been obtained with the Czar's assent, is to incite insurrections among the Slav people until Russia comes into possession of Constantinople. It is believed in Germany that the war party has convinced the Czar that the French elections will return a war ministry, and that Russia ought to be ready to co-operate with France.

The Spanish committee, having in charge the Christopher Columbus celebration, offers a prize of $10,000 for the best book, in any language, on the geographical discoveries of Portuguese explorers prior to the time of Magellan. About the end of this month the Queen Regent will unveil a monument of Columbus at Palos, Spain.

THE ONLY COLORED DELEGATE to the Indianapolis Convention from Texas gives a free, hearty and happy commendation of the Cynosure in the South this week that will make all souls rejoice. Water froze Saturday night in the vicinity of Chicago, but our friends do not mean the stream of light and love to the Southern churches shall freeze. They keep the spigot running, and add a half dozen to the number of pastors who are blessed by their gifts.

Carl Schurz, editor of the New York Evening Post, has just been feted and honored in Berlin, by an eminent company, Count Herbert Bismarck among them. Soon after he was received by Prince Bismarck and given a very friendly interview. He bore his honors well, as "an American citizen of German birth." But he doubtless remembered vividly that it was not so long ago when it would have been worth his life to set foot on German soil; for he took part in an insurrection in 1849 and in later attacks on German imperialism. But having been with us a foreign minister, general, Senator, and Cabinet officer, his misdemeanors are forgiven, and he can take his proper place among the noblest and best of his fatherland.

Robert Ingersoll was selected by the Senate and House of the New York Assembly to pronounce an eulogy to the memory of the late Roscoe Conkling, and made the oration last Wednesday. There was much in the selection to add to the grief of the surviving relatives, for no glory of eloquent words could atone for the character of the speaker, nor blot out the fact that the same voice has been raised in the most infamous of causes—to destroy the Christian religion and to prevent the throttling of the immoral press. Conkling died as he lived with no public recognition of his Maker, nor do we remember that he ever made any direct effort for public morality. Yet it may be said that his long and brilliant public career was stained by no such attacks upon religion as Ingersoll's; nor was his hand soiled with bribes. He years ago publicly trained with the Knight Templar Freemasons, but there was no appearance of lodge regalia about his funeral.

The Greek-letter lodge folly has struck the college girls. The other day was held the fifth general convention of the Delta Gamma society at Evanston, Ill. Very appropriately the Odd-fellows opened their lodge for the meeting. The order was begun in 1872 at Oxford, Miss., and has now thirteen chapters, with headquarters at Evanston, and a quarterly organ at Minneapolis. President Cummings and his faculty, we regret to note, entertained and encouraged this secret society among girls, giving them receptions, banquets, and various honors, just as if this imitation of the young men's college societies had not the same tendency to destroy moral character, promote falsehood and error, and choke Christian conviction. It is not an encouraging thought that our educated young women, who are to purify the ballot for America, are led astray by the cunning of Satan as easily as the rougher, if not sterner, sex.

The Boston Daily Advertiser of last Friday describes what must have been, to the esthetic imagination of that city, an imposing spectacle. Boston has been esteemed a first-class city for mobs ever since the days of Garrison. Some of us knew it to be in March, 1880, round about Tremont Street and Music Hall. And the experience of those who wish to speak to men of Christ in the open air on the old liberty ground of the Common, is that Boston can lead America in religious persecution. But with all her desire to be foremost, Boston has never had a Knight Templar religious performance in a Christian church and in public until now, if we may believe the Advertiser. But Thursday evening the lodge broke through all conventional or traditional prejudices and celebrated their "Ascension" day. They chose an Episcopal church, as if less likely of refusal; but they were bold enough to ask the best that denomination could give—no less than Trinity Church and Phillips Brooks. And this great man bowed to them, without even the excuse we make for Naaman the Syrian. He read prayer for this lodge mob (what else could it be in such a place) and was assisted by a number of Rev. D.Ds, one of whom preached a sermon, adopting the old Knights Templar of the Crusades, virtues, vices and all. Can brethren Davis and Hastings hope for relief in Boston?

Among the Chicago pastors who spoke most emphatically on the Sabbath upon the danger of the saloon in politics, the sermons of Drs. Henson, Little, Withrow and Barrows were published next morning. They read as though the spirit of Elijah were coming in other John the Baptists to foretell a new advent—even of the Lord of Zion against her rum foes. They are righteously and reasonably indignant. They asked not that the number of the saloons be made one less; not that one drop less of accursed liquor be sold; but only that the saloon be set off a little further from the churches and schools and not elbow itself into a residence block among homes where women and children are sheltered. But the aldermen and their saloon friends saw more than appeared on the face of this request. It meant an I-am-holier-than-thou rule. If the church and school set up for the Pharisee, the saloon was not quite ready to be the publican. It loves good company—loves it amazingly—and respectability. When it kicks a specimen of its work upon the street, corrupted, filthy, bloated, besotted, full of contamination, it says to decent people, Please close your eyes and hold your breath till you get by; but you must suffer me and my work as close to your churches and the schools where your innocent children gather as I can get. Now, if these good brethren will preach on the axe at the root of the tree, and keep the chips flying, they, and we all, shall soon rejoice in their victories.

We of Chicago, after six years, of Carter Harrison, congratulate Gloucester, Massachusetts. Mayor Robinson of that city is not a mollusk. He has back-bone—and a conscience. The city council voted ninety-nine licenses to fifty-one saloon-keepers. The mayor vetoes the whole in a lump, and tells the aldermen they have voted contrary to their convictions, because of the pressure of a popular vote for the saloon. He closes with these words which should be cast in bronze for his monument for a hundred generations to read:

"Finally, to legalize a traffic which is an acknowledged evil and a curse, is simply to take a backward step in the cause of reform, and undo the work of former years; to again re-establish upon a firm footing a business which must surely go to decay, without the sanction of law. And when I see the immorality, crime, misery and poverty produced by the business, whether legalized or not, and when I call to mind the fact that I have been placed here by the people, with a full knowledge of my convictions upon the license question, and when I review the valid and lawful objections against granting many if not all of the licenses covered by the order, and when I see the business undermining everything that is good, and true, and noble, I can not, I will not approve the order. With my convictions of duty, and recognizing the fact that there is a law higher than man, a divine law, which says, 'Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink,' I am unwilling to place my name to a contract which binds the city to protect a man in a business upon which the curse of Heaven rests."

THE POWER OF CHARACTER.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

In the presence of one man you are unhappy and awkward. Another presence makes you happy and you excell yourself. One man comes into a company and it is like a wet blanket. Another comes and it is like sunshine. We read that a certain woman touched the hem of Christ's garments and was cured, and the shadow of the apostles falling upon sick folk healed them. So every man's character is exerting an influence for good or evil. "One man is morose, gloomy, bigoted; his presence is lik an acid, souring the milk of human kindness and innocence. Another is strict with Pharisaic severity, exalting the letter above the spirit, making sad the hearts which God has not made sad, and teaching that ceremonial observances are more important than true human impulses. A third is morbid, troubled with little fidgety trials and cares, imagining that God requires sacrifice and not mercy."

On the other hand there are Christians whose hearts are full of joy, whose spirits are radiant as the sunbeam, who breathe an atmosphere as pure and exhilarating as the air of the mountain top and whose presence is a blessing to all. It is of unspeakable moment what we are. It means life or death, eternal happiness or endless woe to those about us.

1. The power of character is truthful. A dog will allow one person to take privileges which it resents in another. A child goes to one and shuns another. In both cases the judgment is based upon intuition. The one knows instinctively who is worthy to be its master, and the other who is its friend at heart, and the judgment is generally correct. Two sets of influences are exerted. Two currents of power issue from every soul, one the conscious influence of what we intentionally say or do, the other the unconscious influence of what we are. In the former we may act a part. In the latter the real self is discovered. A species of animalcule lives in mosses called the rotifera. Its body is transparent. The internal processes of life may be seen just as the movements of the wheels of a watch under a glass case. We live in glass tabernacles. Our characters are known and read of all men. I may not be able to tell why I do not think a certain man's character is genuine, but there is something that tells me that he is not what he pretends to be. And so it comes to pass that every man gets about what he deserves. The fittest survive.

2. The power of character is constant. The sun pours forth a constant stream of light. The flower sends out its fragrance every moment. The river flows on forever. So the influence of character is unceasing. We cannot always speak or act. We must have rest. But character works on unconsciously, without our knowing or intending it. I cannot always speak for Christ; I can live for him. I cannot always do good; I can always be good. Bushnell said, "Simply to be in the world is to exert an influence, compared with which words and acts are feeble."

3. The power of character is a trust for which we are responsible. All admit our responsibility for what we say and do. We are responsible for what we are. Character is the sum and result of our thoughts, feelings, and experiences: a temple built up by what we have thought, said and done. We are responsible for the erection of that temple. We are also responsible for its influence. We are so knit and connected in the framework of society "that no man liveth to himself." A pebble is dropped into the sea, and wave after wave circles out and goes on until it strikes the farthest shore. Your character is the pebble thrown into the waters of human society, and wave after wave of influence goes out and ceases not until broken on the shores of eternity.

We are members of the social body. And if one member suffer,all the members suffer with it; and if one member be honored all the members rejoice with it. "I ask the mountain why it is overcast with gloom. And the mountain answers, ask the sky which sends now sunshine, now gloom, now fair weather and now stormy wind. Again I ask the sky, why it is overcast, and it answers, ask the valleys of the earth. They send up these vapors to me, they are not mine." I see a culprit standing in the court of justice. He is not alone in the fault. Bad companions, bad counsel, bad home influence, all are represented there. In spring time a gunshot or even the human voice will start the avalanche in the Alps, so evenly are they poised. Some characters are trembling in the balance, and a single contact with you turns them permanently for weal or woe. "If thou didst know," says Richter, "that every dark thought of thine and every noble independent one separates itself from thee, and for ages on ages pushes and bears its poisonous roots and fruits, oh, how piously wouldst thou think and feel." The touch of a feather or the least sound will cause the binoxide of hydrogen to decompose. The scratch of a pin will change the binoxide of mercury from yellow to bright red. The least contact with your spirit will change certain sensitive souls for good or evil. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

INDIA NEEDS MEN.

BY WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

I wonder how many of God's people are obeying the command to pray that more laborers may be sent into the harvest. Are there not two reasons why this command is neglected?

1. Many are afraid to pray much in that direction, lest they should realize the call to answer their own prayers by going into the harvest field for direct work.

2. Many more shrink from praying for others to go,as it would involve the duty of contributing more liberally for the support of such workers.

I have already mentioned two wants, i. e., colporteur evangelists, to go out from station to station, preaching the Gospel and selling books, and of rescue workers to go into the highways and hedges of Bombay and other cities to seek and save a class of persons who are not reached by any ordinary Gospel workers. Besides these, we need a thoroughly wide-awake, hard-working, spiritually-minded, soul-saving city missionary for Bombay. This is the second city in the British Empire. Much work is done by pastors, Bible readers, etc., but there is room for four-fold more. If I had the right sort of men and women I could set them at work at once.

As to the method of support, our Mission is independent and inter-denominational, that is, it works for and with all who love the Lord. We receive monthly contributions from a few who appreciate this part of the Lord's work. Some send occasional contributions. We have a small business by which we manage to pay a part of our expenses. We are a combination of "Faith Mission" and "Self-supporting Mission," or briefly,

A FAITH-AND-WORKS MISSION.

Those who come to work with us should have both of these qualifications. They must be willing to carry out practically the good old proverb,"Trust as though the work was all the Lord's, and work as though it were all your own." We go upon this principle that as many workers as the Lord himself sends us, he will provide for. We expect him to send only those whose ability and success will add so much to our work in its power and fruits as to add correspondingly to its sustenance.

Why should not some workers come at their own expense, or at that of their family or friends. During the American war scores went out to work among the soldiers in the Christian Commission and the Sanitary Commission at their own expense. It is a matter of great praise and glory to God that this style of work is increasing. There are many in foreign mission fields who are working at their own expense. The Lord wants this number largely increased. We shall be glad to correspond with any who desire thus to work,and can point them to work in connection with our mission or other mission labors as they may prefer. Allied to this line of support is that of support by family or friends. There are well-to-do parents or kinsmen who could well afford to send out a daughter, son, brother, or sister, to foreign mission fields and support them.

Right here let me call attention again to our plain and cheap style of mission living. The above would seem impracticable except to a few of the richest families of earth, if we were counting on support at the usual mission rates of $1,000 a year. But, in the style in which we are living as plain, working-people, comfortably housed, well-fed, clad plainly and neatly, but strictly eschewing all extravagance, a European can live comfortably at one-fourth or one-fifth of $1,000. I can attest these figures, because my mission salary was $1,000, and I have tried the other system for years, keeping careful accounts of our expenses.

I may also suggest another method of support. Let communities or circles combine together for supporting foreign workers at these rates. How easy it would be in many communities throughout your great and rich America for some earnest man or woman to say, for Christ's sake, "I will raise means to support a missionary in India upon that simple plan. With prayerful zeal, $20 a month could surely be raised.

STOP RIGHT HERE,

Christian sister or brother, and ask, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Among a thousand readers of this paper, surely there will be found a few who will undertake this very simple thing and who will report to the office of its editor what they are doing. I am sure the editor and his worthy associates will gladly assist (I might say "grand worthy" associates, for I think them a grand set of men). Without any formal arrangement of machinerywe will undertake this spontaneous and blessed work of God. Let workers offer. Let others offer means. The editors of the paper will do their part of correspondence gladly, and I and my co-workers here in India will be delighted to act as God's agents in helping workers to the front. I do not see why this work should not grow largely, and yet if my correspondence succeeds in getting only a very few into this very large and needy field of work, it will be a joy to eternity that we have done what we could. I have more to say about openings for work in India, but the above seems sufficient for this letter.

Pray for us that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified.

The Christian Instructor (Presbyterian) believes that special services for Easter, which are now more or less common with various Protestant denominations, are a step Rome-ward; that "in this way the minds of the people are trained for accepting the doctrines and commandments of men instead of those of Christ, the distinctions between Protestantism and Catholicism are being broken down, and Romanism is encouraged to believe that the day of its final triumph is not far distant." The editor considers that Easter as usually celebrated is made a "sensual holiday," and he adds: "May the Spirit of the Lord lift up a standard against the enemy that comes in like a flood."—Southern Evangelist.

THE TWO SKIES.

BY REV. A. SMITH,
Blind Publisher of the Faith Mission Tracts.

"He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—Matt. 8: 12.

Thou mighty sea of unknown hight,
Whose azure tides float bright and free
Among the isles of pearly light,
Calm in their own eternity:
Whose archipelagoes of stars
That skirt the shore and light the way
Across nights' gloom to golden bars,
The harbor of unending day,

Oh, thou vast ocean of the skies,
Reflecting aye thy Maker's praise,
In vain to thee my sightless eyes
I lift as in my favored days,
To read thy changeful poet lays
Of clouds and blue and sunshine gold;
Thy midnight frowns, thy smiling days
With all the glories they unfold.

True, in my fancies and my dreams
I try to see as long ago
Thy purple dawns and sunset gleams;
Thy painted rainbows bending low:
Thy cruising storm-clouds, dark and bold,
Light summer clouds, pure, white and free,
Their peaceful sails hemmed round with gold
Trailing their shadows o'er the lea.

Farewell, fond scenes, I'll not forget.
The dazzling suns and harvest moons,
Eclipsed in blackness, all have set.
Alike all midnights and all noons;
Alike to me—for I am blind—
Never again on earth to see,
Except in dreamings of the mind,
Sleeping or waking it may be.

But stay, I've something sweet to tell;
My spirit long was blind in sin;
I loved its selfish darkness well.
I prayed: the "Light of Life" came in,
And scattered all my night away,
And opened in my inmost soul
A fairer sky, a purer day.
By faith, the Christ, he made me whole.

The pearl gates of thy smiling east
Open to free the incense light
Of holy truth and love and peace—
The Morning Star, so pure and bright.
Bright world within, creation new,
Temple and palace of the king,
When I thy sacred splendors view,
My heart adores, for joy I sing.

PERSONAL OBSERVATIONS ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

[The Watchman (Baptist) of Boston has been publishing a few articles on the lodge as lately noted in these columns, but the following able and interesting article was refused, to find a welcome in the Cynosure.—ED]

I have been much interested in the recent articles in the Watchman on this subject, for observation has forced upon me the conviction that it has not received due attention from the friends of true religion.

About ten years ago, when invited to become a charter member of a secret lodge, I replied that I had as much as I could do to faithfully sustain my relations to the church, and when I found any organization that was better I would make a change. Two organizers, both leading Universalists, one a preacher,came and held forth in the public hall and made such odious comparisons between the lodge and the church that the local members of the order deemed it necessary to apologize for their utterances. In spite of protest most of the resident male members of the little Baptist church were carried away by this delusion and I am not aware of any conversions since.

As a radical I had become impressed with the idea that the chances of a young man's conversion were very small after becoming a member of a secret lodge, and this opinion has been reinforced by that of the most thoughtfully conservative men of my acquaintance.

A few years ago I found myself seated in the cars with a gentleman whom I knew as prominent in business, politics, church and temperance interests, and when, in the course of conversation I happened to remark that Masonry covered up a good many things, I found he was equally prominent in that direction. Among other things he told me that when his lodge entertained another lodge at a watering place at an expense of $1,200, he was called up at midnight to quell a drunken revelry led by a Doctor of Divinity. From other incidents related and my own observation, I judge that drunkenness is not a rare exception on such occasions.

After the capture of Charleston, the first Union Collector of that port was a prominent Freemason, whom I had met in the office of a mutual friend engaged in cramming him with secretism for the purpose of conveying information to the authorities at Washington. When, two or three months after, I took the steamer from Nassau to New York I was surprised to find this friend going the same way, and amused to see how confidential were his relations with the Masonic Confederates on board. This was a kind of secret service that, it is to be feared, was used more frequently against the Union than for it.

When recently cited into court on a malicious charge, I found that my opponent was a Mason, as was his counsel, my counsel, my principal witness, and not unlikely the judge,—all bound by a solemn oath to uphold the plaintiff, "murder and treason excepted." As the charge was withdrawn I do not know what the result might have been.

Two years ago I stood beside the open grave of a member of the same church and listened to the burial service of his order, and noted the sneering look and words of a lodge member, a prominent rumseller, as, referring to the religious part, he said, "What does that amount to?" This lodge, started by Christian men, celebrated its first anniversary with a dance and a lottery.

With pain I recall the case of an infatuated Christian man, who, as he rose in the lodge to be a Noble Grand, fell religiously and morally almost as low as a man could fall—even into an untimely grave. This man told me that at an entertainment of a neighboring lodge he spent fifteen dollars for lottery tickets.

The above statements have reference to the two leading orders of the long and increasing list of secret societies. As a temperance man it has long been a source of grief to me that temperance men should defile their own ointment with the corrupt fly of secretism. I had almost forgotten that I was once a Cadet of Temperance, as my father was a Son of Temperance, but both organizations soon parted like a rope of sand, and nothing was lost but the outlay and the flummery.

About 1882 the National Temperance Society held a very notable anniversary at Saratoga, followed on the third day by a National Jubilee of the Sons of Temperance. On the morning of that third day, at one of the little breakfast tables at Congress Hall, there met two strangers, whom conversation disclosed to have been temperance candidates for the highest office in two northeast States at the previous election. Their experience had been precisely the same. Natives in the soil of temperance, able to speak its language intelligently, they had found the leading secret men like foreigners, with a different set of ideas, expressed in different language. With the two, it was the cause; with the others, the order—that was uppermost. And they found themselves as effectually barred from the meetings of the third day as if they had been the boss rumsellers of their respective States. A late pastor of the writer, a man of conservative nature and long experience, after having held the positions of G. W. P. and G–R–A–N–D Chaplain of the State order, expressed himself in disapproval of its secret features and in ignorance of its benefits.

Referring to the first named orders, I have observed that secretism, like politics, makes strange bed fellows, and that the really good men seem to act the part of decoy ducks, and are like salt to prevent the mass from perishing by its own corruption. With a free press and free speech slavery would have been abolished without bloodshed, as the saloon will be, whenever free speech prevails. But secretism aims a deadly blow at freedom of utterance. Three or four years ago, a few miles away, a public meeting held by two Christian ministers was broken up by a mob, because they dared express their conscientious convictions in regard to secretism. In an essay before a Sabbath-school Convention, in which a comparison was made between the simplicity of the Sabbath-school and the lodge, with its "stock in trade of secret grips and passwords and its bombastic official titles," the reader was interrupted by a savage growl from one in the audience, who appeared to be a minister of the Gospel; and was afterwards privately congratulated by another, who thanked God for one man who dared express such truth. That congratulation spoke volumes as to the attitude of secretism toward free speech. If slavery, rum and secretism are not birds of the same feather, why do they all use the same weapons of defence? as the writer can testify from personal experience.

It is a pity that every Christian man cannot realize that this world is a battle-field on which the forces of good and evil are engaged in deadly combat for the immortal souls of men. And that Satan is a skilled strategist, always seeking to mask his batteries. Slavery was a "Bible institution;" Alcohol, the "long-sought aqua vitæ," then a medicine, and, as a last device, a thing to be regulated by license—High License. The secret lodge is a religious, moral, benevolent institution, even presenting features of superiority to the Church.

Let us imagine Christ and his apostles as organizing secret lodges. No, it is impossible to imagine any such thing! "In secret have I said nothing." "Every plant that my Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." God has planted the church, the family, and human government; but never a secret lodge—that, I believe, Satan has planted as his rival to the church. In the circle of my acquaintance I cannot recall a single instance where a lodge member has afterward made a public profession of religion. "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." "Do good unto all men, especially to those who are of the household of faith." "Be not unequally yoked with uubelievers." "Come out and be ye separate."

How many Freemasons of to-day are aware of the historical fact that, as a consequence of the agitation which followed the abduction and murder of Morgan, forty-five of the fifty thousand Masons in this country openly renounced their allegiance to the order? Alas! it is too true that error, like hope, springs eternal in the human breast, and that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

MASONIC IDOLATRY: PRACTICAL THEISM.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Why do Masonic lodges always work at night?

"In this selection of the hours of night and darkness for initiation, the usual coincidence will be found between the ceremonies of Freemasonry and those of the Ancient Mysteries, showing their evident derivation from a common origin. The reason given by the ancients for this selection of night as the time for initiation, is equally applicable to the system of Freemasonry. Death and the resurrection were the doctrines taught in the ancient mysteries; and night and darkness were necessary to add to the sacred awe and reverence which these doctrines ought always to inspire in the rational and contemplative mind. The same doctrines form the very ground-work ef Freemasonry, and as the Master Mason, to use the language of Hutchinson, 'represents a man saved from the grave of iniquity and raised to the faith of salvation,' darkness and night are the appropriate accompaniments to the solemn ceremonies which demonstrate this profession."—Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, pages 204 and 205.

Again this same Grand High Priest makes it still plainer: "And hence again, darkness, like death, is the symbol of initiation. It was for this reason that all the ancient initiations were performed at night. The celebration of the mysteries was always nocturnal. The same custom prevails in Freemasonry, and the explanation is the same. Death and the resurrection were taught in the mysteries, as they are in Freemasonry. The initiation was the lesson of death. The full fruition or autopsy, the reception of light, was the lesson of regeneration or resurrection."—Mackey's Symbolism of Freemasonry, pages 157 and 158.

Is not Revelation and the Gospel enough to teach all that?

Why meet up stairs?

"Lodge meetings, at the present day, are usually held in upper chambers—probably for the better security which such places afford."—Sickel's Freemason's Monitor, page 40.

"The reason assigned in the lecture for this assembling on high places, is the modern, but not the true one. The fact is, that mountains and other high places were almost always considered holy," etc.—See Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 44.

"Hills and mountains were always considered the peculiar abode of Deity; and hence the Masonic tradition, that our ancient brethren held their lodges most frequently on the highest of hills. The veneration for hills or secret caverns induce the construction of temples of divine worship in such situations."—Sickel's Ahiman Rezon, page 75.

The "true reason" than for meeting up-stairs is a religious one.

But why are lodge-rooms built east and west?

The learned Dr. Mackey explains: "The orientation of lodges, or their position due east and west, is derived from the universal custom of antiquity. 'The heathen temples,' says Dudley, 'were so constructed that their length was directed toward the east, and the entrance was by a portico at the western front, where the altar stood, so that the votaries, approaching for the performance of religious rites, directed their faces toward the east, the quarter of sunrise.' The primitive reason of this custom undoubtedly is to be found in the early prevalence of sun-worship, and hence, the spot where that luminary first made his appearance in the heavens was consecrated, in the minds of his worshipers, as a place entitled to peculiar reverence."

"Freemasonry, retaining in its symbolism the typical reference of the lodge to the world, and constantly alluding to the sun in his apparent diurnal revolution, imperatively requires, when it can be done, that the lodge be situated due east and west, so that every ceremony shall remind the Mason of the progress of that luminary."—Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, pages 60 and 61.

But, says some ignorant Masonic preacher, "Is not a Masonic lodge a representation of King Solomon's Temple at Jerusalem?" Well, hardly. Hear the Masonic Grand High Priest once more:

"It is not pretended, that because Masonry has adopted the Temple of Jerusalem as the groundwork or elementary form of all its symbols, a lodge is therefore ever expected, except in a symbolic sense, to be a representative of the Temple. On the contrary, the very situation of a lodge is the exact reverse of that of the Temple. The entrance of the former is at the west; that of the latter was at the east. The most holy place in a lodge is its eastern end; that of the Temple was at its western extremity."—Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, page 26.

Masonic symbolism, rites and worship, then, is exactly the reverse of that of the Temple at Jerusalem. The almost universal system of idolatry of antiquity was Sabiaism or sun worship.

THE MEN FOR THE TIMES.

The first Scripture lesson of the year [1888—Matt. 14: 1–12] records the tragic close of the illustrious life of one of the most magnificent men that ever figured in the pages of history. He died because he dared to preach unpalatable truth. Had he contented himself with proclaiming simply what some politic people call "the Gospel," meaning thereby the sweet persuasions, and tender entreaties, and precious promises of the Gospel, he might have been the court-preacher in the palace of Herod, while in his prime, and then been retired on a pension when declining years made such retirement seem to be desirable. But John the Baptist had broader and higher conceptions of preaching than that which obtains in many fashionable modern pulpits. He regarded the law as a part of the Gospel; for by the law is the knowledge of sin, and a knowledge of sin is essential to any intelligent appreciation of salvation; and so the law is our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ.

Apart from all that, John, as a servant of God, and thoroughly in sympathy with God's government, could not fail to have his righteous indignation roused by any act of disloyalty to God, even as a patriot ought to have his spirit stirred by the outrages of an anarchist. And so, among men, John flamed and thundered like Sinai. He did not count the cost of ministerial fidelity, nor fear any being in the universe but God. No matter though his life was in Herod's hands—Herod was living in adulterous relations with his brother Philip's wife—and this was an infamous infraction of the law of God, whose ambassador John was; and in the presence of such indignity his silence would have been criminal. He did not wink at royal criminality, nor quiet his conscience by persuading himself that he had enough to do to conduct himself aright in his own domestic relations, and that there was no occasion for him to concern himself with those of other men.

The "mind your own business" maxim, supposed by many to be a quotation from Scripture, is one of the meanest and most mischievous apothegms that the devil ever invented. The whole trend of Scripture is directly against it. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." And that direction relates not merely to their burdens, that we are generously to help them bear, and their sorrows, with which we are fraternally to sympathize, but their sins, which we are faithfully to rebuke, and their perils, which, with no uncertain sound, we are bound to proclaim.

This may not, for a Christian teacher, be the road to earthly popularity; but it is the only safe road to heaven. It is not as much traveled in our time as one could wish. Men of the rugged type of Elijah the Tishbite, or of John the Baptist, are only too rare in our easy-going, pleasure-loving age. We have come to think that plain speaking is impolitic; that men, to be caught, must be coddled; that such heroic treatment as Paul gave Felix, and John gave Herod, and Elijah gave Ahab, and Peter gave the Jews on the Day of Pentecost, is not the wisest way to deal with men, at least in the nineteenth century of the Christian era.

It would empty many of our high-priced pews; it would stir many of our churches as with the breath of a tempest; it would rouse whole communities to such a pitch of furious indignation that, instead of the church enjoying great peace and popularity, as it does at present, its members would be hooted and hounded, and the earth again would shudderingly drink the blood of martyrs.

Then be it so; for the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church; and the church has never so prospered as when it has been persecuted because of its fidelity in rebuking sin.

We believe, indeed, in speaking the truth in love; but, nevertheless, in speaking the truth, even though it cut to the heart, and make men for a while gnash their teeth in ungodly rage. Let us not be oversensitive to the suspicion of being accounted "busybodies in other men's matters." Whenever we are confronted by moral evil, though it be in another, it is our Master's matter, and, therefore, our matter. He has sent us forth to make war against it. Our mission is that of a soldier, and our business is not to dodge, but to fight.

We may carry the olive branch in one hand; but we must stoutly grasp a sword with the other. If sin surrender, hold out the olive branch; if it resist, then thrust with the sword.

Oh, for a loyal legion of men like John the Baptist, to wake the world with trumpet tongue, and to prepare the way for the coming of our King.—Dr. P. S. Henson in the Baptist Teacher.

WHAT HINDERS EMIGRATION SOUTH?

In recent travels in the South earnest calls were made upon us for emigrants from the northern and western States to come and buy homes and settle where land is so cheap and the climate is so mild and fine. Read carefully the article below, signed with the writer's name, and you can guess, or "reckon," why a wonderful boom was not the immediate response to the calls. "If the foundations be destroyed what can the righteous do?" When the laborers there can have simple justice done them in regard to wages for their work, and their other civil rights, good men will then be glad to go South.

M. A. B.

"The plain facts are that the hands on our sugar plantations are not much, if any, better paid and cared for than the pauper labor of Europe. To illustrate. First class laborers on sugar plantations are paid from January to grinding season (about the 1st of November) at the rate of sixty five cents per day, subject to deductions for all days or parts of days lost for any cause. They are furnished a cabin or room 12x15, in which themselves and families may reside. Out of these wages the laborer has to 'feed' and clothe himself and family. I am reliably informed by experienced overseers that after all deductions for lost time are made, the average laborer makes about twenty days per month provided he does not fall sick; he, therefore, receives in pasteboard tickets an average of $13 per month. These tickets are not transferable, and can only be negotiated at the plantation store, where they are exchanged for meat, bread, etc., at the prices fixed by the storekeeper, who generally represents the planter. These prices are usually fixed at about 100 per cent over the wholesale cost of the goods; therefore the planter gets back through his plantation store, in profits on his goods, about one-half of the wages which he pays the laborer, which makes the actual wages paid by the planter about $6 50 per month.

"This rate and mode of payment generally prevail until sugar-making commences, when the wages are increased to seventy-five cents and one dollar per day, and fifty cents for an extra six hours' work at night, which is called 'a watch.'

"The laborer continues to receive his pay in tickets, but continues to buy his meat, bread and other necessaries at the plantation store. At the end of the year he is as "poor as a church mouse," and the demands of his stomach are such that he is compelled to enter into a new contract for another year .....

"I leave the question of 'does the tariff on sugar protect the laborer' who, by the sweat of his brow, makes it, to gentlemen who are better posted on the subject than I am, leaving them to apply the facts stated, and sustained by the average overseer's time-book, to the whole question at issue, and then reach their own conclusions on the subject.

"In order that the plantation store profit may be fairly averaged, I suggest the following question to any live country dealer, viz.: Suppose you had absolute control of the trade of one hundred men whose credit outside of your store was entirely worthless, and from whom no one could make a cent by process of law, and your trade was to be exclusively with those one hundred people, what rate of profit would you charge them on the goods you sold them, considering their gross trade to be worth $1,300 per month? W. B. MERCHANT."

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

THE NATIONAL ORDER OF VIDETTES.

Some weeks since the Daily Evening Mail of this city published an account of a secret oath-bound society whose chief object was the election of Judge Gresham as President. That gentleman repudiated all such assistance, and knew nothing of it, and the story was regarded as without foundation. The Mail, therefore, printed the following account of the "Videttes," declaring that until this publication no one who had not been previously sworn to secrecy knew the name of an organization which now covers every State and Territory in the Union; has councils, or "companies," as they are called, in three-fourths of the important towns; has twelve branches of the organization in Chicago, and more than a hundred in the State of Illinois—the National Order of Videttes. The election of Judge Gresham is not the object for which the order was founded, but may be an event which many members personally desire. The following extract from the constitution outlines the principles of the organization:

To maintain the Declaration of Independence as the foundation of our principles.

The preservation of our country from foreign interference in our systems of finance and land.

No membership with those who hold allegiance to any foreign power—claiming citizenship, but aliens at heart.

Opposition to contract pauper immigration for the purpose of destroying American workmen.

Our own industries first, last and always.

Our public school system shall be maintained and improved — no sectarian interference from any source.

No division of public funds for sectarian schools.

No special privileges for any class, but just and equitable laws for all.

The cultivation of the home principle by the ownership of homes—homes for the homeless, land for the landless.

A complete and perfect union. One government, one flag, and equal rights for all.

Equality, liberty, fraternity, the climax of our hopes, the end sought to be obtained.

The system of organization is on a military plan, the State organizations being known as "brigades," which are divided into "regiments" and "companies." The greatest care is exercised in the selection of members of the organization. No one may become a member by application, because outsiders have not hitherto known that such an organization existed, and even now will not know to whom to apply should they wish to join the order. The method of obtaining members is this: In the "company" meeting some "officer" or "private" suggests the name of some one who would, in his opinion, make a good "enlisted man." A committee is then appointed to investigate the recruit's reputation, social and political affiliations and inclinations. Should the report of this committee be satisfactory the desired member is elected "on probation" and another committee is appointed, whose duty it is to interview the unconscious candidate, and learn his views and opinions on the principles of the order. Should his expressions be in harmony with the objects of the order, the advisability of having some organization of men of his views is suggested, and if he confesses to a desire to help organize such a body he is partially paralyzed by being informed that such an organization is already in existence, with a membership of 500,000 picked men, and that he has been elected to comradeship in it. The obligation is very strict, and the recruit binds himself to submit to the penalty provided for treason, should he be disloyal to his oath.

PRESS COMMENT.

An Irish political society in Dublin, Ireland, has passed resolutions censuring Mayor Hewitt for not allowing the Irish flag to be raised over the city hall in New York on St. Patrick's day, and says, "This insult to Ireland will be remembered." The people are willing to believe that New York has been ruled by the Irish, but until now it was supposed that it was confined to the Irish in the United States; it seems not, however. As we have said before, "Home Rule for Ireland" means the governing of the United States.—American Citizen, Boston.

United States Commissioner Carroll D. Wright, has made a careful report of the strikes for the past six years. The loss to the laborers was $51,816,165. They received from the lodge assistance to the amount of $4,430,595. The loss to the employers was $30,732,261. Thus it appears that this enforced idleness caused by the secret lodge has resulted in a total loss of over $80,000,000. This immense loss has injuriously affected every individual in the country. It has borne especially hard upon the poorer classes. Here is another proof that the secret lodge is a most inefficient agency for the accomplishment of any good purpose. It degrades amusement into sin, politics into treason, temperance into excess, benevolence into selfishness, brotherly love into a conspiracy, and the spiritual worship of God into vain ceremonies avowedly borrowed from the effete paganism of Asia and Africa.—Witness.

The churches throughout the land were crowded on last Easter Sunday with what the papers called "throngs of eager worshipers." It is a question in our mind whether these eager throngs did not worship the flowers and special musical programmes rather than the risen Christ. We are not opposed to the commemoration of the great events in the life of our Lord; but when the commemoration takes the place of the Lord, then it is time to cast the commemorative service aside and learn to worship him, in spirit and truth, in whose name the thing is done. Our Puritan fathers did well to enter their protest against these formalities in their day. It may be necessary for their children to again purge the temples of these ceremonies when they become hollow forms.—Words and Weapons.

The Freemasons of Virginia have secured a charter for the erection, in Fredricksburg, of a Masonic Temple, as a memorial of George Washington, who was made a Mason in lodge four, in Richmond, on the 4th of August, 1753. When Washington was just old enough to be admitted to the lodge, he was initiated. When he became older, and had more wisdom, he ceased to attend the lodge and to have any connection with the order. He has stated this fact himself in a letter which has been often published. The order must need propping up very much when it claims George Washington, Solomon, John the Baptist and John the Apostle as members; but the trouble is that their claim needs propping very badly, also. Anti-masons would be far more consistent in building a monument to George Washington in memory of his testimony against the whole lodge system.—The Midland.

The Pittsburgh Post had an article following "Good Friday" under the title "Cast their Creeds Aside." It related to a meeting held in an Episcopal church. In the course of its remarks it said. "It (the meeting) was remarkable first from the fact that seated within the chancel of an Episcopal church (St. Andrew's) were eleven ministers, five of whom were rectors of the five leading central parishes of the Episcopal church, and the other six represented six different denominations, and each was a representative man in his own church. It was remarkable, also, that Baptist, Presbyterian and United Presbyterian Christians should unite in keeping Good Friday." Yes, that was remarkable, but we do not suppose these intended to "keep" the day. We note in this connection that a United Presbyterian minister in one of our western towns was present and assisted in the observance of Easter on Sabbath by a Commandery of the Knights Templar, an order of the Masonic society. It is not the only instance where secret orders, as well as a pagan day, have received marked attention by United Presbyterian ministers.—Christian Instructor.

Trades unions, Knights of Labor, and similar associations have asserted their right to exercise a tyranny wholly foreign to the spirit of American institutions and utterly subversive of human liberty. Under the American idea, every man is free to work or to hire others to work upon the best terms he can make. That liberty the labor organizations have sought to take away by violence. They assume not only to compel their own members to work or to quit work at the behest of their little bosses, but to lay like commands upon free men who owe no allegiance to them, and to compel the doing of their will by physical force, by social ostracism, and by the ingenious cruelty of the boycott. We have seen almost the entire trade of the country brought to a halt for weeks at a time by command of one man of bad character and low intelligence, who openly declared that he gave the order merely to "show his power." We have seen the business of a poor widow ruined by a boycott because she employed bakers who did not belong to a particular secret society. Even trades unions endeavor to compel employers to discharge faithful and capable workmen and workwomen because they do not choose or are not permitted to become members of that union; to establish the right of a voluntary association arbitrarily to say who shall and who shall not be allowed to earn a living by labor.—George Cary Eggleston in New Princeton Review.

REFORM NEWS.

OUR NEW ORLEANS LETTER.

THE NUMBER OF TESTIFYING CHURCHES GROWING.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 5, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Praise the Lord, the reform is steadily growing. The Butler Lodge, G. U. O. of O. F., about sixteen in number, and the secret Tabernacle, No. 14, had their anniversary sermon preached at the St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church Sabbath at 3 P. M. These two secret lodges had been canvassing their members for some time in order to make a grand display at the church; but their efforts were vain, as the Odd-fellows could only present about sixteen in uniform and the "Tabs" about twenty-five, male and female.

Rev. W. W. Davis, pastor of the church, preached, but I am informed that his sermon was so Anti-masonic that the secretists seemed to quake. Bro. E. J. Steptoe, worthy superior of the Tabernacles, and also a member of Butler Lodge, G. U. O. of O. F., reminded his secret brethren and sisters (after making signs with his sword) that they must not pay attention to what the devil is stirring up and saying. He said he intended to die in his lodge, no matter what the devil says, and he expects to go to heaven out of his lodge.

I preached at Mount Olive Baptist church at 3 P. M. This church is entirely cleansed from lodgery. The congregation, under direction of Rev. L. Taylor, though small, have bought their lot and builded their house of worship, since last September, and have every dollar paid saving $30, and have had no worldly festival or secret lodge to help them get out of debt and build. I preached at St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church at 7:30 P. M. And although some of the secretists and their sympathizers thought to persuade some not to come and hear my Anti-masonic sermon, and although the weather was very threatening, yet there was a large and enthusiastic congregation of anxious hearers who were not ashamed nor afraid to cry out "amen" to the truth. Mr. A. E. Johnson, the colored artist of the city and also a prominent Odd-fellow, came up to me and said, "Bro. Davidson, I am pleased with your sermon. You have told the truth and quoted Scriptures to justify your argument. We trust to be able to clean lodgery out of this church."

I met Rev. E. Richardson, of Pattersonville, La., an M. E. pastor. He had never seen the Cynosure and will be glad to have it sent to him. I met him in 1886, when I first opened fire on the secret forts of lodgery, and he encouraged me then.

I called on a family Monday evening and we had a debate on secrecy. A sister produced evidences to prove that Masonry was anti-Christian, and she was responded to on behalf of the lodge by a sister who chanced to be a member of Eastern Star, and Heroines of Jericho, who finally acknowledged that Masonry is anti-Christian. A minister was next called on to speak who chanced to be a 32-degree Mason. He desired to be neutral, until a sister reminded him of his moral cowardice and hypocrisy, because he said to her and others that all secret lodges were anti-Christian. He then rallied and said, "Well, yes; they are all wrong." I was then called on to speak. I got the secretists to agree that Entered Apprentice, Fellowcraft and Master Mason were the only universal and genuine degrees in Masonry, and these degrees reject Christ; hence Masonry is a Christ-rejecting, and, therefore, is an anti-Christian system. Anything that fails to recognize Christ's name in its religious ceremonies is anti-Christian.

I attended services at the Evangelist Baptist church, Rev. J. G. Wracks, pastor, Wednesday at 7:30 P. M. The pastor preached an interesting sermon. Although he did not tell his people to give up their lodges, yet he spoke plainly enough for anybody to understand. This congregation is at present worshiping in a private residence. They have bought a lot and anticipate building a house of worship as soon as they get enough cash on hand. Bro. Wracks don't want to put his people in debt to build. I am invited to preach for his people Wednesday, and for Rev. H. Davis, Thursday next.

The St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church had a pound meeting Wednesday for its sick and afflicted members, and made a handsome collection of various articles, such as grits, rice, sugar, meat, etc. Each member was requested to bring something.

I preached Thursday at 7:30 P. M., at Thompson's chapel M. E. church, Rev. E. Lyons, pastor. This is the leading church of the third district (colored). Bro. Lyons is doing a good work, both spiritual and temporal. His custom is on Thursday nights to take up collection for the poor. My sermon was enthusiastically received by the congregation, and heartily endorsed by Bro. Lyons and his deacons. I expect to preach at Shiloh Baptist church, Rev. H. C. Green, pastor, Sabbath at 7:30 P. M.

The Odd-fellows have put up their placards announcing their annual parade and all-night picnics, for Thursday, the 10th. They will no doubt try to make as grand a display as possible, with new uniforms, etc., in order to make other proselytes. When these secret lodges make mock baptism by sprinkling their candidates in the degree of P. L. C. it is time time for Zion to awake.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

LODGE AND SALOON MUST GO DOWN.

NATCHEZ, Miss., May 9, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—At this writing I am here doing what I can for God and his cause. I spent a part of last week in Baton Rouge, La., and lectured two nights. I found Bro. Hannibal Williams, pastor of the First Baptist church, in the midst of a great fight. He praises God for Bro. Hinman's visit some time ago. He is working to free his church of the lodge influences, and it is giving him some trouble; but he hopes to overcome by God's grace, and asks the earnest prayers of the National Association.

I met Bro. Robert Brooks, pastor of another church, who was getting ready to join the Masonic lodge, but after a talk and showing what God says, he says he will never join.

This place being the headquarters of what is known as "The Universal Brotherhood," and many other societies, it is a little hard to reach the people. Rev. Shurlock of Texas came here some time ago to organize the S. S. of O. (Seven Stars of Consolidation), and went into the largest church, taking pastor and all. But God had one deacon who stood his ground and caused a division, which still remains to some extent. If he had been posted or had any friends, a great work would have been done for Jesus in this city.

I have visited the Natchez College and find Profs. Wordlaw and Owens strong opponents of the lodge; also Prof. Meekins, principal of the public school. He says, "Masonry is an imposition. Any man who has ever joined can go into the lodges, though he may not have paid a cent for years, and defraud those who keep up their dues. Masonry teaches discrimination. When a man enters the higher degrees he is shown preferences over his brothers—the Blue Lodge. I have quit."

Thus our work goes on, and we are made to say, "How great are His signs and how mighty are His wonders! His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and His dominion is from generation to generation."

PROHIBITION.

The State Convention of Texas was largely attended and was a success. I am among the delegates to Indianapolis, and the only colored man from our State. I attended the State Convention of the W. C. T. U. of Mississippi in this city yesterday. One thing very noticeable was, many of the delegates, in making their reports, spoke of how hard it was to reach the "colored people." They seem to forget that the masses of us are not readers, and that more than two hundred years have passed in the process of degradation, and how can they expect us to undo in twenty years what they have done in two centuries.

The Prohibitionists, to use the Negro, must quit abusing him. Some of them get angry and talk as though they would take his vote away if they could, because he don't use it as they think he should. Out of the great number of free prohibition papers sent out, I don't know of a half-dozen among colored people. The Cynosure than any other reform paper of any kind. The Negro, like others, cannot and will not go right, unless some man guide him. I find in this State some of them are looking at that slaughtering at Jackson as the result of Prohibition, when, in fact, as a party question, Prohibition is not known in Mississippi. It is more noticeable when they read and hear that Mr. Martin, the editor of the New Mississippian, was the author of the "Red circular," and remember Prof. Dickie's reference to that circular. In talking with one of the ablest colored men of this place yesterday and answering his objections to the cause, he then said, "Well, in Mississippi it is a white man's fight."

Now, we can see if this idea is not removed by lecturing and literature they are left to our enemies. Some of our friends seem willing to go on and leave the Negro. If that is done, the liquor men and other roughs will aim to ride into power on the Negro vote and the results will be bad. It is cheaper to educate him than to reap the results of neglecting him.

I hope to be at the National Convention to say and do what I can to help a people who have claims upon the Christian people of America. I met Mrs. Buell here, who seems greatly interested in the work among my people; also Mrs. Chapin. They were here attending the W. C. T. U. convention.

I read with interest Bro. Isaac Toliver's appeal from Rockdale. No man in Texas or in all the South has a better opportunity, or more vim and courage to speak and press his subject than Rev. Toliver. It will greatly repay our friends to help him. He can do untold good as a reformer. His trouble is, he never finds room for the crowds that flock to hear him. Our people do not own halls and in many cases cannot rent them even if they have the money. Yours for reform, L. G. JORDAN.

OHIO NOTES.

THE LODGE IN COLUMBUS SETS A TRAP FOR THE PASTORS.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 11, 1888.

As spring advances and nature is again arrayed in festive garb, the blood quickens in the veins and a general restlessness pervades this city. The parks, beer-gardens and places of public resort are thronged with a stirring humanity. Picnics, parades and balls are the order of the day with the thoughtless, pleasure-loving, butterfly class. The secretists are not slow to take advantage of this occasion to show their feathers and drum up new recruits. Columns of our daily papers are devoted to accounts of their convivial occasions. I copy the following from the I. O. O. F. reports in the Daily Times:

"The soul of Capitol Lodge was made glad Friday night by the receipt of a box of cigars from Bro. J. D. Hagerty. The occasion of the brother's gift was the arrival of a new boy. This habit of setting up the cigars on such occasions is a time-honored custom of Capitol Lodge."

"The National Lodge entertainment club had a net gain of $240 at their recent ball. This fund will go toward the purchase of new paraphernalia."

It is not difficult for sensible people to guess what is behind the screen when these are the outward manifestations. The effort to capture and control the churches is being pushed, and I am sorry to have to report, with a large degree of success. The following from the Times explains itself:

"Dennison Lodge has adopted a law of attending the various churches of the city every two weeks. The various pastors of the numerous churches have been asked to deliver a sermon appropriate to the occasion. This invitation was very gladly complied with by every minister in the city, with the exception of Rev. C. W. Hiatt of the High Street Congregational church. Rev. Hiatt is an Oberlin graduate, and as a matter of course he is opposed to secret societies. With the exception of Oberlin College, no school in Ohio of any note is opposed to these orders. The new departure of Dennison Lodge will undoubtedly result in much good. One week from to-day Rev. Grannis of the Good Shepherd church will address the lodge at his church."

Should we attempt to answer all the lies published for the "benefit of the order" we should undertake a vast work. There are at least three in this paragraph. Should the Times reporter desire, I can give him the names of at least ten pastors of Protestant churches in this city who will not preach for the lodge, or at least favorably to it.

Oberlin College is not the only school of any note in Ohio that is opposed to secret societies. Capital University of this city, having, I am told, over a hundred students, is opposed to them. The editor must think his Democratic readers are very ignorant or foolish that they do not know this.

Rev. C. W. Hiatt told the committee that visited him, requesting that he preach for the order, that he would do so if they desired to hear him express his sentiments publicly, but that he was not favorable to them, and should not want them to come expecting a commendation of their society.

Rev. McConnell of the Third Avenue M. E. church preached commendatory to the I. O. O. F. last Sabbath morning. He is reported in the papers, and otherwise, as speaking of this order as the "foundation of Christianity."

I have lectured but once since my last. This was at Africa, Delaware county, in the Wesleyan church. Another lecture was postponed because of a severe storm. Bro. Richey, former anti secret State lecturer, is stationed here. I scarcely need say I received a cordial welcome. I expect to start, D. V., in a few days for the northwestern portion of the State, from whence you may expect to hear from me.

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE IMAGE OF THE BEAST.

LUESCO, Pa., May, 5, 1888.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have looked in vain among the books advertised in your columns for the most powerful work on secret societies it has ever been my lot to read, "The Image of the Beast a Secret Empire, or Freemasonry a Subject of Prophecy, by Rev. Richard Horton, Wesleyan Print, Syracuse, N. Y." Price, 50 cents. The text is Revelation thirteenth chapter. The author, while agreeing with all Protestant commentators as to the meaning of the "Dragon," "First Beast" and "Second Beast," proves that the "Image of the Beast" there set forth is Freemasonry. His method of proof is plain and clear. His arguments are easily followed and conclusive.

I think every student of God's Word should have a copy of this book. I am forced to believe that its power for good, if carefully and prayerfully read and widely circulated, would be incalculable. Dear brother Blanchard, will you not examine this book thoroughly, and through the Cynosure give such a notice of it that it may be widely circulated. God will bless you for it.

God be praised for the work done in New Orleans. Praises to God come to my lips whenever I think of the grand work going on in the Southern churches. More and more clearly the proofs are coming to light that the slaveholders' rebellion (in helping to crush which I almost lost my life) was brought about by secret societies. Let the Cynosure turn on the light and may the good work go on. Gladly would I send money to send the paper to the Southern ministers, but the privilege is denied me. I do not belong to any secret society and the government cannot afford to give me a pension according to proven disability from my wound and its results. God will right all wrongs at last. Let us stand firmly for truth and right, and God will give us victory. J. W. SNIVELY.

NOTE.—The Cynosure, in years past, frequently and with warmest commendation noticed this work. If it is in print it can be ordered from this office by any friend.

A PLEA FOR HOME TRAINING.

LISBON, Iowa, May 3, 1888.

According to my view, after much thought and observation, there is scarcely any question before the Christian world of more importance, to the welfare of mankind, than this which relates to the work and duty of parents properly taking care of their children at home, while quite young, in wisely teaching them, and effectively controlling them. Why not have a Normal department in every Christian college in the land, with a professorship, to give well-matured weekly lectures, on the importance, and best methods of conducting family government. Why not bring the matter before the Christian public, and wake up some good hearts, and wise heads, to write text-books on the subject of home training; something like Rev. J. S. C. Abbott's "Mother at Home," only much more full, and more at length in detail.

There are seminaries to qualify young men to preach the Gospel. There are Normal schools and Normal departments to teach young men and women how to become effective teachers, both in common day schools, and also in Sabbath-schools. So also in almost every line of business, and human learning, interest and duty; and in recent years, many States are introducing into the common schools temperance instruction, to assist in forwarding the great temperance reform. Seeing that the intelligent world is so wide awake on every other means of improvement, why should this powerful instrumentality for good, which lies at the foundation of both church and state, be so greatly neglected?

I have endeavored to drop a few seed thoughts, with the hope that more able men will take up the subject, and continue at it with "line upon line, precept upon precept," until the Christian conscience is waked up and a public sentiment created that will bring about a much needed reform in society.

I. L. BUCHWALTER.

A WORD ON REUNIONS.

Your Quakertown, Ind., correspondent, in speaking last week of the "reunion of the Blue and Gray," must have been abroad during the campaign of '84. Some "charity" and "Christian toleration" is needed near that section of the country where workingmen were discharged, shops closed, voters intimidated and disfranchised by being threatened (and in many cases the threat carried into execution) with the loss of their position; patriots hanged and burned in effigy, slandered, ostracised.

Three classes of men to-day, as in '84, are vigorously fighting the war of the '60s. Some politicians, the man in the South who never owned a slave or a foot of land, the man in the North with a huge appetite for a postoffice, or a very clever digestive imagination for the memories and horrors of war as he stood in the bloody ranks of a home guard; rebel flags and Jeff., that old relic of disfranchised devilishness—these have no place in the reunion of the patriots of our country. The Southern man thinks no more highly of them to-day than we do of the honor of being counted with effigy-burners or of being sandwiched with hoodlum votes at $1 apiece. Freedom and Justice weep while we gorge ourselves with sectional shame, as true and as outrageous in the North as in the South.

The solid North has too many saloons, with their ever increasing salable vote, to claim more than half of the "actions of loyalty" toward God, home, or native land. Commerce, charity, Christianity have already done their work, opening industries, general co-partnership, the inquiry into church agreements rather than sectional differences will and must sweep from before our own door as well as that of our neighbor all exaggerated righteousness as well as exaggerated iniquity. Patriots of the North and South are trying to devise means of instilling into the mind of the colored man of the South and the hoodlum of the North the worth and responsibility of citizenship.

I feel like saying as Grant did, when across the river from where he stood a rebel general bowed and asked after his health, "I'll never allow a rebel to outdo me in patriotism." The story goes that he bowed even more gracefully than the Johnnie.

MAC.

DRUG STORES THAT ARE MOST DANGEROUS.

SHARON, Wis.

BRO. REFORMERS:—Since April 13th, as a family, we have been on the front line in the great battlefield of general reform. Have only time now to relate one item of interest. We have always treated drug men, who sell the same as saloon men, just like saloon men. After closing the saloons in one county, and seeing that drug stores continued to sell to the poor drunkards, I, of course, felt it my duty to preach in front of those stores, the same as I had done in the same town in front of saloons! I warned them just the same. Dear reader, what do you think they wanted to do with me? Why, they would like to muzzle me. No saloon man ever named a muzzle to me, not even in a war of fifty years! I understand now more than ever my duty to these drug men, and will open their eyes on the unreasonableness of muzzling the faithful shepherd who keeps the wolves off from the sheep; and the impossibility of muzzling God's watchman whom God has commanded "to cry aloud, and spare not."

Many ministers, priests and editors are muzzled by the love of money, of party, and of sin. All the powers of hell combined are not able to make a muzzle to fit God's watchman; and if able to make one, not able to put one on. More from time to time as the work progresses. R. SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

FOR LIFE.

I shall expect to take the Cynosure while its faith and works remain what they now are, and I can get the means to pay for it.—C. M. CANDEE.

MONARCHY HUMBLING ITSELF.

In your last issue I find noted, that the German Emperor is somewhat recovering and may live for a time as yet. You know that his father, Emperor William, was a pious Christian, having promised his God in youth, when confirmed, to hold to his ways, seek his advice, and give to him the glory of all things through his life. And thus he did. Now the son seems to be of the same mind, having justly ordered a change of the official prayers. Thus, instead of we pray for "His Majesty, Emperor Frederick," it is to be "We pray for thy servant Frederick." It seems it were time that other monarchs ordered the same change. Such a change was made a few years ago by the King of Sweden. Instead of, "To His Royal Majesty," etc., or "Grand-mightiest, Uppermost gracious King," we now write only, "To the King of Sweden."—A. R. CERVINE.

THAT MEMORIAL.

In the Cynosure of May 3d you ask, "Have you read the action of the conference in this number memorializing the National conventions to place in nomination for our suffrages free men?" and then ask, "Shall we go farther and form a league, pledging ourselves not to vote for any other than those free from secret lodge obligations?" You want every friend of the Cynosure to send in his answer at once. I am such a friend and I am for such a league, and have been since the Anti masonic party of Morgan times; and for over fifty years have never, to my knowledge, voted for an adhering Mason for any responsible office. And as long as I live you shall have my name to any memorial of the kind. By all means let the political parties know what they can depend on; and if they want our votes, let them respect our conscientious principles. I am a Prohibitionist, both for the liquor traffic and secretism, and shall vote with the Prohibition party as far as they nominate men who do not consider themselves bound by lodge oaths, and I shall look to the Cynosure for information in regard to that.—ANTI-LODGE PROHIBITIONIST.

I have read the action of the conference in the Cynosure memoralizing the political conventions. The way, as I see it, is to step back to the old American party, and then we can vote with both hands, and ask God's blessing on our act. We have no hope of success while we mix with these political, secret, oath bound parties. My humble advice is to climb onto the American platform and look to God for victory.—JOHN LEEPER, Senecaville, Ohio.

A WINE RECIPE.

I once had the following recipe for communion wine: Raisins, 1 lb.; boiling water, 1 qt. Let stand an hour Strain, and beat in the white of an egg. I hereby declare the above recipe to be a fraud, and would like to have it made known through the dear Cynosure before I die. Everlasting thanks to Mr. John Cassidy for the Cynosure. Old veteran, let us stand fast for the cause of Christ. Pray on.—JACOB HOFFNER, Donnellson, Iowa.

LITERATURE.

A SHEAF OF SONG. By Benj. F. Leggett. Pp. 154. John B. Alden, New York.

Without pretending to great originality, the author of this neat little volume of poems has given the world a very agreeable collection which comprises a happy variety of topics and of poetical measures. It is a book often to be taken up about the fireside for a brief reading, and there are no heavy or sombre pieces to dim the glow of the firelight of home joys burning in the heart.

"A Tramp Through Switzerland," by the same author and publisher, is just the book for the tourist's satchel. Type large, size handy, and story of Alpine tramps and experiences with enough of excitement to hold the attention, and no attempt at historic embellishment to weary the thought. The writer is sometimes prosy with too much rhetoric, but gives us on the whole a pleasant idea of his ability as an entertaining reporter of daily and interesting experiences in a wonderful part of the world. Both volumes are sold at the usual low rate of this publisher.

Words and Weapons is developing more interest in the general evangelical work month by month. Dr. Pentecost's brief notes and other contributions are a treasury of gracious words for the believer, stimulating his zeal and encouraging his faith. The Sabbath school lesson notes in this magazine are of especial value for teachers.

The May English Illustrated Magazine shows its loyalty by a leading article on the late German Emperor by G. M. Rhodes. The writer enjoyed unusual advantages of personal acquaintance at the German court, and his review of the great work of William in the unification of the German Empire is well prepared. Of the three great lieutenants, Bismarck, Moltke and Non Roon, by whose aid he was able to succeed, there are fine portraits of the first two as well as of the Emperor. Prof. Minto's story of the Wat Tyler rebellion goes on through several interesting chapters. Of the old English homes "Hinchingbrooke" is selected for illustration by pen and pencil. A chief attraction to American readers is the fact that this old estate and hall belonged to the Cromwell family, and copies of the portraits of the great Oliver and his mother adorn the article, which is beside made interesting by sketches of the Protector's early days.

The May number of Woman contains a paper of especial merit, a tribute to the late Louisa May Alcott, by Cecil Hampden Howard, a valued Cynosure contributor, in which is embodied the most comprehensive biographical sketch of that lamented writer that we have yet seen published. It is accompanied with an excellent likeness of Miss Alcott. Other illustrated articles in this May number are: the first paper of the series by Helen Campbell, entitled, "Prisoners of Poverty Abroad," relating to the wretched condition of the working women of London. This series will be one of great interest, and will portray the miseries of the poverty-stricken workers of Berlin, Paris and Rome. Julia Ward Howe has a thoughtful paper on "How to Extend the Sympathies of Women," in which she shows how true education enlarges the natural limits of feminine character, and urges women to emancipate themselves from intellectual narrowness. The first paper on Woman's Clubs, by Olive Thorne Miller, is finely illustrated with engravings of the prominent members of Sorosis and the Meridian Clubs, which form the subject of this article.

Maurice Thompson's papers on the "Sixth Sense in Literature," now appearing in Literature, Alden's new literary weekly magazine, are deserving all their popularity as a defense of, and tribute to, literary genius.

Science (weekly) gives each week a resume of the progress in those branches of science most nearly affecting man's health and general welfare. The news from the government scientific bureaus is well presented.

The Young People's Weekly is so full of good and instructive reading for the boys and girls that we are inclined to forgive the poor portrait of Henry Bergh, the friend of animals, which forms the frontispiece. Parents will avoid trash and find wholesome lessons in life in this number. T. B. Arnold, Chicago.

The last London Illustrated News has several pages from its round-the world artist, who has reached California and finds ample scope for his art, but makes an error in his geography by locating the Faralone Islands in San Francisco bay. The two-page picture of the public exhibition of the Pope's Jubilee gifts has an unhappy interest to Protestant Americans.

The Swiss Cross, the popular science monthly which contains the reports of the Agassiz Association, contains in the May number an illustrated article on the remarkable journey in Central Asia made by H. E M. James, Lieutenant Younghusband, and H. Fulford. The article is illustrated. An interesting article with portrait relates the story of Helen Keller, who, though deaf and blind, is making rapid progress in education.

IN BRIEF.

There are but fu horses that will stand without tieing—and there are less men. —Josh Billings.

China and Japan buy our dried apples freely. Thus does American industry help to swell the population of the Orient.

If ten of the richest men in this country, says the New York World, should withdraw their capital from railroads, mines and factories, more than 800,000 men would be thrown out of work, and more than one million people would suffer by it.

The barb-wire industry is in a fair way of being overdone. According to the Iron Age there are forty-four manufacturers in this country who own 2,191 machines. It is estimated that in 200 working days, running single turns, they will make 300,000 tons of barb wire, while the consumption ranges from 130,000 to 150,000 tons a year.

The following incident is vouched for by scientific persons: An English gentleman was presented with a cask of Malmsey sweet wine, which he ordered to be placed in an inner room in his wine-cellar. He was absent from home for a long time, and on his return directed his butler to open the wine for his guests. His astonishment may be imagined when he was informed that the entrance to the room was closed by an enormous fungus growth. An entrance was effected with difficulty by chipping the fungus with an ax. The cask was found empty, pressed against the ceiling, supported upon and surrounded by this vegetable matter, which almost entirely filled up the remaining space in the apartment.—Boston Post.

Ferdinand de Lesseps has spent $4,000,000 annually for pushing his schemes by means of printer's ink, principally on the press of Paris. Of this the Figaro is said to have received yearly $100,000; the Gaulois, $100,000; the Matin, $40,000; the Intransigeant, $10,000; the Justice, $5,000: the Petit Journal, $200,000, and other papers according to their estimated value. All the influential Paris journals have been paid by the Casino of Monte Carlo, though not so lavishly. When de Lesseps began with the canal at Panama he thought his name was going to carry everything before it. The newspapers violently attacked his project and he was obliged to yield. Since then he has paid them what they asked.

An American manufacturer of sugar-coated pills added to the attractions of an exhibit of his product in London an ingenious piece of mechanism, which might have been intended to represent the pharmacist of the future. It was in the form of a cabinet provided with a series of knobs or buttons, each inscribed with the name of some malady for which a remedy might be asked. The customer puts a coin into a slit and presses the button calling for the remedy he requires, when immediately a drawer flies out containing the article sought. This automatic dispenser of course makes no mistakes. If the customer accidentally presses the wrong button, he alone is responsible for the errror. Is this really what we are coming to?—Scientific American.

Some remarkable figures of more than national interest from an economic standpoint are given in the thirteenth annual report of the National Penny bank of England, of which the duke of Westminster, Earl Beaumont, and the Rt. Hon. Mr. Childers are trustees. Since the institution was opened 674,574 people have become depositors. The number of deposits has been 5 202,608, amounting to $13,000,000. Of the present depositors, all of whom are of the working class, 22 000 have amounts of 25 cents and less to their credit, 2,783 have balances of between $25 and $50; 3,059, $50 to $125; 1,752, $150 to $250; 1,096, $300 to $500, and 1,046, over $500. An interesting statement of the report is that a good proportion of the depositors are of German birth or parentage.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. WM. M. BROOKS, Pres. Tabor College.—Our faculty is a unit in opposition to secret societies, not excepting those formed for literary culture.

PRES. L. H. HAMMOND, Lebanon Valley College.—My conviction is firm that the influence of Freemasonry is baneful in whole and in part; that, religiously, it is a stumbling block; and that, socially and politically, the benefaction it offers to one is a robbery of others.

PRES. E. K. HILL, Washington University.—I have long regarded the secret conclaves as unnecessary to any good cause, and dangerous from their irresponsibility. Especially do I think that Freemasonry, from its nature, record and prevalence, is an enemy to the political purity and social morality of our country.

PRES. H. H. GEORGE, D. D., Geneva College.—No man can, at the same time, be a lover of Christ or a Christian, and a sworn member of a Christ-dishonoring and disowning fraternity, provided he know the true character of that fraternity. No man can be innocent in going into such a fraternity without knowing its true character.

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD, Oberlin:—The tendency to organize in secret bodies, political, social, religious and literary, seems to indicate distrust of the ordinary institutions of society, and will surely generate the distrust from which it seems to spring. The very idea of a secret combination implies a barbarous age, or a state of social anarchy in which such arrangements are necessary for safety. There is no place for it in a Christian civilization.

REV. JOSIAH BRADLEY, Principal of Rock Spring Seminary, Illinois, 1829:—Masonry is a human, and cunningly formed system of deception. Is it not rightly named "Speculative Freemasonry?" Millions have been drawn within its veil, and led away captive by its false pretensions and exhibitions of morality, charity and brotherly love. And many may still rejoice for a season in their delusions, despise reproof, and perish without remedy.

PRES. L. N. STRATTON, D. D.—One other fact worth naming is, that the oaths and secret workings of Freemasonry are out and well-known to the world. They are published in the reports of several State legislatures, and in Wendell's Supreme Court Reports of the State of New York, Vol. XIII, pp. 9-26. Their oaths are no less murderous than those taken by the Mollie Maguires, for obedience to which latter twenty-one have been tried and hung in the State of Pennsylvania.

LEONARD WOODS, D.D., Professor in Andover, 1829:—Now I have never seen or heard of any evidence, of any kind or degree, in support of the pretended antiquity of Freemasonry; and I suppose the same is true of all others. What then can we do, consistently with reason and common sense, but to withhold our belief. As to probable evidence; it would be very proper to inquire, whether it can be reconciled to the acknowledged character of Solomon, and of the twelve apostles to suppose, that they belonged to a society, established on the principles and practicing the rites of Freemasonry. If these principles and rites are what the community at large understand them to be, and what Freemasons themselves understand them to be, an answer to this inquiry would be no very difficult thing.

PRES. TIMOTHY DWIGHT, D. D., in a Fast Day Sermon, Yale College.—These [the doctrines of Illuminism] were: that God is nothing; that government is a curse, and authority an usurpation; that civil society is the only apostasy of man; that the possession of property is robbery; that chastity and natural affection are mere prejudices, and that adultery, assassination, poisoning and other crimes of a similar nature are lawful and even virtuous. A large branch of the Masonic Societies in Germany and France had already adopted the same objects, as the great and controlling ones of all their personal and united labors. Here secrecy furnished the most advantageous opportunities for the formation of every design and the most advantageous opportunities for its successful execution.

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO THURSDAY, MAY 17, 1888

THE ELGIN ASSOCIATION of Congregational churches met last week at Batavia, Ill., and received the College Church of Wheaton into their body. This action, since the church separates itself from all secret societies, bears decidedly against the lodge. The large council, by whose advice the church acted, decided by a unanimous vote that a church has the right to exclude Freemasons and other secretists from their Christian fellowship, which all churches of Christ should do.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON.—This institution which has been doing educational work in Northern Illinois for the last twenty-eight years holds its annual commencement on June 20th. A class of seven graduate this year. The attendance for the year has been some two hundred and twenty-five. The subscription toward the new building fund is now seven thousand five hundred dollars. The faculty and students will be glad to see all those who have been students in former days, together with all others who are interested in Christian education, on this occasion.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S nomination of Melville W. Fuller, Chief Justice of the United States, seems to give general satisfaction. Some of the strongest Republican presses approve of the appointment. He was a war Democrat, is fifty-five years of age, and has practiced law in Chicago some thirty years. His appointment makes three Democrats to six Republicans now on the Supreme Bench, Justices Field and Lamar being the other two. The security of the tenure by which these judges hold office, and the almost entire absence of motive to induce them to re embark in the troubled sea of party politics, and, above all, the triviality of the difference between the Republican and Democratic parties, makes the former political relations of the nine judges of small account.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

We are pleased to see that the lately-formed political league meets with favor by the laborers in the lecture field, and we hope our treasurer, Mr. W. I. Phillips, who is appointed superintendent, will not let the matter sleep, especially till after election next November. The senior editor happened to visit the Anti-Corn-law League headquarters in Manchester, England, just at the close of a campaign in which it had sent out twenty tons of publications explaining the reform.

The thing which chiefly struck us was that two individual men in private life sat down before an oppressive bread-tax, and resolved on, and accomplished its repeal.

Mr. Cobden was a small, pale-faced Englishman; and Mr. Bright, a Quaker, unused to politics. Neither of them were, or ever became, what would have been called eloquent men in the days of Pitt, Fox and Sheridan. They armed themselves with all the facts, stood up, and convinced the people of what they believed themselves. Cobden refused a baronetcy when offered him. Bright was religiously opposed to titles. Sir Robert Peel, the Tory minister of the day, was a titled aristocrat, and the Corn laws were sustained by the owners of every acre of British soil, and by dukedoms, earldoms, and all the titles which the land sustained. By unwearied toil, honesty, and integrity, those two untitled, unpretending men convinced as many people as the United States then held, and Peel abolished the Corn laws which his party upheld, to avoid being left in the minority in Parliament and defeated in an appeal to the country.

Now the argument against the secret lodge system in this country is in every sense stronger than that by which Cobden and Bright overthrew the Corn laws. The secret orders of the United States are of foreign origin. They are against the United States Constitution which forbids titles of nobility, State or national. Even the anarchists are the spawn of privileged class legislation; and the cost of secret orders would buy bread for the paupers of all Europe. And while every Freemason is an alien by his oath to a secret empire, and thus owes another allegiance than that to the United States, he professes a religion unknown to Christ and the Bible, and he ought not to be allowed his oath in our courts, unless he disavows and casts off his Masonic obligations. Masons cover and conceal their position as aliens, by pretending they are forbidden to defend the lodge; which, yet, they do not hesitate to attempt, whenever they have the least hope of success. But the argument is all against sworn aliens to the government and religion of a country claiming civil rights in that country. If their oaths are not binding they are blasphemy; if they are binding they are treason; and in either case they are idolatry.

Who is now ascertaining whether Bain of Kentucky still adheres to Good Templary, and whether Cranfil of Texas is a secretist? No time should be lost. Secretary Stoddard has by this time started a work in the National building at Washington. Let there be counsel every week; and let us hear from Bain and Cranfil. Gen. Fiske has declared himself out of the Good Templars. He will doubtless be nominated for President at Indianapolis.

VERMONT.

Some correspondence has already been had about a summer campaign in the churches of Vermont, the State whose political star never sunk below the horizon. Judge Harrington voiced the sentiment of his State on slavery when he said, nothing but "a bill of sale from the Almighty," would take a man out of his court as a slave. The State opposed the annexation of Texas, the Mexican war for the extension of slavery, and gave her whole electoral vote for Wirt and Ellmaker, the Anti-masonic candidates for President and Vice President of the United States in 1832. It has been proposed to hold a convention at Saxton's River, Vt., in the month of June next. Will every reader of the Cynosure and Christian Witness of New Hampshire write at once to Prof. S. C. Kimball of New Market, N. H., and, after due inquiry, answer the following questions:

1. How many persons do you know who would attend a three days' convention for prayer and counsel at Saxton's River in the town of Rockingham, Vt., if one is called after the middle of June next?

2. Are you in favor of and would you sign the American Anti-Secrecy League, lately formed at Chicago, to refuse to support lodge members for public office?

3. Are you in favor of a series of meetings for prayer and counsel for the overthrow of secret lodges in the churches of Vermont the coming summer, to be addressed by two ministers of the Gospel? And how many churches of all denominations do you know of where such meetings could be held?

The town of Rockingham was the birth-place of the senior editor of the Cynosure, and the Baptist church in Saxton's River village was the first pulpit he ever spoke in for the temperance cause. We have many friends and many happy memories in that town. Gates Perry, Esq, Esquire Smith, all the village magnates, held a meeting in the old Baptist church, and exhibited the lodge initiation to a crowded house, galleries and all. And the children of the village fathers still inhabit those hills. If we can hold a meeting in that interesting village over Saturday, Sabbath and Monday, the State of Vermont will be effectually opened and take prominent part in relieving the country of the lodge. Are you in favor of the convention?

GOOD TEMPLARISM.

Dr. Emory Potter of Elmwood Hall, Saratoga Springs, writes us expressing strong hopes that the candidates nominated at the Indianapolis Convention will be acceptable to the American party. He is opposed to Masonry and Odd-fellowship, but though, like Henry Wilson, he wishes the Good Templars would drop their secrecy, as their prayers are offered through Christ, he dislikes to divide the the Prohibition party by breaking with those who cling to the secret ritual. If an adhering Good Templar should be nominated for Vice President at Indianapolis, the Cynosure could not support the ticket; but could support Gen. Fisk, because,

1. Gen. Fisk, though once a Good Templar, neither gives time nor money to practice their ritual or contribute to their funds.

2. The Good Templar ritual was formed by Masons and Odd-fellows, Grosch, Kelley and others.

3. Though they use the name of Christ in their printed prayers they are ruled by those who reject him, and they trample on his example. Gen. Fisk does neither of these.

If, therefore, the Indianapolis Convention should put an adhering secret lodgeman on its ticket, we have no way left us but to call a convention at once and nominate a new ticket, and raise money and canvass for voters. Neither the Republicans nor Democrats would object to colored voters supporting our American ticket. The Negroes would have their right to vote for President recognized, and neither Republicans or Democrats would object. Both these parties wish to allow the Negroes to vote when they can do so without fatally injuring themselves. The Negroes would not, of course, vote for a Good Templar, if nominated at Indianapolis; because the Good Templars drew the color line against them at Saratoga. But if the Prohibitionists nominate a ticket clean of the lodge the Negroes will vote for it, because they know the Americans are their friends. The Democrats will be pleased to see the colored people forsake the Republicans, their old enemies. In brief, the secret lodge is a universal marplot; and if the Prohibitionists give us a clean ticket at Indianapolis, everybody will be pleased with it. Cleveland is likely to be re-elected, as the Republicans see and know. Any attempt to endanger Cleveland's election by getting the Negroes to vote for a Republican would enrage the Democrats and do no good. But if Cleveland is quietly elected next fall the Prohibitionists will cast a large vote by harmony among themselves; the hamper of secrecy will quietly fall off; the cause of reform will move steadily onward; and whoever lives to see 1892 will see a reform President in the White House. The evil genius of labor will then be cast off; the laborer will have his Sabbath, the school its Bible; God will be recognized, and the nation blessed.

SUMMUM JUS, SUMMA INJURIA.

The papers have informed the readers of the Cynosure that Judge M. F. Tuley of Chicago has decided that children of persons born in slavery are illegitimate and so incapable of inheriting and devising property. The case in which this monstrous ruling was made, by a Democratic judge said to be "of eminent respectability," concerned a piece of real estate in Chicago owned by a descendant of a slave of Tom Marshall of Kentucky, who, in 1820, sixty-eight years ago, married, by slave custom, a slave woman. A descendant of this slave marriage acquired and devised property in Chicago. The judge ruled that slaves in Kentucky being, in law, held to be "real estate," were incapable of marriage or any other contract, and so their children were illegitimate, born out of wedlock and could not acquire or convey property, having, by the decision of Chief Justice Taney, in the celebrated Dred Scott case, "no rights which white men were bound to respect." And this Chicago judge observed that slaves in Kentucky being in law real estate, marriage between two pieces of real estate was an absurdity. This is but another case where our motto ("Summum jus," etc.) applies. "The extreme of law is the extreme of wrong." Slavery itself was an absurdity, being "contra naturam," against nature and reason. There are no principles in wrong, as there are no rays in darkness. Nothing can sustain it but mere force; and force is blind and deaf. And when on Jan. 1st, 1863, the United States by force abolished slavery, it not only abolished the slave-power of the master, but the slave's incapacity and illegitimacy; not only the institution, but its consequences. Slaves in Kentucky were "real estate." In other States they were "held and taken in law," "pro nullis, pro mortuis, pro quadrupedibus," for nobodies, for dead persons, for quadrupeds. But by Lincoln's proclamation and Grant's sword these foul legal slanders on "God's image carved in ebony" were wiped out, and the slave became a man.

But Judge Tuley's revolting decision fails, not only in the forum of reason and conscience, but in the courts of law. In the world-known Somerset case, 1772, Lord Mansfield held, and the courts of England have followed his decision ever since, that the essence of slavery clings to a man no longer than the local laws hold it there; that his slavery falls off from and out of him the moment he sets foot on free soil. But incapacity for owning and conveying property is of the essence of slavery, and therefore, the children of parents born in slavery, themselves being free, never had any such incapacity. Their parents lost the incapacity when they lost their slavery. Their hands acquired the ability to hold and convey property when the manacles fell off. In the beginning of the Abolition agitation we had some three million slaves; and their descendants are some seven millions now. By the ruling of Judge Tuley those four millions, the offspring of parents born in slavery in one or two generations did not own the property their parents left them, because slaves owned no property and could give none. Thus this Democratic judge immortalizes slavery in the poverty which it entails! The institution is dead but its poverty survives!

But this not all, nor the worst. The illegitimacy of slavery must go hand in hand with its penury, down the ages. For if the children of parents born in slavery could not inherit property rights, neither could they inherit marital rights, and the brand of bastardy, which of old excluded from "the Congregation of the Lord," must, in this Christian age and country, cling to the unoffending children of unoffending parents, while the United States Constitution (Art. III., Sec. 3) forbids that even the treason of traitors shall work corruption of blood in their children: and by the civil and canon law, subsequent marriage of the parents has always legitimated their children.

"Slavery was never anything else than "mischief framed by law." And so jealous has the English law been of the purity of its ermine, that in the case of a vile statute, like that which created slavery, Lord Chief Justice Holt, against the general rule that the common law must be silent where the statute has spoken, exclaimed, "The common law doth control acts of Parliament and adjudges them void, when made contrary to fundamental equity."

But this merciless ruling in a Chicago court, is not an "ill wind to blow nobody good." Thousands of our colored citizens will see in it, "the hole of the pit from whence they and their children have been digged," and as they are now learning that the ten Masonic lodges at our national seat of government, all went for secession and immortalizing slavery, and that Republicans and Democrats are alike "brothers" in those lodges, they will learn how hollow are the pretensions of mere politicians who opposed slavery only from mercenary motives after the Abolitionists had made it unpopular, and opposing it led to power.

TO THE CORPORATE MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Secretary Stoddard writes asking that you please remember that the time of the annual meeting is the third Thursday in June, and that important business demands your presence at that meeting and your prayers for Divine guidance in all its deliberations and actions. The year has not been wanting in tokens of the Divine favor on our work, and ripening fields are opening on every hand, inviting the sower and the reaper alike. Let us consecrate ourselves anew to the work, and so much of time and means as is necessary to make this the fullest and grandest gathering in all the history of the moral conflict we wage against Satan's secret empire of darkness and death.

—Remember the Michigan meeting at Salem, Washtenaw county, Mich., May 22.

—Bro. Stoddard writes nothing for publication this week, but his letters show him to have been so busy that we can forgive him.

—Rev. C. C. Harrah of Galva, Ill., preached the opening sermon of the Central West Congregational Association in the First Church of Christ, Galesburg. His subject was "Christianity, the only, the Universal Religion."

—Rev. George Warrington, editor of the Psalm-Singer and Birmingham Free Press, called on his way home from the sad duty of laying the body of a beloved mother in its last resting-place. Bro. Warrington, with his church and papers, has an arduous but influential and ever-growing work. May he have strength for the day.

—The Masons of Winona county, Minnesota, having plotted to secure the laying of the corner-stone of a new court house, the citizens who have no political allegiance but to the United States government are protesting against the usurpation of a public honor by secretly sworn adherents of the lodge empire. May their effort be successful.

—The attention of all readers is urgently asked to the article on the "Home School" in the Home department by Bro. Buchwalter. This matter is of the first importance, and lies at the right hand of all who have taken the momentous responsibility of bringing children into the world. Read and ponder well the suggestions of the article. The subject is so urgent that we take the liberty of printing also from a private letter from Bro. Buchwalter.

—It is an evidence that the Chicago churches are waking up to the power of the saloon ring in city affairs when five of the pastors of leading churches, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational and Methodist, announced Saturday that they would preach on the saloon crime in Chicago. If these good brethren were not so afraid of hobby-riding, they would not stop at one sermon or two or twenty, until they had seen some permanent results of their work.

—Such buncombe as Grand Master Smith indulged in at the Odd-fellow celebration in this city, reported in "Lodge Notes," is not a good recommendation for an aspirant for gubernatorial honors. He knows well enough that the Odd-fellow fund was used only for members of the order, who were all able-bodied men, and generally in position to take care of themselves. To the churches and the general public were left the care of the really poor and needy. The Masons could not find needy members enough to help, and so spent a large part of their relief fund in gorgeously refitting their lodge rooms.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. J. M. Foster, whose letters from New York and Brooklyn have for some time kept our readers informed of prominent ecclesiastical movements in those cities, has returned to Cincinnati, just in time to note the struggle of the saloons against the operation of the Owen Sunday-closing law.

—Rev. C. Bender of Dover, Ill., called at the Cynosure office last week on his way home from a visit to the churches in his district, during which he was much encouraged by their faith. At Sycamore, Ill., he saw at the farm of James Wiman, hay that was put up thirty-eight years ago, and which appears still to be in fine condition.

—Prof. W. M. Sloane, whose fine biography of his father, Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, is on sale at this office, has just been elected Professor of Latin in Columbia College. He now occupies the chair of History in Princeton College, and was a popular candidate as successor to the venerable Dr. McCosh. He is now traveling in Europe.

—Miss F. E. Willard, president of the National W. C. T. U., writes to the Union Signal of her late visit to Gettysburg, Pa., which she characterizes as "the home of that noble pair, Rev. and Mrs. Swartz." Our readers will be glad to know that Dr. Swartz, whose valuable articles they read from time to time in our columns, is a no less valued contributor to several other religious and reform papers, and that his work for the temperance cause is not lightly esteemed all through the land.

—Pres. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton Theological Seminary was summoned last week by telegram to Berrien Centre, Mich., to attend the funeral of Mrs. Delilah Crall, wife of J. B. Crall. She died in the triumphs of a Christian faith, and was sadly mourned by her family and the great concourse of neighbors who crowded the church at her funeral. J. B. Crall, her honored husband, was faithful in her death in allowing no funeral badges on the pall bearers; the entire eight were Christian men. Brother Crall said, before he would have had an officiating minister who was a worshiper at a secret altar, he would not have had a funeral discourse at all. The obituary will appear next week.

—During a recent visit of Mr. Howe of Wenona, Ill., to this city he informed us of the engagement of Prof. Davis, a pious and experienced educator, to take the place of the beloved Professor Woodsmall in the Memphis school. Prof. Davis has had some experience in the work, having been for a time connected with Leland University, New Orleans. He comes back to Memphis from San Diego, California, where he has been laboring for a few years. He is in full sympathy with Prof. Woodsmall's work among the colored people, and is opposed to the lodge, liquor and tobacco. Mrs. Davis will assist in teaching, and the Memphis brethren are hopeful that their great loss will largely be made good.

—Among the friends whom it was our pleasure to greet at the office last week, we must not forget to mention Bro. A. W. Parry, whose agency for the seminary at Evansville, Wisconsin, has been quite successful and is now closed. We were happy to greet also Rev. Herbert C. Nash of Iowa, an old student friend at Wheaton, who was on his way to the great Baptist meetings at Washington. He reports that in his acquaintance in Iowa, there are very few Baptist pastors in the lodge, and the general effort and advice of the churches of that denomination is to keep their members out. Some churches are so well established in the faith that they will not receive or maintain a pastor who belongs to the orders.

—Elder Rufus Smith, having driven the devil out of Maryville and DeKalb county, Missouri, so far as the saloons are concerned, seeks for other fields to conquer for the Lord. Journeying eastward with his family, Chicago must be one stopping place. During the week he has been here the Cynosure office was headquarters. He gave grand assistance to Bro. Alexander Kirkland of the Adelphi, and to Col. Clark of the Pacific Garden Missions. The former has just moved from No. 118 West Madison street to 111 South Halsted, where he has leased a building formerly run as a dance hall. It was closed by order of the Mayor, and now, instead of the slugging match or low dance, the converts of this mission will tell the story of the cross within its walls.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

A CATHOLIC PRIEST DENIES A DEFINITION AND HAS A CHALLENGE.

IN spite of the charge of the Romish papers that the great anti-Catholic movement now in progress in this city, and New England, is a spasmodic revival of the old Know-Nothing aggression, both the Catholic clergy and editors are fast finding out that it is just the opposite, i. e., a Know Something reformation. I say, fast finding out; nay, Rome knows it already, and is therefore fighting the public school system. The church of Rome herself is the greatest Know-Nothing party in existence. It is her policy to keep her minions in grossest ignorance.

In the morning edition of the Boston Herald (9th inst.) there appeared a copy of a complaint made by Rev. Theodore A. Metcalf, rector of the "Gate of Heaven church" (Catholic) against Mr. Charles B. Travis, a teacher in the English High school, for erroneously defining in a prejudicial manner, as he claims, the word "indulgence". The following is his letter to the committee:

"MR. CHAIRMAN—Sir: It is both my duty and my right as a clergyman and a citizen to submit the following statement to the school committee; and, at the same time that I protest against the injustice, I demand a remedy in the name of every Catholic in Boston against any repetition of similar insults. Twice within the past two weeks Mr. Charles B. Travis of the English high school, in his capacity of teacher of history, has trespassed on the forbidden ground of religion, and made statements which were an outrage to Catholics, in his endeavor to explain a question of Catholic doctrine. On the first occasion, in the second class, when asked by a pupil, 'What is an indulgence?' he replied, 'A permission to commit sin;' also adding, by way of illustration, after further inquiries, 'Should a murderer be brought before a judge, he would only have to put his hand in his pocket and produce his indulgence papers to be pardoned.

"On the second occasion, in the second class, room 13, second division, about a month after the above remarks, Mr. Travis was again asked, 'What is an indulgence?' and replied, 'A permission to commit sin;' also, 'You pay so much money in advance for leave to commit certain sins.' A Catholic pupil again objected, giving the definition of indulgences as taught by his church.

"I submit that such treatment of history is an encroachment into the domain of theology which the non-sectarian school cannot justifiably permit. It is an insult to Catholics."....

In the evening edition of the same paper there appeared the following reply and challenge from Rev. William Kellaway, editor of the Free Press:

"Please permit a brief reply to Mr. Metcalf's letter.

"1. It is certainly within a teacher's right to give the meaning of any word that may be used in class, when desired by a scholar for his information; and no outsider ought to call that right in question.

"2. A teacher can only give as the sense of a word the meaning that passes current as its sense—the sense which it is generally understood to convey, which he has himself learned, and which he has verified by study of literature and history.

"3. It is manifestly unjust for an outsider to put down to bigotry or antipathy to any sect that sense so given, in good faith of its correctness. It should not be treated on the ground of personal prejudice, but on the basis of the true meaning of words.

"Now, with respect to indulgences, Protestant though I am—'heretic' is what Mr. Metcalf would call me—I am ready not only to affirm, but also to prove, that the word 'indulgences,' as used by the Roman Catholic church in the 16th century, and at other periods, meant not only what it is modified into in the catechisms now in use, namely, remission of part of the punishment due to sin, but also permission, or license, to commit sin. The fact is that indulgences may be classified under two heads—'remission' indulgences and 'permission,' or 'license' indulgences. I do not assert that at the present time a man can obtain permission to kill his fellow man for seven shillings and sixpence, as he could centuries ago; nor to commit sodomy in the hot part of the summer; but he can be indulged—that is, can obtain a permission or license indulgence to eat meat on fast days, work on holy days and the like. The viler features of the license indulgence may possibly be held in abeyance; probably are. The very term 'indulgence' means to gratify, permit, allow. Mr. Metcalf should know that it was this that procured, in the time of Tetzel and the reformers, such odium for indulgences.

"The Boston English high-school teacher could do no other than define the term according to its concrete meaning as embodied in history, and if Rome is now ashamed of its 'license' indulgences that is her matter, not that of the teacher. W. KELLAWAY."

These two letters are items of intense interest to both Catholics and Protestants; and the question is, will the priest meet the minister. Of course not. He dare not. D. P. MATHEWS.

THE HOME.

MY UNINVITED GUEST.

One day there entered at my chamber door
A presence whose light footfall on the floor
No token gave; and, ere I could withstand,
Within her clasp she drew my trembling hand.

"Intrusive guest," I cried, "my palm I lend
But to the gracious pressure of a friend.
Why comest thou unbidden and in gloom
Trailing thy cold gray garments in my room?

"I know thee, pain! Thou art the sullen foe
Of every sweet enjoyment here below;
Thou art the comrade and ally of death,
And timid mortals shrink from thy cold breath.

"No fragrant balms grow in thy garden beds,
Nor slumbrous poppies droop their crimson heads;
And well I know thou comest to me now
To bind thy burning chains upon my brow."

And though my puny will stood straightly up,
From that day forth I drank her pungent cup,
And ate her bitter bread—with leaves of rue
Which in her sunless gardens rankly grew.

And now, so long it is, I scarce can tell
When pain within my chamber came to dwell;
And though she is not fair of mien or face,
She hath attracted to my humble place

A company most gracious and refined,
Whose touches are like balm, whose voices kind:
Sweet sympathy with box of ointment rare;
Courage, who sings while she sits weaving there.

Brave patience, whom my heart esteemeth much,
And who hath wondrous virtue in her touch;
Such is the chaste and sweet society
Which pain, my faithful foe, hath brought to me.

And now upon my threshold there she stands,
Reaching to me her rough yet kindly hands
In silent truce. Thus for a time we part,
And a great gladness overflows my heart;

For she is so ungentle in her way,
That no host welcomes her, or bids her stay;
Yet, though they bolt and bar their house from thee,
To every door, O pain, thou hast a key!

THE FAMILY SCHOOL.

BY REV. I. L. BUCHWALTER.

Much has been said and written in regard to Sabbath-school work. It truly involves very important Gospel machinery for the salvation and moral elevation of mankind; and wonderful progress has been made in the last score of years in bringing this line of Christian work to its present state of perfection. Upon this work are brought to bear Sabbath-school assemblies, conventions, Sabbath-school journals, teachers' meetings, and a critical examination of the Scripture lessons, etc.

All this is right, and just as it should be. But may I not make the suggestion that there is another school, another institution divinely ordained, that,if rightly managed, is of much more force and power for the good of our race than the Sabbath-school. I mean the family school. This precedes every other means of instruction. Some very good and thoughtful men have given it as their judgment that more can be done by parents at home in the proper care, control, and teaching of their children from the first to the seventh or eighth year, to shape their future moral and religious character than by all other means combined; and from careful observation during my thirty-seven years of life in the ministry,I believe this is about correct.

Something, indeed, is said on this important subject by the pulpit and press, but how very little in comparison with what is said and done concerning Sabbath-schools and the best methods of conducting them. Would it not be well enough also to have family school assemblies and conventions? Why not at least have at all our general Sabbath-school assemblies a day or two devoted exclusively to the discussion, by the best talent that could be secured, of the importance of this subject, and the best and most effective methods of conducting family government? In my opinion the importance of this matter cannot be overestimated. May not the lack of wholesome discipline in churches, the slack enforcement of law in the state, the bold violation of the Sabbath day, the great number of divorces, the frequent outbursts of anarchy into which our country is so fearfully drifting and the alarming state of morals in the large cities, be largely traced back to the general and increasing slackness of family teaching and control? In many so-called Christian families there is no altar of worship, no daily family prayer, and the children are allowed to have about all they want, and do pretty much as they please, without any wholesome check being placed upon their selfish and depraved desires by parental authority. We have departed entirely too far from the good old Puritan manners, and from the strict home rule and piety of our Saxon fathers.

Allow me to suggest that our religious papers should occasionally print a well-matured article on this very important matter, giving the manner and best methods for the home training of children;also, securing able contributions on the subject, and recommend the same as topics for conventions,sermons, and lectures. Surely the alarming liberalism of the times,with its degenerating influences, should enlist the careful attention of all the religious journals in the land. Thus the churches would be waked up, and the minds of the parents would be more intensely directed to the great duty of looking more carefully after the principles and lives of their children, and a rebuke given to the false, goodish spirit that has obtained such a hold in Christian society, which almost entirely ignores the Bible principle of control, given by inspiration of God,which says: "Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying." "Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child; but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him. A child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame."

A public sentiment would be created in the Christian world that would gradually work up to a great and much needed reform, and a wonderful improvement in home rule, and the manners and habits of society, both among the young and old, bringing a great blessing upon the church and state and the world at large.

"'Tis education forms the common mind:
Just as a twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

God has said, "Train up a child in the way he should go,and when he is old he will not depart from it." Of Abraham he said: "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment,that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him." He has "commanded a blessing upon all the families of the earth that call upon the name of the Lord," and history shows that in consequence of Abraham's faithfulness in the religious instruction and government of his own household, that God's blessing did especially follow the patriarchal line down to Moses, who, at Mount Sinai, received directly from God the law in a more perfect and systematic form; and the result was that the Jewish people became the most righteous and enlightened and law-abiding nation on earth, and became the honored family or channel through which the Lord Jesus Christ and his great salvation came to the world. And, on the other hand, God said to the high priest,Eli,and his house: "Because his sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not, therefore have I sworn unto the house of Eli * * * behold the days come that I will cut off the arm of thy father's house, that there shall not be an old man in thy house forever," which prophecy, according to history, was sadly fulfilled. Thus the slackness of Eli in his family government was severely rebuked.

LEAVING CHRIST OUT.

In the village of W——was the home of a man who was honest in his dealings, but who took no interest in religious things. His business was absorbing; and as the Sabbaths came, he was disinclined for public service, preferring ease and quiet at home, and rather enjoying than otherwise his reputation as an unbeliever. In the midst of external prosperity and apparent health, a fatal disease suddenly appeared. One of his first movements was to send for the minister. "Now, Mr. F——, if you can help me, I will be glad; for I am all uncertain as to the future; but I don't want to hear about Jesus Christ."

The faithful servant of God quailed at first; but undertook the service upon the basis proposed. "Well," he said, "I will talk with you to-night about the greatness of God." His watchful hearer agreed to it, and listened attentively while the minister spoke of the wonders of creation; the beauties of nature; the telescope and the microscope. The sick man was profoundly interested throughout the interview; and urged the minister to come on the following evening. As the good man entered the chamber on the next evening, he said, "I will talk to you to-night about the goodness of God." His hearer listened attentively; and as the unnumbered mercies and blessings were made to pass before him, his mind was moved, and he exclaimed, "It is all true." And yet the name of Christ had not been alluded to.

At the next interview the minister said, "We will talk to-night of the justice of God." The sick man trembled with new and strange emotions as the awfulness of this attribute of Jehovah took possession of his mind; and as the skillful doctor drew the net tighter, his conviction of sin had become a power within him hitherto unknown. At the crisis, when the face of the hearer indicated the alarm of his soul, as his sins stood in awful array before him, the minister arose to take his leave. "You are not going now, Mr. F——, and leave me in this distress —can't you give me some comfort?"

"No," said the minister, kindly, "I cannot; you have forbidden my doing so."

"What do you mean, sir?" said the distressed man.

"I mean that He, whose name you will not hear, and whose love is so deep, is the only One in heaven or in earth who can comfort and save you."

The vail dropped from the eyes of the blinded man; he listened eagerly to the way of salvation through a crucified Redeemer; joyfully accepted the terms of salvation; and lived seven months, testifying continually of God's great mercy in saving the chief of sinners.—Sel.

THE QUAIL.

[Translated from the Russian of Turgeueff.]

My father was an ardent sportsman, and whenever he was not engaged in farming, he took his gun, put on his game bag, whistled to old [dog] Treasure and set off to shoot partridges and quails.

He often took me with him—and this was my greatest pleasure. I tucked my trousers into the legs of my boots, slung a small flask across my shoulders, and fancied myself a sportsman! The perspiration poured from me in streams, the little pebbles made their way into my boots; but I was conscious of no weariness, and did not lag behind my father; and when the shot rang out and the bird fell, I jumped up and down where I stood and even screamed I was so delighted. The wounded bird struggled and beat its wings, first on the grass, then in Treasure's teeth—blood dripped from it; nevertheless I was delighted and felt no compassion. What would I not have given to be able to fire a gun myself and kill partridges and quails! But my father announced that I was not to have a gun until I was twelve years old; and then he would give me a single-barreled gun and allow me to shoot larks only.

Once on a time, father and I set out on a hunting expedition, just before St. Peter's Day. At that season the young partridges are still small. Father did not wish to shoot them, and so went among the small oak-shrubs, by the side of a rye-field, where quails were always to be found. It was hard to mow there—the grass had stood undisturbed for a long while. Such a quantity of flowers grew there —vetches and clover and blue-bells, forget-me-nots and wild pinks. When I went thither with my sisters or the maid, I always plucked whole armfuls of them; but when I went with father I plucked no flowers; I consider that occupation as beneath the dignity of a sportsman.

All at once Treasure made a point; my father shouted, "Fetch it!" and from beneath Treasure's very nose a quail leaped up and flew away. But she flew very oddly; she turned somersaults, twisted in a circle, and fell on the ground, exactly as though she were wounded, or as though her wing were broken. Treasure rushed after her at the full speed of his legs; he never did this when the bird flew as it should. Father could not even shoot, because he was afraid that he should hit the dog with the small shot. And, suddenly, I see that Treasure has overtaken her, and—slap! he has caught the quail, has brought it and given it to my father. My father took it and laid it in his palm, with its belly up. I ran to him.

"What is it?" I say. "Was she wounded?"

"No," replies my father; "she was not wounded; but she must have a nest of young ones near by, and she pretended to be wounded on purpose, so that the dog would think that he could catch her easily."

"What did she do that for?" I asked.

"In order to lead the dog away from her little ones. Afterward she would have flown well. Only, on this occasion, she miscalculated. She pretended too well, and Treasure caught her."

"So she is not wounded?" I inquired again.

"No; but she will not live. Treasure must have crushed her with his teeth."

I approached nearer to the quail. She lay motionless in my father's hand, with her little head hanging, and looking sideways at me with her little brown eyes. And, all at once, I felt so sorry for her! It seemed to me that she was gazing at me and thinking: "Why must I die? For what reason? Surely, I have done my duty; I have tried to save my little ones, to lead the dog as far away as possible—and I am lost! Poor I! Poor creature! This is unjust!—unjust!"

"Papa!" said I, "perhaps she will not die, and I tried to stroke the quail on the head. But my father said to me: "No; look here; she has just stretched out her legs, she is quivering all over, and her eyes are closing."

And so it was. As soon as she closed her eyes, I burst out crying.

"What's the matter with you?" asked my father, and began to laugh.

"I am sorry for her," said I. "She did her duty —and she got killed. That is unjust."

"She tried to be cunning," replied my father. "Only Treasure was more cunning that she was."

"Wicked Treasure," I said to myself; and even my father did not seem good to me on this occasion. What cunning was there about it? It was love for her little children, and not cunning. If she had been commanded to use craft to save her children—then Treasure ought not to have caught her.

My father was on the point of thrusting the quail into his game-bag, but I begged her from him, laid her carefully in both my palms, and breathed upon her—to see whether she would not recover. But she did not stir.

"It is useless, my dear fellow," said father; "you can't bring her back to life. See how her head swings."

I lifted her carefully by the beak; but as soon as I removed my hand, her head fell again.

"Are you still sorry for her?" asked my father.

"And who will feed her little ones?" I inquired in my turn.

My father gazed intently at me. "Don't trouble yourself about that," said he; "the male quail, their father, will feed them. And stand still," he added, "Treasure seems to be making another point. Can it be the nest? And the nest it is."

And sure enough, in the grass, a couple of paces from Treasure's muzzle, lay four tiny birds in a row; they were huddling close to each other, and stretching out their little necks, and all were breathing so rapidly and simultaneously that it seemed as though they were trembling. And they had already got their feathers—there was no down on them—only their little tails were still very short.

"Papa! Papa!" I cried, at the top of my voice; "call off Treasure, or he will kill them too."

My father called to Treasure, and, retiring a little to one side, he sat down to eat his lunch, under a bush. But I remained beside the nest, and did not want to eat any lunch. I took out my clean handkerchief and laid the quail on it.

"Look here, orphans, here is your mother! She sacrificed herself for you!"

The little birds breathed rapidly, as before, with the whole of their bodies. Then I went to my father.

"Will you give me this quail?" I asked him.

"If you like. But what do you want to do with it?"

"I want to bury it."

"Bury it?"

"Yes; beside her little nest. Give me your knife. I will dig her a grave."

My father was amazed.

"So that her little ones can visit the grave?" he asked.

"No," I replied; "but because—I want to. It will be so nice for her to lie there beside her nest!"

My father did not say a word. He took out his knife and gave it to me. I immediately excavated a little hollow; then I kissed the quail on her breast, and laid her in the hole, and covered her with earth. Then, with the same knife, I cut two small branches, stripped the bark from them, placed them in the form of a cross, bound them together with a blade of grass, and stuck them upright in the grave.

My father and I soon moved on; but I kept looking back. The cross was whitish and visible at a distance.

And that night I had a dream. I seemed to be in heaven; and what then? On a small cloud sits my dear little quail, only now she is all white, like that little cross! And around her head is a small gold halo; and it seems that it has been given to her to reward her for her sufferings for the sake of her children.

Five days later, my father and I returned again to the same spot. I found the grave and the cross, which had turned yellow, but had not fallen. Only the little nest was empty, there was no trace of the birds. My father assured me that the old bird, their father, had taken them away; and when an old quail flew out from under the bushes a few paces away, my father did not try to shoot him. And I said to myself: "Yes, papa is good?"

But this is the remarkable point about it: from that day forth my passion for hunting disappeared, and I never even thought of the time when my father would give me a gun. Nevertheless, when I grew up, I did begin to shoot also, but I never became a genuine sportsman. And that is what weaned me from it.

Once my comrade and I were hunting grouse. We found a young brood. The mother rose, we fired and hit her, but she did not fall, and flew away with her young grouse. I wanted to follow them, but my comrade said: "Better sit down here and lure them to us; they will all be here in a few minutes."

My comrade could whistle capitally, just as grouse do. We sat down, and he began to whistle. And, sure enough, first one young one answered the call, then another, and then we heard the mother cooing so tenderly, and very near us. I raised my head and saw her hastening, hastening to us, through the matted grass, and her bosom was all covered with blood. Of course her maternal heart had not been able to resist. And then I seemed such a wicked wretch to myself, I rose and clapped my hands. The grouse immediately flew away and the little ones became silent. My companion was angry; he thought me crazy. "You have spoiled all the sport," said he.

But from that day forth it became ever harder and harder for me to kill and to shed blood.—Independent.

HOW RELIGION HELPS CHILDREN.

Religion helps children to study better and do more faithful work. A little girl of twelve was telling in a simple way the evidence that she was a Christian. "I did not like to study, but to play. I was idle at school, and often missed my lessons. Now I try to learn every lesson well to please God. I was mischievous at school when the teachers were not looking at me, making fun for the children to look at. Now I wish to please God by behaving well, and keeping the school laws. I was selfish at home: didn't like to run errands, and was selfish when mother called me from play to help in work. Now it is a real joy to me to help mother in any way, and to show that I love her." Such religion is essential to the best interest and moral growth of youth, and will make life sunny and cheerful.—Christian at Work.

TEMPERANCE.

DYNAMITE FIENDS AT WORK.

Close upon the heels of the prosecution of liquor dealers and a gang of burglars at Union City, Erie county, Pa., came an attempt to assassinate the prosecuting attorney, Frank M. McClintock, and his wife and two children. At an early hour on the morning of May 2, some unknown person placed two gas-pipe dynamite bombs beside Mr. McClintock's residence—one under his bed-room window and the other under the front of the building. The one at the front part of the house exploded, but, owing to a defect in its construction, only demolished the house, not killing the inmates. The other bomb had been lighted and placed under the Counsellor's bedroom, and, but for the fact that the fuse only half burned, the McClintock family would have been blown into eternity. The narrow escape of the family and the enormity of the crime, taken with the use of the bombs at the fire a month ago, in which Dr. Biles was maimed for life and several other persons seriously injured, have stirred the people up to the lynching frame of mind. A vigilance committee, headed by an officer, worked all day on a clew, and at evening arrested Frank Kohler, a baker, upon suspicion.

A DAUGHTER'S APPEAL.

People in the court room at Parkersburg, W. Va., April 7, witnessed an exciting scene. The case was an application for a license on the part of a prominent liquor-dealer named Livis. Petitions pro and con, signed by hundreds of citizens, were presented to the court by able lawyers, as the case had excited general attention.

The court had listened to counsel, and the decision granting a license was almost rendered when the daughter of the applicant, a beautiful young woman, was informed of the fact. Rushing into the court room, she raised her hands and demanded an audience. The court granted it. Then the fair complainant sent up such an appeal that the license should not be granted to her father as is seldom heard. Couched in the most elegant language and burning with that eloquence which the "righteousness of her cause inspired," for twenty minutes she held the judges and a vast audience spell-bound. Counsel for the applicant, she said, had alleged that the petition against granting the license was signed principally by women. Rising to her full height, this young woman declared that "the fundamental law of the United States gave the right of petition to all, regardless of sex." Her eloquence caused the judges to reverse their decision and they refused the license.

Henry C. Spaulding, the inventor of "Spaulding's Glue," who was at one time worth $80,000, recently died in an alms-house. Liquor did it.

The Supreme Court in Nebraska has decided that a wife may recover from a saloon-keeper the money that her husband has squandered in his place.

There were ninety-nine breweries in Maine in 1883, and when the Supreme Court decision was rendered there were 14, but now there are none in operation.

It is estimated that $78,200,000 is spent every year for liquor in Pennsylvania, while the output in anthracite coal, their greatest industry, amounts to only $69,995,000.

The Brewers' Journal is authority for the statement that the output of the breweries in the United States in 1887 was 24,199,741 barrels, a net increase over 1886 of over 2,287,318 barrels.

The Detroit Central W. C. T. U. is sowing temperance seed broadcast by means of wall-pockets placed in manufactories, car-shops, waiting-rooms and ferry-boats; in fact, every place where a large number of men are employed or many people congregate.

One of the most recent ideas of temperance reformers in Australia is a large milk palace in one of the chief streets of Melbourne. Here in cold weather hot and spiced milk may be obtained; in the summer, frozen milk, iced soda and milk, and milk pure and simple are sold.

A sensation was caused at Sioux City, Iowa, on April 18, by the accidental discovery of a man's dead body in the Arensdorf Brewery. It proved to be Albert Hiltz, one of the watchmen who were on duty the night the Rev. Mr. Haddock was assassinated. By Hiltz side lay the revolver of John Arensdorf, the accused slayer of Haddock. Opinion is divided as to whether it is a case of murder or suicide.

Alexander Shaffer was killed on the street at East Liverpool, Ohio, May 8. William Boyd, who had been drinking all the evening, approached a companion and offered him a drink of liquor from a bottle. The man refused, and upon being pressed knocked the bottle from Boyd's hand to the ground, it being broken. Boyd was enraged, and picking up the fragments, threw them at his friend, the pieces missing him, and the large one striking Shaffer, who was an innocent spectator, in the neck, severing the jugular vein. He bled to death in a few minutes.

W. E. Watts, a well known coal dealer of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, committed suicide at his home by firing a thirty-eight calibre through his head, death resulting instantly. He failed in business two months ago as manager of the Pioneer Coal Company and has been drinking heavily since. On his return three weeks ago from a debauch at St. Paul he was attacked with delirium tremens, and while threatened with a third attack he committed self-murder. Watts was 33 years old, was married into a highly respectable family, and, but for drink, would have been very prosperous.

There's going to be a temple of temperance in Chicago—a big temple, twelve stories high with a tower and a great hall. When completed from the lowest foundation stone to the halo of the bronze Madonna that will stand on the highest point of the tower the building will cost $800,000. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars has already been subscribed by men whose names go for any amount you can name, and Mrs. Matilda B. Carse is in the East trying to find enough people to supply the other $250,000 that is necessary before work can begin. Miss Frances E. Willard left for New York the other day in the interest of the scheme. The hall, which will hold 2,500 people, will be called Willard Hall, after her, and the entire temple will be controlled by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is expected that the corner stone will be laid on May 1, 1889.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. C. W. Hiatt, pastor of High Street Congregational church, Columbus, O., writes to the Independent, concerning the union evangelistic meetings held in that city and conducted by Messrs. Munhall and Towner: "I estimate that one thousand(1,000)accessions were made to the churches of this city from those meetings."

—The Congregational Home Missionary Society has paid off during the year the debt of $75,000, replaced $50,000 borrowed from the Swett Exigency Fund, and met the expenditures of the year. The annual meeting will be held at Saratoga June 5th.

—The eighteenth annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church was held recently at Asbury Park,N. J. The income for the year amounts to $149,640,an increase of $20,000. The Society supports 135 missionaries besides helpers and Bible women.

—The American Baptist Home Mission Society received the past year $551,596, of which $145,603 was received by contributions, for general purposes; $41,579 for schools and buildings, and $39,629 for church extension. The receipts from legacies were $245,485.

—The Chicago Congregational Ministers' meeting last week adopted a strong protest against the interference with the work of Christian missionaries among the Indians by the Indian Department, and ask that the order requiring the English language to be used in all Indian schools be rescinded.

—The Southern Baptist convention met in annual session in Richmond, Va., Friday, in the First Baptist church. On the call of States it was found that 745 delegates were present.

—The women of the Presbyterian church gave last year $192,000 for mission work among the exceptional peoples in our own land. One of the most significant features of this work is that it has stimulated the regular work of the Board of Home Missions of the church instead of detracting therefrom, the income of the board having steadily increased each year since the women undertook their especial work.

—The American Sunday-school Union last year established 520 new Sunday-schools, of which over sixty have developed into churches already, and some seventy-five more of them have secured regular preaching services. A Chicago business man, who last year supported one of the missionaries, is so well pleased with his investment that he has agreed to support two of them this year.

—Mr. Moody's schools at Northfield and Mount Hermon lately received from the Christian women of Pittsburg a draft for $10,000 and a New York friend sent $5,000.

—The great Sunday-school and Missionary Convention of the Baptist church begins its sessions in Washington this week. It will be the second gathering of the kind held in Washington in the last half century. About 3,000 delegates are expected, who will come from every corner of the United States and Territories.

—Rev. W. R. Laird announced at prayer-meeting in the Reformed Presbyterian church, says a St. Johnsbury, Vt., paper, that he should probably accept the call he recently received from the congregation in New Castle,Pa. He began his work nine years ago and organized the congregation; and in 1882 a handsome and commodious church building was erected, on which no debt rests. The congregation has prospered abundantly, and has received 150 members during Mr. Laird's pastorate. He leaves it in excellent condition, materially and spiritually, and it will continue to do good work. There is general regret in the city as well as the congregation at the change.

—Mr. I. H. Lishniewsky has established a United Presbyterian mission to the Jews in the city of Pittsburg. The mission is in the central part of the city, and promises success. There are nearly 7,000 Jews in the city of Pittsburgh, and nothing whatever has as yet been done for their evangelization.

—The number of pilgrims to the Puri shrine in India this year was only about one-sixth of former years. The Doorga Puga festival was a complete failure. The Calcutta Englishman calls attention to a remarkable decline in the popularity of the Festival of Juggernaut at Orissa. This has been going on for some time, but is especially remarkable this year, as there is no longer a wild rush for the car in which the idol is dragged from the temple to a grange and back; on several occasions coolies have had to be hired to do this.

—Rev. B. Fay Mills and Prof. and Mrs. Towner went to Crawfordsville, Ind., on April 15th for a very few days. This is a beautiful little city of ten thousand inhabitants, and is the seat of Wabash college. The largest buildings were more than filled, and plans made for meetings for men only and for women only, so as to accommodate the throngs. Prof. Towner rejoins Dr. Munhall for the remainder of the season, and Mr. Mills goes to Chelsea, Mass., after a few days of rest.

—Dr. Munhall's work at Macon, Ga., was very wonderful and most gracious. The entire city was stirred, 125 members being received into the Mulberry Street church after he left, 40 into the First Presbyterian church, a goodly number into the First Baptist; and other churches have received many accessions. Many more will yet join. Dr. Munhall was only able to be in Macon three weeks, as he could not defer his work at St. Paul longer.

—Rev. C. H. Yatman will hold a series of union young people's meetings in Washington, D. C., the first ten days in June, by invitation of the superintendents of the various Sunday-schools. In Columbia, S. C., where he held meetings the past month, the students in the Columbia College and South Carolina University were reached by the score. Nearly every student in the female college was converted. During July and August he conducts his large daily young people's meeting and Christian workers' training class.

—The Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal church expended last year $163,271 in its work among the colored and white people. Twenty-two institutions, with 124 teachers and 4,506 students, were maintained among the colored people; and fifteen institutions, with eighty teachers and 1,945 pupils, among the whites received aid. During the twenty years of its life the society has expended $1,921,585, has taught about 100,000 students, and has acquired property in the South worth to-day not less than $1,000,000.

—Eleven years ago Daniel Molife, a heathen living in Natal, became converted. Two years after he went to Fourteen Streams, where he found the people without the Gospel. He began work among them, opening to them the Scriptures, teaching them to read, and finally organizing a church and erecting a house of worship. For six years he labored in this way without receiving the help of a missionary.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society has for the last two years supported a colporteur on the scene of the engineering operations being conducted by M. de Lesseps in the Panama Isthmus. During the first year he sold nearly £40 worth of Bibles, the last year his work was even more important, both Spaniards and Chinese being reached, besides the English-speaking population. There is a Sunday-school, and also a day-school at Panama

—Rev. R. S. McCloy, superintendent of Methodist Japanese missions, advocated a union of the five branches of that denomination in Japan before the weekly meeting of the local Methodist ministers in Chicago. He said the five branches were known as the Methodist Episcopal, Methodist church south, Canadian, Evangelical and Protestant Episcopal. The converts in the Flowery kingdom composed 33,000 Russo-Greeks, 28,000 Roman Catholics, and 29,000 Protestants.

—Arrangements for the national convention of the Societies of Christian Endeavor, which will be held in Chicago from the 5th to the 8th of July, are rapidly maturing. Dr. James H. Brooks of St. Louis will preach the sermon. Addresses will be given by Dr. John H. Barrows, Bishop Fallows, Rev. Arthur Mitchell, Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D.,Miss Frances E. Willard and many others. Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy) will read an original story, and Prof. William R. Harper will propose a scheme of regular Bible study for young people. Rates on railroads and at hotels will be placed at the lowest figures that are ever granted,and several thousand delegates are expected from all parts of the country.

—Under the direction of the Evangelical Alliance an attempt is to be made in Brooklyn to reach the people outside the churches. The city has been divided into thirteen groups of churches, each group containing fifteen or twenty churches and a population of some 50,000. Each church in a given group appoints one supervisor and ten visitors for each 100 members. Then, when the non-church-going families are discovered—and they may be ascertained by a special visitation or by the examination of the several church records—they are to be divided up in such a way that each visitor will have about ten families to look after, upon whom he or she is to call once a month.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX. Second Quarter.—May 27.

SUBJECT.—Peter's Denial.—Matt. 26.69-75.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wherefore, let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.—1 Cor. 10: 12.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

[From Dr. Pentecost's notes in Words and Weapons.]

In our last lesson we left our Lord and his disciples turning from the garden to meet Judas and the band of soldiers sent out to arrest him. While the saints had been sleeping the sinners had been working, and now they had come to take him.

We shall consider the incident assigned for our lesson to-day under three heads: Peter's denial, Peter's sin, Peter's repentance.

I. PETER'S DENIAL.—1. It was unpremeditated. Judas betrayed his Lord for a deliberate, set purpose. Peter, on the contrary, really loved his Lord and meant to be his true—yea, his truest—disciple; but he lacked the trained courage to meet the sudden emergency. The story of Peter's weakness should teach us to strengthen our characters at the weak point; for there the enemy will attack us, and at that point we will fall. 2. It is intelligible. We have only to look back over this chapter to see the steps which naturally and logically lead him up to the precipice over which he fell. (a) In verse 33 we find him boasting. This is always a sign of weakness. (b) In verse 35 we find him self-confident. Here lies the pointedness of the golden text for this lesson. (c) In verse 40 we find him asleep. A man who could sleep at such a time would be liable to be taken unawares by sudden temptation. (d) In verse 51 we find him fighting. A hasty temper which acts at the first sign of danger does not necessarily indicate a courageous man. (e) In verse 58 we find him "following afar off." If ever a friend—one ready "to die" for his Master—was needed to stand close by, this was the time. (f) Finally we find him taking his place in bad company. His place, since he had plucked up courage and entered at all, was with John (John 18: 15), as close by the Master as possible. How could he think of his own cold fingers and shivering body when his Master was being falsely accused and cruelly insulted? "Without the palace" and with the servants of his Master's enemies was the very place in which we might look for just such a fall as Peter had. 3. It was a total collapse. Had he denied once and then recovered himself, it would not have been so bad. Cranmer recanted his faith and saved himself from martyrdom; but as soon as he had time to reflect he denied his recantation and went cheerfully to the stake. Unless we instantly turn back upon a false step we are morally sure to take another, even though we loathe the whole matter.

II. PETER'S SIN.—Hitherto we have noticed only the outward fact of the denial and some of the steps which led to it. From any point of view his conduct was most sinful and inexcusable except to that divine grace of Christ which did excuse it and which led him back, by way of repentance, to the side of his Lord. 1. In view of his privileges. Peter was not only a disciple but an apostle, and one of the chosen three whom the Lord called and admitted into the closest relationship as witnesses of his greatest works. To be unfaithful in view of these high privileges made his sin more black. 2. In view of his confessions and professions. Not only had he been the first to confess Christ (Matt. 16: 16), but he had, a few hours before, been first and loudest in his profession of attachment and courage. Had he professed less, his sin would not have been so foul. 3 In view of the warning he had had from Christ. Our Lord had foreseen his weakness and had forewarned him that he would be the only disciple who would formally deny him. For some sins there seems to be partial excuse, but for others there is none. Peter had no excuse for his sin. 4. In view of its repetition. He might have retreated at the first, or second, or third step; although his sin served as a corrector, yet he would not be corrected. 5. In view of sin upon sin. At his first denial he told a lie by prevarication, affecting not to understand his questioners. At his second denial he told a deliberate lie, and perjured himself by swearing to it. At the third he repeated his denial and "began to curse and to swear," adding the sin of the vilest men to that of his apostasy. We cannot stand still on the slippery incline of transgression.

III. PETER'S REPENTANCE.—Just as Peter was uttering his third denial two events took place: The cock crew and our Lord passed out with the mocking rabble about him. Who can tell the unfathomable depths of love and sorrow in those divine human eyes as they looked upon Peter? Alas, how low he had fallen! Thank God—at this point he was to rise! 1. How Peter was led to repentance. Not alone did the Spirit of God work in his conscience; three messengers took him by the hand and led him back to his true self, away from his false and degraded self. (a) An incident. The cock crew. Chanticleer was unconscious of his ministry, but he preached a powerful sermon on that early morning. No doubt he awakened, from physical sleep, many about the high priest's palace; but he awakened this man who, in his deep sleep of sin, had been denying his Lord. (b) A memory. At the sound of the cock's crowing Peter remembered the words of his Lord, and they struck deep into his heart and conscience and still further brought him to himself. How often a mere memory, suddenly awakened, or a warning or a promise or a long forgotten word has led men to repentance! (c) A look. Luke records this: "And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter." That look melted the ice out of his soul and broke up the fountain of his love, which had been frozen by his denial. 2. The genuineness of his repentance. Now all else was forgotten. Flinging his mantle over his head, he, like Judas, rushed forth into the night. "Into the night," but not, as Judas, into the unsunned outer darkness of miserable self-condemnation, remorse and despair. "Into the night," but, as has been beautifully said, "to meet the morning dawn"—which morning dawn he found when he flung himself into the arms and on the broad, tender breast of mercy.

LODGE NOTES.

Bishop Fallows, who shared with Dr. Thomas the honors of Masonic Grand Chaplain, lectures for a woman's lodge in this city.

The fifty-sixth annual convention of the Alpha Delta Phi, the college secret society, opened May 3 in the Masonic temple, New York. The delegates present were from Yale, Harvard, Columbia, Manhattan, Hamilton University, Kenyon College, Brown University, Bowdoin, Dartmouth, Trinity, Wesleyan, Adelbert, Rochester, Williams and Amherst Colleges. The conference was held with closed doors. The society held a reception in the afternoon at their club rooms, and a meeting at night at the Metropolitan Opera-house at which addresses were made by President J. H. Choate on the "Alpha Delta Phi, the Embodiment of True American Spirit;" by George W. Curtis on "Ideals of the Alpha Delta Phi," and by Rev. Edward E Hale of Boston on "How to Serve the Commonwealth."

A Pittsburgh dispatch of the 21 inst., says of the Knight of Labor strike in the Carnegie Iron works: "Braddock workmen say that the blow at the order is such a direct one that none who would remain true to the Knights of Labor can avoid meeting and defeating it. The people of Braddock generally regard the great strike as virtually a thing of the past. At least 100 old men, including two of the conference committee, returned to work to day, and a large number are expected to go in to-morrow. The company has all the men necessary for a single turn in all departments, and on Monday the converting mill will be started double turn. The new rail was put in operation this afternoon and the first rails made since last December were turned out. The Pinkerton guards are still on duty, but everybody is in good humor and no further disorder is expected. The Knights of Labor, who are still out, are as aggressive as ever. They have inaugurated a boycott on Edgar Thomson steel. Circulars were sent out to all the amalgamated and Knights of Labor lodges requesting the members not to work steel from the Edgar Thomson mill."

Chicago Odd-fellows celebrated the sixty ninth anniversary of the founding, in Baltimore, April 26, 1819, of American Odd fellowship. Grand Master Lieut-Gov. John C Smith said: "This association stands as the representative of sixty-five lodges in this city, and 6,000 business men of this imperial center. In behalf of these 6 000 Odd fellows I welcome you to this anniversary. This association is also the representative of 10,000 organizations, with 600,000 members, and in behalf of the order universal I welcome you. When I first connected myself with this order, thirty-five years ago, it had less than 2 000 lodges. To the uninitiated it may seem strange that there should be so much organization, but the Odd-fellow understands it. When some great calamity befalls, then the organization is at its best. We of Chicago know what Odd fellowship did for us. It did more for the people of this city in the time of its distress than any other organization in the land It poured into the hands of the relief committee $130,000, rendering incalculable aid to the widowed, the orphaned and the homeless. Inside our body we now have the Patriarchs Militant, 25,000 strong"

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian Religion. 15 cents each: per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen. $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees or Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages: cloth, $1

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

An ounce of alumn will purify a whole hogshead of foul water.

When sauce boils from the side of the pan, the flour or corn-starch is done.

Always put a little soda in milk that is to be boiled, as an acid is formed by boiling.

Glaze the bottom crust of fruit-pies with the white of an egg, and they will not be soggy.

Keep large squares of pasteboard hung conveniently to slip under pots, kettles, stew dishes and spiders, whenever you set them down.

Too much importance cannot be given the matter of selecting the proper persons to do the milking. As much depends on the milker as on the cow.

Buttermilk is cheap food for the pigs, and they will always do well when buttermilk is made a portion of their food; but it should not be fed exclusively.

Straw matting should be washed with warm salt and water; wring out a soft cloth in it and apply quickly, not wetting the matting much, only enough to take out the dust and stains.

When the burners of kerosene lamps become clogged put them in a basin of hot water, containing washing soda, and let them boil for a few minutes. This will make them perfectly clean and almost as bright as new.

REMEDY FOR BOILS.—It is said on good authority that a slice of fresh tomato bound upon the afflicted part will prevent the formation of a boil. Renew the application frequently with fresh slices.

Copperas dissolved in boiling water will instantly cleanse iron sinks and drains. A few drops of spirits of turpentine mixed with stove blacking, lessens labor and adds polish. Kerosene in cooked starch (a teaspoonful to a quart) will prevent clothes sticking to the irons and gives a gloss; the scent evaporates in the drying. Powdered borax is good, if one decidedly objects to the smell of kerosene.

KEEPS OFF INSECTS.—An Ohio farmer says: "Pour a gallon of spirits of turpentine on a barrel of land plaster; spread over the field broadcast. This is better than lime or ashes, and may be applied to cabbage, vines and plants liable to be damaged by insects at any time when the plants are not wet."

TO CURE WARTS.—Place the thumb upon the wart, and press it against the bone. Move the wart back and forth upon the bone until the roots become irritated or sore, when the wart will disappear. I have had quite a number upon my hands, and have got rid of them in the above manner.—Cor. Scientific American.

KILLS BOTS.—Take turpentine, coal oil and vinegar in equal parts, shake well together, and rub on eggs of the bot fly, usually found on the legs of a horse. Two or three applications will kill the eggs, and the fly will not trouble the horse if a little of this liniament is applied under the throat and on the legs. Kill the eggs, and the bots will not kill your horse.—Farmers' Club Journal.

MASSACHUSETTS BROWN BREAD.—Three cups of unsifted rye and Indian meal, one-half cup molasses, one teaspoonful of salt, two of soda, one pint sour milk, one of water. If water is used alone, add a little sharp vinegar. To bake this bread, take two flaring lard pails of different size, put boiling water in the larger (not too much), set the smaller one, containing the bread, inside and cover tightly; bake five or six hours in a moderate oven—the longer, the better the bread, if the oven is not too hot. On the baking, more than anything else, depends the success of the bread.

SLEEP OFF A HEADACHE.—A scientific writer says: "Sleep, if taken at the right moment, will prevent a nervous headache. If the subjects of such headaches will watch the symptoms of its coming, they can notice that it begins with a feeling of weariness or heaviness. This is the time that a sleep of an hour, or even two, as nature guides, will effectually prevent the headache. If not taken just then it will be too late, for after the attack is fairly under way it is impossible to get sleep until far into the night, perhaps. It is so common in these days for doctors to forbid having their patients waked to take medicine, if they are asleep when the hour comes round, that the people have learned the lesson pretty well, and they generally know that sleep is better for the sick than medicine. But it is not well known that sleep is a wonderful preventive of disease—better than tonic regulators and stimulants."

That dainty lady tripping by,
How light her step, how bright her eye,
How fresh her cheek with healthful glow,
Like roses that in Maytime blow!
And yet few weeks have passed away
Since she was fading, day by day.
The doctor's skill could naught avail;
Weaker she grew, and thin and pale.
At last, while in a helpless frame,
One day she said, "There is a name
I've often seen—a remedy—
Perhaps 'twill help; I can but try."
And so, according to direction,
She took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription,
And every baleful symptom fled,
And she was raised as from the dead.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is becoming a universal favorite for restoring gray hair to its original color, and making hair grow thick and strong.

FOR MINISTERS
THE

The Christian's Secret
OF
A Happy Life.
28th THOUSAND.
Baptist Commendation.
"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.
Presbyterian Endorsement.
"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.
Methodist Word of Praise.
"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.
United Brethren's Approval.
"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.
Congregational Comment.
"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

By the Roman Catholic Church.
A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."
By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.
General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal hy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Facts Stated.
HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.
This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE SECRET ORDERS
OF
WESTERN AFRICA.
BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.
Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."
J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

FARM NOTES.

GRASS.—No grass, no cattle; no cattle, no manure; no manure, no crops.—Belgian Proverb.

A correspondent in Japan says that he has learned how to tie a horse in the streets. He saw a meek-looking steed hitched to a cart standing in front of a shop, and the horse stood, not because he was hitched to a post, but because his forelegs were tied together with a stout cord.

Kerosene is of great help in the proper care of poultry. Their nest-boxes should be oiled with it as a preventive of vermin. A few drops occasionally in the drinking water will hinder colds or roup, and when applied to scaly legs it effects a cure, while it is highly recommended as a cure for cholera.

At a recent convention of bee keepers, one speaker said: "I was in Dakota last season at a place where there were no bees. Pumpkin and squash vines were growing luxuriantly, but there were no pumpkins or squashes. I transferred some of the pollen, and in this way pumpkins and squashes were secured."

Any soil upon which water does not remain during winter, says a writer in Vick's Magazine, can be made to grow small fruits; in fact, any soil which will produce weeds will grow them; but as there are few soils which can produce two crops at the same time, it is better not to try to grow a crop of weeds and a crop of strawberries on the same soil together.

Oil, says the American Agriculturist, is fatal to every insect it touches, and sulphur is very offensive to them. A mixture of four ounces of lard and one of sulphur, well rubbed together, and with the addition of one ounce of kerosene oil and one drachm of creosote, will be found an excellent remedy against all sorts of insect vermin, while the liberal use of kerosene oil on poultry roosts will free the fowls of their tormentors.

Mr. A. W. Cheever makes in the New Elgland Farmer the wise suggestion that in purchasing a windmill for pumping water, sawing wood, or similar kind of farm work, it is not a good plan to select one of small size. A small mill may do what is wanted of it in a high wind, but with a light breeze it would be useless, while a larger size would do the desired work. Small wind-mills, small churns and small stoves are often the dearest, though costing less money than large sizes.

KILLING CANADA THISTLE.

If the soil is free from stumps, stones, or other nidus under which the roots can run, a complete summer fallow, for one season, the land to be carefully worked over every two weeks to prevent the pests making leaves, will generally eradicate them. If there are stumps or rocks in the field the soil around these must be thoroughly hoed over once in ten days.

ASPARAGUS BEETLE.—We are informed that the common asparagus beetle appeared the past summer in such vast numbers in New Jersey that the owners of some rather extensive plantations of this excellent vegetable have almost concluded to abandon its cultivation in consequence of the depredations of the insect named. It seems almost unaccountable that any cultivator of asparagus should not know how to quickly destroy this well-known pest, inasmuch as it has been published hundreds of times during the past twenty years. The remedy is dry caustic lime scattered over the plants in the morning when wet with dew. The larva of the asparagus beetle is a small, soft, naked, thin-skinned grub, and the least particle of lime coming in contact with this causes almost instant death. If the grubs are killed there will be no beetles.—American Agriculturist.

PERMANENT PASTURES.

In this country there are very few pastures that may properly be called permanent. Our extremely variable climate renders it more difficult to maintain them than in older countries. Notwithstanding the advantages of rotation, it is probable that we lose, rather than gain, by having so few permanent pastures. The grass seed is sown with grain, or with very imperfect preparation of the ground. This seems inevitable when such a rotation as ours is practiced; and it is natural that the ground should not have so much preparation when the pasture is to remain only two or three years as when it is to be permanent. This, too, probably explains why the seed is not more carefully selected. Too few varieties are sown; and as the pastures do not remain long enough for other varieties to establish themselves, as they would in time, our pastures are sadly lacking in variety. The greater the variety the more the yield and the better succession of growth.

Sowing every two or three years of course requires much more seed, and we get less grass than would be furnished by permanent pastures. A pasture rarely reaches its maximum production in less than five or six years. Up to that time, and even after, the turf will grow thicker, not only because of the spreading of the grasses sown, but by other grasses coming in. Permanent pastures contain four or more times as many grasses as we commonly sow. Moreover, some grasses do not become well established before three or four years. This is notably the case with Poa pratensis (Blue grass in Kentucky and the West, June grass in the East), one of our most valuable pasture grasses. It requires three years to become well set, and it is not at its best as a pasture grass before five or six years. This explains why it is not highly prized in some sections—it is not allowed to grow long enough. No matter how much seed is sown, one grass will not make as dense a sward as a variety. In old pastures there are rarely less than fifteen varieties.—American Agriculturist.

Rich and Poor,

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, by their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated; contain no calomel; are prompt, but mild, in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travelers and Tourists.

"I have derived great relief from Ayer's Pills. Five years ago I was taken so ill with that I was unable to do any work. I took three boxes of Ayer's Pills and was entirely cured. Since that time I am never without a box of these pills." Peter Christensen, Sherwood, Wis.

"Ayer's Pills have been in use in my family upwards of twenty years and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afford greater relief than any other medicine I ever tried." —T. F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for a number of years, and have never found anything equal to them for giving me an appetite and imparting energy and strength to the system. I always keep them in the house."—R. D. Jackson, Wilmington, Del.

"Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of severe from which I was long a sufferer. —Emma Keyes, Hubbardston, Mass.

Headache,

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again." —A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"Ayer's Pills are in general demand among our customers. Our sales of them exceed those of all other pills combined. We have never known them fail to give entire satisfaction."—Wright & Hannelly, San Diego, Texas.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate Committee on Education and Labor have ordered a favorable report on the House bill to prohibit the employment of alien labor on public works.

A fine life-size marble bust of Garabaldi, with a marble pedestal about four feet in height, has been received at the Capitol and placed in a hall of the upper lobby of the Senate. It was made in Italy and presented to the Senate by the Garibaldi Monument Association of this city.

It is reported by friends of Mr. Atkins, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that it is his present purpose to tender to the President his resignation, to take effect June 1. The President has been advised that it is the purpose of Mr. Atkins to resign.

The President and Mrs. Cleveland have taken possession of Oak View as a summer residence. They will take dinner, sleep nights, and eat breakfast in their country home and luncheon at the White House. And then, too, they will celebrate the second anniversary of their marriage day on June 2.

CHICAGO.

Five of the nine boodler gang who were convicted last year have been waiting in the county jail here, having appealed their case to the Supreme Court. The decision of that body was rendered last week against them, and all are now in Joliet penitentiary. Three had gone there before, and one, the Masonic McGarigle, was given the wink and told to run, and the officers sent after him have managed to keep out of his way.

COUNTRY.

The Mississippi flood had reached a dangerous point Friday, nearly as high at some points as in 1880, when the highest record was made The flood at Quincy, Ill., was miles wide. At Rock Island a stone bulkhead was swept away, causing some $100,000 damage, mostly to the government works in connection with the arsenal.

A fire broke out in Hot Springs, Arkansas, and in two hours upwards of $250,000 worth of property had been destroyed. The gas works, the railroad roundhouse, many stores, the gymnasium and between forty and fifty dwellings were laid waste.

Near Ithica Wednesday a freight on the Lehigh Valley road crashed into a passenger train which had been brought to a stop by the brakes getting out of gear, and telescoped two of the cars. Mrs. Case was severely injured, a gentleman from New York badly cut on the head and the engineer of the freight hurt on the head.

The survivors of Quantrell's guerrillas held a reunion Friday at Blue Springs, Mo., Mrs. Caroline Quantrell, mother of the infamous chief, being present. Tales of bloody murders and fiendish crimes were related, the men rivaling each other in their hideous stories. It was stated that Quantrell died in the Sisters' Hospital in Louisville, Ky., June 6, 1885.

At Bloomington, Ind., Friday, while two men were walking together, one becoming suddenly insane, seized the other and threw him from a cliff 125 feet high, killing him instantly.

The high license bill passed by the New York legislature was vetoed by Governor Hill.

The State temperance convention decided to nominate Prohibition candidates in every county in Georgia pledged to vote for statutory prohibition.

The Inter Ocean reports that a Negro who was mortally wounded in the riot at Sandy Ridge, Lowndes county, Ala., last Thursday and has since died, revealed an alleged plot, making a statement under oath in the presence of four witnesses. The Negroes, he said, appointed Friday night as the time for the massacre of the whites. Meetings were held and money raised to buy ammunition. Bob Robinson and Neal Maugurn were the leaders of the lodge of which it is claimed there are societies throughout the United States, formed, as they say, to avenge their fallen ones and to protect their color in the future, and they threatened Negroes who did not take part in the proposed killing with death; 48 Negroes engaged in the riot have been arrested, and the Sheriff's posse and State's troops seem to have put an end to the trouble for the present, but another outbreak is expected sooner or later.

FOREIGN.

The official news concerning the health of the Emperor is not trustworthy, as the doctors join in the concealment of the worst phases of his malady, and are making the most of any change for the best. Reliable information, however, leads to the hope that his life will be prolonged beyond the recent expectations. A favorable symptom is his increasing strength. He is now able, with some slight assistance, to take a turn up and down the room. His sleepfulness still continues. The Empress visits his bedside every morning and remains until the doctors assemble for consultation. A deaf mute living in Silesia has written to Dr Mackenzie, offering to sacrifice his larynx if it be possible to transfer it to the Emperor's throat. Dr. Mackenzie replied to the man that the loss of his life would neither help the Emperor nor benefit science.

Lord Salisbury's speech in the British House of Lords caused a sensation in political and military circles.. He attacked Gen. Lord Wolseley for the lack of preparation for war reported in England. The general opinion is that Lord Wolseley will resign after replying to the premier. Liberals are inclined to support Lord Wolseley's position, which is approved by all the military members of the House of Commons.

Boulanger, the troubler of France, is making a kind of triumphant tour. Speaking at a luncheon at Donai, he called the constitution a "ridiculous compromise between a pseudo monarchy and a false republic." At Lille a banquet was given in the General's honor, at which he and M. Laguerre made speeches. The demonstrations at Donai and Lille were enthusiastic.

The pope has charged Cardinal Monace to ascertain if the methods employed by the Irish National League embrace principles or regulations that are contrary to religious or moral laws.

INDIAN RESERVATION OPENED.

The Montana Reservation Bill having now become a law opens for settlement four millions acres rich farming lands in the well-known and long-coveted Milk River Valley, also large areas of excellent grazing country on the surrounding uplands. This portion of Montana, besides its agricultural resources being rich in minerals with an abundance of coal, is attracting wide spread attention as is shown by the number already settling there C. H. WARREN, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn., has issued, for free distribution, an excellent map, and a pamphlet with other information regarding this country. Low rates are now being made to Great Falls for those desiring to explore this new country.

GOING WEST.

The general interest that has been taken in the opening of the Montana Indian Reservations is shown by the large numbers of people who have already gone to Great Falls to investigate the mineral and agricultural resources of that wonderful country. The low excursion rate announced by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, makes the expense of exploring this country merely nominal, and will undoubtedly result in a still larger number following.

EVERY VOTER

should sign the League against lodgery. For convenience, the League plan is inserted on the thirteenth page of this number. Cut it out, circulate for signatures and return to W. I. Phillips at this office.

The late conference of the National Reform Association in Philadelphia resolved that it is the "imperative duty of political parties to declare themselves on the moral issues which are now before the nation, and that no party which refuses to do so deserves the suffrages of Christian citizens." That is most true. But political parties in general will spit tobacco all over such a resolution until the pulpits begin a crusade that shall stop church members from casting their votes against their Lord and King.

The decision of Judge Tuley of this city on the legitimacy of children born in slavery has been the subject of much comment in the papers. A letter from Judge A. J. Tourjee of Mayville, N. Y., author of "The Fool's Errand," reviews the decision very ably, and these criticisms have called out an explanitory letter from the offending judge, saying that he shall not regret if his judgment is reversed on appeal; or, if established, that it will be a matter of gratification if it shall lead to a proper discussion and removal of the alleged disability by Congressional enactment.

The fight against the saloon is assuming respectable proportions in Chicago. The effort of the churches two weeks since, to put the breathing holes of the pit at least 200 feet away from churches and schools, was for the time beaten. Next week a petition was unrolled before the Council bearing the names of thousands of the best citizens. The saloon fortress was still impregnable. But when a few days later the Roman Catholics began also to protest and call on their aldermen to resign, and priests read the same gentlemen a lecture, they began to surrender, and the once defeated ordinance is back again on its feet, and will probably carry. The saloon ring thus seems to have a master, before which it is humbled like a beast. The relation does not reflect honor upon either; but Chicago will be thankful if this small favor is granted.

The empire of Brazil has for years been striving to earn the recognition of enlightened states by the abolition of slavery. The old emperor set his heart upon the reform, and gradual abolition was adopted, and after years of waiting has just completed its work. The Brazilian parliament has approved the bill favored by the government completely abolishing the slave system, and it was sanctioned by the regent in the absence of the Emperor in Europe on the 13th inst. The act was received with extraordinary popular manifestations of rejoicing. President Cleveland sent his official congratulations, which the Brazilians may receive with a just pride, as they may chance to contemplate the immense cost of emancipation to the United States, while with them it has come without bloodshed and with the rejoicing of all parties.

Washington is given over to conventions this year. The National Baptist Convention is barely over. This week a National Bar Association gathers, and the corner-stone of the great Catholic university will be laid in the presence of an immense number of persons, 10,000 invitations having been issued. On the same day the Hebrews will open a convention in the city. The Knights of the Golden Eagle have also arranged for a street performance. The object of the lawyers' convention is to form a National Association for the purpose of harmonizing certain matters of law in the different States. Trouble and inconvenience is caused by different laws, for instance, on marriage and divorce, descent of real estate, distribution of personal property, etc. By the formation of this association it is hoped that many of these difficulties can be obviated. But with all due respect to the lawyers, we would prefer that they turn over some of these questions to the ministers now meeting in Washington, Philadelphia and New York; leave others to a committee of solid farmers, and postpone their organization until after the Republicans elect a President.

Our Northern breezes are perfumed with blossoms and bear from State to State the roar of political conventions. State and county meetings absorb the time and money of the people, so that if the churches do not cry out, the business men do. Of the State conventions held by the old parties, the unanimity of the Illinois Republicans for Gresham has given great impetus to the popular movement behind that gentleman. It was expected in New York that something would be done for Mr. Cleveland, but not many anticipated that Governor Hill would be shelved so high—and that just after his friendly act for the liquor dealers in vetoing the Crosby license bill. The fact that the convention needed 2,800 bottles of champagne to secure harmony shows how serious is the break between Governor and President. Belva Lockwood's meeting was held in Mustatine, Iowa, this year, and the Equal Rights party did its work by letter, thus saving the neucleus of a fund for campaign purposes. The Union Labor party at Cincinnati met choppy seas. It refused to touch the whisky question, though next to the lodge that is nearest to labor interests, and rolled over the old lie about the prevalence of general discontent. They could not unite with Dr. McGlynn, whose friends nominated a Chicago druggist. An Industrial party has also nominated candidates, and the Chicago Journal asks when the anti-secret society people are to be heard from. They are being heard from, Gov. Shuman—thanks to the Journal for not forgetting us—and hope to be not heard in vain.

PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD of Wheaton College, aided by others, contemplates holding Gospel meetings with churches in that neighborhood during the approaching summer, the meetings to hold from Tuesday over the next Sabbath. The first church whose pastor laid the subject before them voted unanimously for such a meeting. Thorough visitation is proposed from house to house, also meetings for testimony and communion in the body and blood of Christ.

The series of revivals which began with the descent of the Holy Ghost and the preaching of Peter at Pentecost spread over the known world in thirty short years. The heathen historian, Tacitus, says, "This deadly superstition has not only infected our large cities but our remote country villages." The converts in these revivals were counted by thousands. Myriads of false altars vanished. The evil spirits which inhabited the shrines and infested the worshipers fled, and the Holy Spirit and those "ministering spirits" which "minister to the heirs of salvation" took their places, and Christendom is the consequence.

SHAMS.

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

Shams are man-made hypocrisies. God, who made all things, never made a sham. He could not do it. We respect anything genuine, though ever so small and insignificant in itself. Satan has and runs the most immense shammery in the universe. It turns out every known thing but one, all the way from deities to donkies.

To illustrate: our world has the G. A. R. The subjects of this sham organization were members of the Grand Army of the Republic when we had such an army, twenty-five years ago. A grand army it was, and made of material of which a nation may well be proud. But now there is no such army, and no need of such an army. While the G. A. R. takes in—yes, "takes in"—the masses of our noble men it knocks off fifty per cent from real manhood and adds nothing to the soldier. Was not the United States army dismissed from service, "mustered out," twenty-three years ago? What is this G. A. R.? As the real G. A. R., it does not exist. The only redemption it has from being deception and fraud is in its Masonic cross-breeding. Herein it is no sham, but an "ego," an identity.

All this is alleged with profoundest love and gratitude to our noble soldiers who, under God, saved this nation. I feel the more intense disgust for this sham because it splashed Masonic mud on such grand men.

Now we are on the question of shams, let us have another example. From my youth up I have felt a sort of reverence for the aborigines of this wonderful country. "Red man of the forest!" Who is he, and whence came he? The real Indian is a subject of interest for the erudite mind. But I submit to common sense whether sham "Red Men" are not a shame as well as a humbug. Imagine full grown men with costume, toggery and feathers playing "we are Indians!" Well might they blush crimson, but even that is a painted sham. Imagine further a preacher leading the ceremonies! He is the worthy chaplain! What a splendid feather! Does he address the "Great Spirit?" We trow not. But suppose he does, in "lip service." Does he, the Great Spirit, hear the chaplain of shams?

Shams must needs have only sham devotions. Is not this self-evident? It is a hard saying, but the judgment day will establish it. "God is not mocked" with shams. Sow them and you reap the same.

In the small village in Wayne county where the Christian character of Eld. Geo. W. Howe was ruthlessly assassinated there are, I am told, too many lodge nights to admit of much else than "will worships." Lo! here comes the feathered (tattooed?) chaplain of the Red Men—a Baptist minister, too! Save in the matter of lodgery alone he is a man of irreproachable record, I think, and surely had no part in sacrificing our dear brother Howe on the Masonic altar. May God commission some Ananias and take off the scales from his eyes. "Let all the people say Amen."

Fidelity to truth and to God force us to say that lodgery is a counterfeit in all its details. To begin with, its heart and being is a sham. It is a counterfeit religion. "There are but two religions in the world, the false and the true;" and as that is not, cannot be the true, it is the false. Like all others, it apes at all virtues and fails of all by its own showing. By its very touch it mutilates and distorts every single moral principle it assumes,and in some way it assumes them all. Who would think of committing "Fidelity, Love and Truth" to the care of I. O. O. F.s? No one who knows the principles and also the character of that order. What do they mean by these terms; and what do they know of them? About as much as the "three links"many wear on their jackets. Some exceptions may exist. Then there are the Scripture terms,"Faith,Hope and Charity," claimed alike by Masons and by Good Templars. Would any one think of confiding these celestial principles to such orders for practical demonstration or safe-keeping? Every principle of their being antagonizes this trinity of virtues. How much "faith, hope and charity,"as God means them, is there in the secrecy and machinery of these clans? God knows there is not any. From center to circumference, from its birth to its dotage, the system of lodgery is a most stupendous deception. There is no virtue which it does not ape. It is the ne plus ultra of patriotism, of chastity, of gallantry and of temperance. It defends the nation in its G. A. R; defends the church and the Christian religion in its Knight Templars; protects female virtue and innocence,—and what not? It supercedes Christ and sends to "the grand lodge above" all the minions of the lodge who are faithful to the orders. It shams everything from the lowest interest of earth to the highest of eternity. It shams God, religion, regeneration, res urrection and heaven.

TANGLED TALK.

In my pastoral work I have found that I but seldom succeed in leading a Christless man out of a lodge. In fact, we have no common basis, no equal platform, either for argument or appeal. Naturally, I stand upon the "Word." All my reasons for relinquishment and separation are brought from it. As an ex-Mason put it the other day to me, "Why, sir, before I found Christ Masonry was the best thing I had, for I did not understand the Bible. It was my religion. But, thank God, I have found the real and true, and have discarded the false and spurious." Only when the sovereignty of the "Truth" is acknowledged can the "Sword" be wielded on this subject.

An evangelist, of great force, full of the truth, and fearless to proclaim it, has recently visited a village near me. From all I can see he turns many sinners both from himself and from the Word by preaching on this subject before his hearers are ready for it. Not knowing the Lord of life, nor holding him as precious, they cleave to the best thing they know of, Masonry, etc.

Here in the Territory Masonry is eminently respectable. Many of its adherents are Christians; some are ministers. It is thus rendered most specious. And at the last Grand Lodge meeting the whole concern was given a white-washing, which has rendered it still more dangerous and plausible. A strong temperance platform was adopted amid a great amount of enthusiasm. The sepulchre so fair, so whited, so brilliant on the outside, is full of dead men's bones within. Masonry is Christless, and thus lifeless. It is powerless to enforce morality. I have not seen it yet attempt this. But every member of the order guilty of an act of drunkenness was to be dealt with by his lodge. Since then I have seen several reeling, several notorious drinkers, but their lodge has failed to utter a word of protest. So hollow and false is this whole thing that near me are two or three Masons who openly and constantly ridicule the religion of Jesus. They are infidels.

There is another noticeable thing about Masons. It is their perpetual boast that Masonry is built upon the Bible. How strange, if true, this is, you may know when I tell you it is a rare thing to see Masons in my church.

Part of my time, thought, work and prayer is given to the Negroes. Recently I heard a very interesting man, now dead, and one who incidentally recalls Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom." His master, a Choctaw citizen, is yet alive and lives not very far from here. "Ole Uncle Isaac" was a very pious Christian; his soul all aglow for God and the salvation of his fellow slaves. It was his custom to go off on Sabbaths to preach in the surrounding settlements. After awhile his master, hearing of it, forbade him, telling him at the same time that if he transgressed this order he would be whipped. Sabbath came, and Isaac went off and preached as usual. On Monday morning, before the hands were sent out to the field, the master called up Isaac and asked him as to where he spent the previous day. Isaac told him that he had to go and preach, whereupon the old man was fastened to a tree and given a severe whipping. This Sabbath preaching and Monday whipping went on for some time, until at length the master fell ill, and before him was the prospect of death. In his extremity, unable to find a white minister, he sent for Uncle Isaac, who coming, very lovingly and fervently prayed for his recovery. The master got well; and on the following Saturday, when the hands had all come in from the field, he called Isaac and said, pointing, "See that black mule?" "Yes, massa." "Well, to-morrow you take that mule and go preaching, and every Sunday you want to." So Isaac preached as long as he lived, and is still preaching, for "he being dead yet speaketh" through his Christian fortitude, holy living, and godly conversation. But time is up and room is occupied, so no more just now from

Lehigh, Ind. Ter. "ORION."

WHAT HAS THE LODGE DONE FOR TEMPERANCE?

A discussion of this question has been lately occupying much space in the daily press of Galesburg, Ill., conducted by the Good Templars on one side, and by Mr.E. B. Chambers, an old and respected resident of that city, now removed to Omaha,on the other. That truth and righteousness have an able defender in Mr. Chambers appears in the following from the Republican Register of the 23d ult. Articles from both sides have since appeared:

Perhaps a discussion was necessary to have the fact clearly brought out that their organization does not antagonize the church. If there was any doubt about it a discussion might the most readily evolve the fact. And then by proclaiming it to the world we may all know it is so. But then, how strange that "with the blessed truths of the Gospel, this organization teaches its members to learn at the feet of the Son of God the lessons of Faith, Hope and Charity," it is necessary by discussion to prove it and proclaim it to the public. If such are its methods, and yet such its necessity, why need we be surprised to learn by your next issue that the American Bible Society has been able to clearly show the world that it, too, does not antagonize the church. When "the children" are brought into the lodge one good text to have them "learn at the feet of the Son of God" would be one of his own utterances: "I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing." And another which has the divine sanction would be: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." And yet another: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what communion hath light with darkness?" Yet if by teaching them they would—as I fear they might—produce rebellion in the organization, why, then, I can see no safety for it, except to adopt lodge methods and suppress them. And, gentlemen of the order, as long as both your organization exists in its present form, and these three stems continue to grow in the Bible and humanity feeds upon their fruit, just so long will the temperance forces be divided and weakened in their work, and hindered in their desired results.

Already has this would-be handmaiden of the church put back the temperance reform, if we may credit the statements of those most capable of judging of its effects upon the cause it so loudly professes to champion. Rev. Dr. John Marsh, the late venerable secretary of the American Temperance Union, said, such, in his opinion, had been the effect of organizing the secret temperance societies. We all know the value of our Missionary Secretaries' opinion upon causes that would help or hinder in mission work, because their position and relation to the work enables them to judge more comprehensively and, therefore, more accurately than those out of their position and relation. As the greater portion of Dr. Marsh's public life, at the center and head of the temperance movement in the United States, gave him a point of observation such as no other person had, the value of his opinion also becomes readily apparent. Agreeing with him fully, Dr. Jewitt, another most competent judge, says that the secret temperance societies, by dividing the temperance forces, weakened their combined efforts and put back the temperance reform for twenty-five years. Dr. Jewitt was a field-marshal on duty, a veritable Lannes in the temperance cause; and his opinion is worthy the respect due a general who has fought over the ground and knows what he is talking about. Any one with an average memory, who was old enough to remember, knows that the onward sweep of the Washingtonian movement was stayed at the time these lodges came into existence. John B. Gough, whose portrait on the wall of the lodge room in Galesburg might lead some to think he was their patron saint, said he never felt so humiliated before in his life as when at a secret temperance society's parade he was induced to put on their regalia, and the feeling became so intolerable that, to use his own words, "while the procession was moving I snatched off the yoke, rammed it under the seat of my carriage, and never after had anything to do with the organization." Evidently he thought it was not helping the reform so near to his heart, but rather menaced the cause it professed to help. If the testimony of such men about the relation of these societies to the cause of temperance is worth anything, what, then, must we think of their relation to the church?

Would it not be strange, notwithstanding the presence of many good people in these temperance organizations, if we should be increasingly able to note outcropping the tendencies and innovations which Dr. Patton of Washington was able to distinguish; and of which, speaking of the lodge in general, he says: "However secret societies may differ among themselves, yet they are all anti-Republican in their tendencies, and are all leading to the same results, viz., a substitution of worldly and selfish innovations for moral and religious influences, and, ultimately, to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity." In illustration Mr. Moody says he came very nearly joining the Good Templars, but learning that the lodge he expected to join was getting up a ball, he determined to not become "unequally yoked" with it. He also says that when one of their lodges, in a body, attended a meeting of his in England their conduct so disgusted him that when they left he felt as if he was rid of a cage of unclean birds. Mr. Moody is somewhat capable of judging what worldly innovations are, and what antagonizes and what helps the church. As farther showing the trend of this particular organization, General Consul C. A. Berg of Stockholm, a renowned champion for temperance, has recently withdrawn from the Good Templars, as he cannot pray for an order which, claiming a good purpose,yet denies the divine truth. Listen to whatMr. Wrawrinsky, the head chief of the Swedish branch of the order, says: "If the God of the religious people is the true God, then he is a God-denier." Seeing this drift, the Swedish newspapers, formerly supporting the order, now declare that secretism is only a bait on the hook to entice plain people, and ask, "What is gained if one is turned from alcoholism only to take a ten-fold worse poison?" Owen Lovejoy thought such temperance societies were not decoy ducks for the church, but did think they were for Freemasons and Odd-fellows. Such testimony perhaps shows the necessity, if it does not the wisdom, of the lodge in discussing its own character and its relation to the church before proclaiming them to the world. And it also suggests the thought —of the correctness of which we are quite sure— that many of those now active and controlling in the temperance lodges are also members of other secret fraternities, as, for instance, the Masonic and the Odd-fellow. Jonathan Blanchard predicted, when these temperance lodges first appeared in Galesburg, they would prove forerunners of Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges. Many scouted the idea as preposterous, but most of us who were there at the time know how much sooner than we expected the prediction became an accomplished fact.

If assistance to the church and the good of the temperance cause is really the object of the Good Templars, then why not drop the password and the secrecy, and adopt a method more in accord with Christ's? Miss Willard says they amount to but little, and she would be glad to see them done away I presume most of the Good Templars would say they agree with her. I have heard many of them say as much. But will they do it? They show no indication of it, and if they do not, have we not a right to believe they love their secrecy and the privileges and opportunities the secret conclave affords more than they do the cause they profess to espouse? Another Presidential election is just at hand, and the chances the lodge will give for managing will not be readily abandoned by selfish wire-pullers. Their recent "great" chief Finch so cherished the secret tie that when President Charles A. Blanchard, at the request of representative members of both the Prohibition and American parties at their last Presidental nominating convention, presented and explained, but did not advocate, the American platform, he hissed the latter when he mentioned and commenced to explain the anti-secrecy plank, and created such a disturbance in the convention that Mr. Blanchard was compelled to sit down without finishing his remarks. To many this looked very much as if he cared more for his Good Templarism than he did for either prohibition or free speech. And then, when only a few short months before his death, he, in behalf of the lodge, assailed with blackguardism some ministers of the Gospel "of the Son of God," it seemed just as evident he cared more for secretism than he did for the church. Thus he taught the lessons of faith, hope and charity! Faith, hope and charity, forsooth! Liberty, equality, fraternity! shouted Robespierre and his compatriots! Such faith is duress; such hope, ostracism; and such charity, boycott.

If your methods of advancing a good cause and redeeming the world are superior to Christ's—who, by the way, is supposed to be the Christian's pattern—why not induce our Galesburg pastors to tyle their church doors, place at them both an outside and an inside sentinel, permit none to pass its portals except those who can give the password and the grip, and in their foresworn, oath-bound seclusion initiate only such of their flocks into those mysteries and processes of religion and sobriety, which will eventually land them in the banqueting hall of the grand lodge above, and thus spread the Saviour's kingdom. How much sooner do you suppose you would in this way bring the world to Christ than by his own chosen, open, and not secret, method when upon earth? When our Galesburg churches have so burlesqued Christianity and the cause of temperance, when they have thus dishonored the wisdom of Christ, when by these methods, if not by their traditions, they have made void the words of the Son of God, then, and not till then, let it be truly said of the church that it does not antagonize Good Templarism. When that day has come, and because of it, let the church then vote itself a good character, to "justify it before men," even though some things which are "highly esteemed among men," do happen to be "abomination in the sight of God."

Whether each are responsible or not for the other's appearance in Galesburg, it is nevertheless a fact that the lodge and the retailing of intoxicating liquors as a beverage came there at about the same time, and the first lodge was a temperance lodge. Previously Galesburg had been free from the lodge and from liquor. And now, while the strife is going on between the saloon and the temperance forces, with how much terror do your lodges inspire the saloons in Galesburg? They understand, whether you do or not, that your work is "unfruitful," and smile while you are indulging yourselves in the lodge with "some mighty fine work," as a Temple of Honor man expressed it to me recently, and dividing the temperance forces. You will never have the confidence of temperance people outside the lodge, such as you would have if there was no lodge. However you may talk or expostulate or vote yourselves a good character, the feeling is as natural as it is in a mirror for face to answer to face. President Fairchild, of Oberlin, says: "The tendency to organize in secret bodies, political, social, religious and literary seems to indicate distrust of the ordinary institutions of society, and will surely generate the distrust from which it seems to spring. The very idea of a secret combination implies a barbarous age, or a state of social anarchy in which such arrangements are necessary for safety. There is no place for it in a Christian civilization." The lodge had not the confidence of the Prohibition voters as a body at the last Presidential election, and it was uncertain and wavering in its course, although it finally decided, as an organization, I think, to not take upon itself political character and work. To what extent the lodge is responsible for the "unfruitful" results at the last city election in Galesburg, God knows. But this much man knows, that the combined results of all your years of lodge work and effort never created a tithe of the alarm and outcry throughout all the ranks of the liquor dealers that the Prohibition vote did at the last Presidential election.

Is it not time to call a halt to these secret organizations and heed the words of Disraeli, who says: "Secret societies are hurrying the civil governments of the world to the brink of a precipice over which law and order will ultimately fall and perish together?"

And also those of Wendell Phillips, who remarks of secret societies: "They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, they should not be allowed to exist."

And yet again those of a recent writer who asks: "Is it not a marvel that our colleges, seminaries and churches can see the lodge organizations extending downward from the Jesuits, Masons and Odd-fellows through every occupation and grade of society until it seeks to control the whole country, and at the same time make no protest."

NATIONAL SIN THE CAUSE OF NATIONAL TROUBLE.

A DISCOURSE BY REV. WM. WISHART, D. D.

"And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord."—1 Kings 18:18.

Our text refers not to personal, but to national trouble—to those terrible judgments and calamities which at that time were inflicted on Israel as a nation. It is not every sin in a nation that is properly the cause of national trouble, or that will incur the infliction of national judgments; because it is not every sin in a nation that is properly a sin of the nation as such. We shall then:

I. Submit a few remarks in regard to national sin.

1. We remark in general, that nations as such are subject to the moral government of God—that his law takes cognizance of their conduct, and that he holds them accountable when they violate his will, whether as made known by the light of nature or of revelation. Some men seem unable to understand this doctrine; they cannot see that there is a national accountability to God, separate and distinct from the accountability of the individual persons of whom the nation is composed. Others, whose intelligence would lead us to expect better things of them, obstinately deny this doctrine; and how many ignore it and practically disregard it! How many will sterely reprobate and denounce an act of injustice or wickedness in an individual, while they will regard the same act as morally indifferent or even praiseworthy in a nation; yea, and in their civil capacity will practically endorse it and promote it! They seem to suppose that the guilt of a wicked act is lost amidst the multiplicity of agencies and influences that have contributed to the production of it, when performed by a nation, or that the agreement of many in an act of rebellion against God takes away the moral obliquity of the act. And such persons usually regard national adversity and national overthrow as the result of bad fortune or of the chances of war, but not as divine judgments or retributions. Such notions are a sad evidence of that natural atheism of the human heart which would banish God from the world which he has made, or which proceeds upon the theory that if the world was not made by chance, it is at least governed by chance.

But let us look at this subject for a moment in the light of reason and of divine revelation. It is evident that nations as well as the individual persons of whom they are composed are creatures of God. They are not mere voluntary associations or financial firms, that may be constituted and dissolved at pleasure, but divine creations formed and preserved in the providence of God for moral and religious as well as secular purposes. God is the author of national as well as personal existence. He has not only created the inhabitants of the various countries and given their lands, and providentially prescribed their territorial boundaries, but through the necessities and dependencies of that social nature which he has given them, he has assimilated and molded them into great social bodies or organisms, called nations. These organisms live through successive generations, while the individuals of whom they are composed, die. Moreover, they are endowed with intelligence and wisdom, with a conscience or moral judgment, and with the power of volition, for there is a national intelligence, a national conscience and a national will, which are all exercised and exhibited in the general conduct of nations. These nations also exercise powers and put forth acts that are distinctively national; acts for which the nations themselves as such can alone be responsible. They form treaties, declare war, enact laws, impose taxes, etc., in all of which they are certainly subject to the moral government of that God who created them, and may do right or may do wrong; may obey the voice of God or may disobey it. And hence nations as such must be responsible to God for the moral rectitude of such acts.

This national accountability is recognized by the nations in their intercourse with one another. All international laws as well as leagues and compacts are founded upon and suppose the moral personality and responsibility of nations. They are binding on the nations as such and not on the individuals of whom they are composed. One nation, for example, will demand of another the fulfillment of a compact hundreds of years after it was formed and after the inhabitants of both nations have passed away; for though the inhabitants die, yet the nations still live and hold one another responsible for their national acts. And there are few persons so ignorant or destitute of patriotism as not to maintain that their own nation has rights, and that others are responsible for the wrongs they may commit against it. But if nations are thus amenable to one another are they not also amenable to that God who has created them and who bestows upon them all their power and greatness?

But what is the testimony of Scripture on this subject? It is perfectly obvious from the Scriptures that God takes cognizance of the character and conduct of nations as such, and that he pronounces them righteous or wicked according as they are conformed or not conformed to his revealed will. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."—Prov. 14:34. "Ah! sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity."—Isa. 1:4. God says of the Assyrian, "I will send against him a hypocritical nation."—Isa. 10:6. He charged the Jewish nation with the sin of robbery: "Ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."—Mal. 3:4. He also promises national prosperity and stability as the result of national righteousness, but threatens national adversity and ruin as the result of national wickedness: "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom to pluck up and to pull down and to destroy it, if that nation against whom I have pronounced turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom to build and to plant it, if it do evil in my sight that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them."—Jer. 18:7-10. Here then is the decree of heaven concerning nations: That nation which obeys the voice of God shall enjoy national salvation, while that nation which disobeys his voice shall endure national damnation. All history shows that this has ever been the case, and we know from the relation that God sustains to his creatures that it ever shall be. Infidelity may deny and profanity may mock, but they cannot change established facts, nor prevent the results which necessarily flow from moral causes.

But now we come to the question, What sins are national? or when is sin of such a character as to involve a nation in guilt, and so bring trouble upon it? And in reply we remark:

2. That any open or public violation of the moral law, when committed or practiced with impunity, will render a nation guilty. This law was written upon the heart of man in his first creation, and after being effaced by the fall was again clearly revealed by Jesus Christ upon Mount Sinai. It is of universal and perpetual obligation; for it is founded upon those immutable relations which men sustain to their Creator and to one another; and it is so eminently adapted to the nature of man as a rational and social being that its observance not only tends to the glory of God but also to the happiness and well-being of human society, whilst its violation always has the opposite tendency. Now, God has ordained civil government for the vindication of this law among men. It is "for the punishment of evil doers and for the praise of them that do well."—1 Peter 2:14. And the law of God is certainly the rule by which well-doing and evil-doing are to be determined. The magistrate is "a minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil," that is, upon him that openly violates God's law, and it is in this way that he is a minister of God for good to human society. See Rom. 13:4. Hence, when God's law is openly violated in a nation, and the violation of it is not punished by the government that represents the nation, and through which the nation wills and acts, God holds not only the actual violator of his law accountable, but the nation as well. The non-punishment of public crime in a nation implies such a consent to it or connivance at it on the part of the nation as makes the nation itself a partaker of it. We have a clear illustration of this principle in the reason assigned by Moses for the execution of capital punishment upon the murderer: "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of the murderer which is guilty of death .... for blood it defileth the land, and the land can not be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it."—Num. 35:31-33. The meaning of this evidently is that the crime of murder renders the inhabitants of a land or a nation guilty, and there can be no expiation or pardon for a land or nation in which it is committed, except by taking the life of the murderer. When a nation will not vindicate the law and moral government of God by punishing the atrocious crime of murder, God will hold that nation accountable, and will in due time vindicate his own law by inflicting judgments upon the nation itself. And when he does this he is said "to make inquisition for blood" as in Psalm 9:12, and the earth is said to disclose her blood and no more to cover her slain, as in Isaiah 26:21.

But this principle is not to be applied merely to the crime of murder, but also to any other public or gross violation of the law of God. And it is a great principle of the divine government, which is applicable to all nations at all times. Open immorality, when practiced with impunity, will render not only the person committing it, but also the community or nation in which it is committed, guilty, or, in the language of Scripture, "will defile a land." It was not merely murder, but idolatry, incest, adultery and other moral impurities, that rendered the nations of Canaan guilty, so that God in his righteous judgment drove them out before the children of Israel. It was with reference to these open immoralities, which had been practiced with impunity, that God speaks to his people when he says, "Defile not yourselves in any of these things, for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you. And the land is defiled, therefore do I visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants."—Lev. 19:24, 25.

Nor should we think strange of this principle. It is recognized and acted upon by nations in their intercourse with one another. Let a citizen of one nation invade the territory and violate the laws of another, will not the latter nation demand that he be punished, and regard and treat the former nation as an accomplice in the crime if it should protect and not punish the criminal? On this subject Blackstone says: "It is incumbent upon the nation injured first to demand satisfaction and justice to be done on the offender by the state to which he belongs, and if that be refused or neglected the sovereign then avows himself an accomplice or abettor of his subject's crime and draws upon his community the calamities of foreign war." Now, open immorality is an invasion of the empire of Jehovah, a revolt against the law and authority of the Most High, and has he no rights which nations as such are bound to respect? Nay, that nation which will not vindicate the moral government of God by punishing the open and gross violations of his law, makes itself an accomplice in sin and will be held responsible.

3. But if open immorality when practiced with impunity involves a nation in sin, it is still more eminently the case when this immorality becomes predominant or universal; when it is practiced by the great majority of a nation and there are none or comparatively few who oppose it. When God sent the flood upon the world of the ungodly, it was when "all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth."—Gen. 6:12. And when he overthrew the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, it was when ten righteous persons could not be found therein, Gen. 18:32. And so at the time when the words of our text were first spoken iniquity was predominant in the nation of Israel, and the number of those who opposed the prevailing sin of idolatry was so small and they were so destitute of power or influence that they were induced either to conceal themselves or their sentiments and the prophet supposed that he was left alone as the only follower of the true God. "The children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars and slain thy prophets with the edge of the sword, and I, even I only, am left and they seek my life to take it away." —1 Kings 19:10. Hence God was pouring out his judgments upon the land. And when sin becomes universal in a nation, when it pervades and permeates every part of the body politic; then it is not only in the highest sense national, and renders the nation guilty before God, but it has evidently run to its full height, and renders the nation ripe for judgment. God indeed usually holds the hand of justice back and waits a long time with wicked nations. Yea, in his wonderful patience and long-suffering he usually spares them so long as there is a small remnant to appear for him and oppose the prevailing corruption; and indeed he is sometimes represented as looking or seeking for some man to stand up publicly for the vindication of his claims as the sovereign ruler of the world in order that he may have some reason for deferring his act—his strange act of judgment.

4. Again, the sins of civil rulers render a nation guilty before God and bring trouble upon it. "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord." Nor should we think strange of this. If open immorality when practiced with impunity by a private citizen defiles a land or renders a nation guilty, how much more when practiced by the head of the body politic or by a ruler who acts in the name and as the representative of a nation. Even in hereditary governments history shows that kings and princes have not usually been guilty of gross acts of iniquity without some degree of complicity on the part of the people. They have either been reduced into their sin by the evil counsels of a predominant party among their people, or, on the other hand, they have seduced the people, or at least a majority of them, into an approval and support of their wicked conduct and policy. Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, not only sinned himself, but "made Israel to sin."—1 Kings 14:16. Manasseh "made Judah to sin in doing that which was evil in the sight of the Lord."—2 Kings 21:16.

But if nations are responsible for the sins of their rulers in hereditary governments, much more is this the case in a republican form of government like our own. Here the people are the direct source of all political power. They choose their own rulers, and that, usually, with a full knowledge of their personal character and of their sentiments and purposes in relation to State or national policy. And when these rulers prostitute their high position and their official power to the promotion of vice and immorality; when they frame mischief by law and execute it, they are only acting as the representatives of the will of the people. They are only doing what the people have chosen and empowered them to do. And how fearful is our responsibility as a people or nation in this respect.

5. Finally, we observe that sin becomes eminently national when it is established by law.

What are the laws of nations but expressions of the national will prescribing rules for the conduct of her citizens? Hence, when a nation through her representatives frames and sanctions a law which is contrary to the law of God, she sets her will above the will and authority of the Most High. Any law which either authorizes or requires a violation of the revealed will of God is a deliberate national rebellion against the government of him whose kingdom ruleth over all. And yet such laws have not been of rare occurrence, even in enlightened and Christian nations. When ungodly men wish to accomplish some wicked purpose or practice some system of iniquity, they usually endeavor to obtain some legislative enactment in its favor in order that they may practice it under the color of law. Hence the authority of existing laws has been made a pretext for the greatest crimes. "We have a law," said the crucifiers of Jesus, "and by our law he ought to die." —John 19:7.

It is not, however, any extenuation of sin, but rather a great aggravation of it, that it is practiced under the warrant and sanction of human law. It implies deliberation, combination and determination in an act of rebellion against the moral government of God. And such sin is not only a national sin, but a national sin of the most flagrant and aggravated character, on account of which God threatens the most fearful national judgments. See Isaiah 10:1–3.

What was the old slave code of our country but a system of unrighteous decrees to turn aside the needy from judgment and take away the right from the poor of the people. And God only fulfilled his own word when on account of this sin he brought the sword upon our land and laid many parts of it desolate by a cruel, fratricidal war. And what are all those laws which license and authorize the nefarious traffic of intoxicating liquors but unrighteous decrees to turn aside the needy from judgment and to take away the right from the poor of the people? All such laws are in direct conflict with the revealed will of God. They declare that to be lawful which God declares to be unlawful and upon which he pronounces a fearful woe: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and makes him drunken also."—Hab. 2:15. And if civil government was instituted for the punishment of evil doers, is it not a perversion of the very design of civil government to throw the shield of legal protection around a class of ungodly men who are willfully and deliberately destroying their fellowmen and subjecting their families to poverty and shame? — men who are mercenary speculators, thriving upon the vices and follies of others; men who relentlessly trade in tears and anguish and blood? The legalized traffic of intoxicating liquors is a great national crime. It defiles the land or renders the nation guilty before God. It cries for vengeance; and nothing but the legal prohibition of this traffic and the appropriate punishment of those who may engage in it can cleanse the land or deliver our nation from national guilt and national judgments.

We may farther observe that when a wicked law is enacted which requires us to violate the revealed will of God, we are in all ordinary cases to submit to the penalty, but never, never, obey the law. When the authority of man comes into conflict with the authority of God the path of duty is perfectly plain: We are always to obey God rather than men. Acts 5:29. Thus did Daniel when he was required by a royal statute to ask a petition of no God or man for thirty days, save of the King. It was for obeying wicked laws that God denounces a fearful judgment upon his people by the mouth of the prophet Micah: "The statutes of Omri are kept and all the works of the house of Ahab, and ye walk in their counsels, that I should make thee a desolation and the inhabitants thereof a hissing."—Micah 6:16.

REFORM NEWS.

—President C. A. Blanchard started on a hasty visit to New York Friday evening. He expects to attend the Michigan State Convention at Salem on his return.

—Rev. A. H. Springstein is engaged to speak at Eagle, Clinton county, Michigan, after the State Convention, on the 28th, 29th and 30th. He would be glad to make other engagements in that part of the State, before going to Sanilac and Tuscola counties. Address him at Eagle.

THE LODGE TRAMPS AND DR. LORIMER JUGGLES.

NOTES FROM THE GENERAL AGENT AT THE WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15, 1888.

Yesterday the colored Knight Templars and Knights of Pythias were on exhibit from "early morn to dewy eve." They were about fifty in number, and the most gaily uniformed companies I have ever seen. Headed by a band of music, they tramped up and down Pennsylvania Avenue, and over the principal streets of the city, passing near our N. C. A. headquarters at least five times. I inquired of several the purpose, and no one could tell, or suggest any good likely to result. It was a weary tramp in the interest of pride, pomp and paganism, at the expense of good morals, and doubtless the comforts of home to the families of some who strutted so grandly in gaudy uniforms.

In the evening I attended a branch of Central Mission, and by request led in the services. The man who started and by the help of God has kept this mission branch alive was himself converted less than three years ago. He was a despiser of the Word, and mocked the church and her living Head, and gave himself up to all manner of wickedness. When the "Gospel Wagon" came to the neighborhood, he, with others, went to see and hear and was soundly converted to God. He secured a small room and opened a Gospel meeting right in the midst of his old associates, and last evening he told us that 196 persons had professed conversion in that little room; that 160 of them are members in evangelical churches, and only one is known to have relapsed into his former life of sin. Before conversion, this brother belonged to the Odd-fellows; but when he saw and accepted Christ he abandoned his lodge and now says to the inquirer and to all, "You can't bring your lodges into this blessed kingdom. There is no room for secret societies here; they are unfruitful works of darkness, and you must give them all up for Christ's sake."

I spoke briefly with him of our mission, and the work upon which we are entering here, and need not add that he was deeply interested. His employers claim his time from 7 A. M. until 6 P. M., but with Bible in hand or in his pocket he finds odd moments to feast his own soul and prepare for the work of the evening. One touching and sad incident of the meeting was the entrance of a fine-looking, middle-aged man under the influence of liquor, accompanied by a little child two or three years old, I should judge. He remained reasonably quiet while I was talking, but seemed to wake up and grow restive when the singing and testimony services began. He finally insisted on leaving, and went out accompanied by the child and a young man. Soon the young man returned and gave his testimony: "Six weeks and four days ago," said he, "I gave my heart to Christ in this room. I was wild, wicked and miserable; but now I love the Lord and the mission, and am happy." Then, turning towards me, he said, "That man that went out from here intoxicated is my father, and I want you to pray for his conversion." A thousand thoughts of high license, low license, Congressional protection to this curse from hell, and of my own dear children, rushed through my mind, and I did pray from the depths of my soul, and reconsecrated my life to the Master and renewed my covenant to pray and work and vote against every man, measure and party that winks at or tolerates this insatiable demon, and for the men, women and party who seek prohibition and will not stay the hand until it is abolished from our Capitol city, and driven in perpetual exile from our whole land. May God hasten the day.

I am planning work here and finding friends every day. Nearly every one with whom I have talked, including college presidents and pastors as well as city missionaries, male and female, of various nationalities, denominations and complexions, favor an industrial Gospel mission work here, with no compromise with the lodge inscribed upon our banner, and all lines of nationality or color blotted out forever with the precious "blood that cleanseth from all sin." I have told the brethren and sisters who are ready for the work that I shall decide nothing in detail until I hear from the Board and Mrs. Stoddard comes, which I hope will be soon.

BAPTIST MISSION BOARDS.

The religious event of Washington this week is the meeting of the Baptist Mission Boards in convention. The press of the city gives a full program and announces the approach of whole train and boat loads of delegates from all parts of the country. Not knowing who was to preach I went with Bro. Hinman on Sabbath morning to Calvery Baptist church. Dr. Lorimer of Chicago was introduced by Dr. Green, the pastor, to deliver the annual address before the "Woman's Baptist Home Missionary Society." His subject was "The Power of the Cross." He was eloquent, of course, and prepared us to accept the cross as a symbol of Christianity by spending a half hour or more describing the symbolisms of divers peoples and religions in different parts and ages of the world. The circle, he said, represented eternity; the triangle, the Trinity; the square, rectitude among men; the blazing torch, immortality; and so on through an extended list, familiar to all who have read Masonic books. These explanations were accompanied by gestures found in the illustrated expositions of the secret orders, those of the Knight Templar degree, being most conspicuous. In fact, it seemed to me that the Dr. had mistaken the place for an encampment or conclave of "Sir Knights" during the first part of his address, and fancied himself posting up the brethren in the signs and symbolisms of the order.

At 3 o'clock my soul was greatly refreshed while listening to Bro. Hart and worshiping with the Free Methodists; 5:30 I joined the throng that gathered about the "Gospel Wagon" on Market Square and was delighted to hear the Gospel preached in "demonstration of the Spirit and in power," by men who two years and less ago scoffed and derided our holy religion. Some of the appeals to old comrades were very touching, and while the most perfect order prevailed, the response of uplifted hands must have thrilled with joy the hearts of those who have been so long and persistently praying, laboring and watching for tokens of our Lord's coming. The night meeting at the Central station was a time of refreshing; many testified that they had been led to Christ by the missionaries, and quite a number requested to be remembered in prayer. J. P. STODDARD.

LYNCHINGS AT VICKSBURG.

A brave colored pastor—The Negro must be protected—A grand opening for reform.

VICKSBURG, Miss., May 12, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Natchez I came here, and have entered upon a still hunt and find quite a number of friends to our cause. Among them is Rev. A. A. Hamilton, a reader of our Cynosure. He is a terror to the lodge power; he has been fighting them for more than a year, but only recently they came down to go up no more. There are revivals in all the colored churches, and more than 300 persons have accepted Christ as a personal Saviour within the past eight weeks.

During this time a sad thing happened. On the night of the 30th ult. an old man more than seventy years old was charged with robbing some white lady and committing an outrage upon her, for which he was brought to the city jail, and about eleven o'clock that night was taken from there to the court-house yard; and, after being drawn up several times to make him confess his crime (which he denied to the last), he was hanged and then his body taken back to the jail where a knife was used.

Responsible citizens (white) say that he said first, last, and all the time, "You're hanging an innocent man." A white man being impressed when he said, "You may hang me, but I am a Christian, and am going to heaven," pleaded for him. Then there was about to be a row among the mobbers because some wanted to hang him and some wanted to release him.

A pastor returning from church says he stood and listened, until he thought they would begin shooting among themselves, and so left for home. He said it was sad to hear that poor old man and his white friend (a prominent lawyer of this city) plead for his life. Some were for sparing his life, but the lawless hanged him.

They arrested another colored man and a white one. When lynching the white man was talked of, he was taken from the jail, given a horse and pistol, set free, and told to defend himself. Then a mob was organized to hang the other colored man, when Bro. Hamilton went to the sheriff and other prominent citizens, and asked that the man be given a trial, or the Negroes would go and be lynched with him. After visiting a goodly number of them, they confessed that it was wrong, and they would stop it, and so they did not hang him. One man could keep any number of persons out of the jail. Its walls are fourteen or fifteen feet high, with only one door.

Now, brother editor, your readers can see that the officers who are sworn to do their duty, in this case, as in many others, willingly gave up to a maddened mob, and allowed a man seventy years of age to be taken and lynched. We see the great need of a reformation in the politics of the country. We need politics with a spark of religion in them, less liquor and less prejudice.

Mr. D. B. Temple, B. L., a former student of Straight University, who practices here, says, "Any party that will give the Negro protection of life can get his support." He is willing to work for a party that will do something to help us. God grant that our Prohibitionists may declare against this great wrong. We don't ask special legislation, but a chance. When crime is committed, the guilty party should suffer for it; but first know that he is guilty after a trial by a jury of his peers, and not by "Judge Lynch."

I am to lecture here on the nights of the 14th and 15th on prohibition and reform. The W. C. T. U. convention at Natchez agreed to begin work anew among the colored people.

Bro. A. A. Hamilton will distribute tracts or any other literature that may be sent him. He has withstood an organized mob in an adjoining county, and succeeded in breaking up their robbing scheme. It is truly wonderful how God is raising up friends for the cause everywhere.

After a conference with a number of preachers and brethren to-day, we were made to say, "The work is the Lord's and it must go on." We shall have another conference with the pastors on Monday and try to put all to work. If some of our Cynosure readers will write a word to Bro. Hamilton, he can be so encouraged as to go forward in this conflict. He has the grace and courage to assert his convictions.

This, the hill city of the South, is the birth-place of the Knights of Pythias among the colored people. It was founded some years ago by Dr. Stringer, a leading minister of the A. M. E. church, also G. M. of the Masons of this State, also the founder of other smaller societies. More of the Baptist pastors of this State are Masons than any State I know of. They were, as a rule, "made free of charge," so as to be used to assist in robbing and getting up the other side shows. Therefore, they have been often used to rob their poor people, "On the Square." Bro. H. has called a halt, and all seem to be thoughtfully considering matters. We truly hope our friends will send some literature to Bro. Hamilton. Sister M. A. Bell, formerly Miss M. A. Temple, a student of Oberlin, is willing to help sow the seeds of reform here.

LATER.—I lectured twice yesterday (Sunday) and the subject was "Secrecy an injury to God's church." At each meeting I had a Bible reading, and had crowded houses, and at two different churches. Men shook my hand and said, "God has sent you here." It did seem that new life permeated many hearts. Surely God is in this place. Pray for us. Yours for Jesus, L. G. JORDAN.

OUR NEW ORLEANS LETTER.

OUR AGENT DILIGENT IN HIS BUSINESS—THE COLORED PASTORS HOLDING TO THE TRUTH—LODGE PARADES DWINDLING.

NEW ORLEANS, May 12th, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath was a gala day here with the society people. The Knights of Pythias, colored, had their parade in the early part of the day and their sermon was preached at St. James A. M. E. church. Although their would-be grand parade had been announced for some time, they had very few in line. The Young Men's Crescent Benevolent Association, Jrs., paraded the principal back streets and had their banner christened and sermon preached at Pleasant Plain M. E. church. Also an organization of young white men paraded all the principal back streets until after 6 P. M. The Y. M. C. B. A., Jr., had little boys in uniform parading, from six years of age. It is very strange to see children of Christian parents parading and desecrating God's holy Sabbath, while the parents are in church, crying, Hallelujah!

I attended covenant meeting at Tulare Avenue Baptist church, Rev. A. S. Jackson, pastor, at 11 A. M., and preached at Shiloh Baptist church, Rev. H. C. Green, pastor, at 7:30 P. M. Bro. Green seems to be working more earnestly in the interest of our reform than any other pastor in the city. Although the secretists circulated frivolous reports about him after the N. C. A. convention, he has succeeded in breaking the great teeth of the old lion in his church. We have adopted a plan: "Give up your lodge or church."

The annual State convention of the Freewill Baptists met in the First Freewill Baptist church, Rev. Guy Watson, pastor, Friday, May 4th, Rev. Dr. E. S. Manning of Michigan, moderator; Rev. M. L Diggs, secretary. Several resolutions were adopted relative to intemperance, better systems of education, etc. Nine-tenths of the ministers of this convention are opposed to secrecy.

The secretists are not quite so boisterous in their processions as they have been heretofore. The secret Tabernacles had a funeral Tuesday and although there were several lodges represented, and one benevolent association, there were not more than thirty-five women and six men. If our anti-secret brethren will just rally and organize an auxiliary here, and some good Christian who has some of the Lord's money to spare will just send free tracts and the Cynosure, we will soon behold Baal's altars tumbling down.

The Normal class of Leland University graduated six young students Tuesday night at Tulane Avenue Baptist church. Drs. Mitchell, Berger, Marsh, Jackson, Hitchcock, and the University Board of Trustees were conspicuous on the platform. The orations and essays were very interesting.

Rev. R. Kendricks besought me not to return to Amite City next Sabbath as he had important business to call him to Natchez. However, he encouraged me much, and is anxious for me to come up as soon as possible after his return. If any of our Louisiana brethren desire to have me come and lecture for their people in hall or church, let them arrange for meetings and write me at No. 152 Clara street, New Orleans.

I called on Rev. J. C. Young, formerly pastor of Melphomene St. Baptist church; but since the death of his wife he has given up pastoral labors, being much afflicted. He had heard nothing of the N. C. A. or the Cynosure, but he has always been opposed to the lodge. He very readily subscribed for the Cynosure and said it would greatly help him to fight against secret orders.

I preached Wednesday at 7:30 P. M. at the Evangelist Baptist church, Rev. J. G. Wracks, pastor. I spoke of the Odd-fellows' picnic for Thursday and besought the Christians not to patronize such immoral entertainments, neither allow their sons and daughters to patronize them. Both pastor and congregation endorsed my sermon.

The 22nd anniversary of the Grand United Order of Odd-fellows was celebrated Thursday by a long, weary parade during the day and an all-night picnic at the fair ground. The seed of immortality sown at such unseasonable places will bear fruit and bring sorrow to many hearts. The secretists had all the costly uniforms they could afford. Although the Baalamites had predicted this to be the grandest parade of secretists in the city, and the twelve lodges of the city and many others from different parts of this State and Alabama turned out, yet I counted only 178 in all, ranging from white aprons to Great-Grand-Fathers and Patriarchs. Men were heard saying, "Well, yes; I'se a Mason, and Odd-fellow too, but all they want is a man's money. So I've left them." I heard several make this statement.

A lady accosted me very intelligently and said, "Sir, the Butler lodge, the very oldest one in the State, has not got thirty men in the procession." I told her the whole thing was an expensive nuisance. She replied, "Yes, sir, although I am of the Household of Ruth, it is a perfect nuisance, and if they would take money they throw away parading and take care of their poor and sick, they would do better; but they won't do it." Several preachers and a goodly number of professed Christians helped to swell their number to 178. I met a minister on Canal street who said to me, "You will be converted to them again when you see this procession."

Bro. Green and I called on Rev. B. Boezinger. He is very earnest and thinks Bro. Jackson ought to have called the committee appointed at the N. C. A. Convention together and taken some action in our State work.

I preached at the First Free Mission Baptist church of Carrolton, Rev. H. Davis, pastor, Thursday. After services Revs. Acox, Harris, Ellis and Ferguson came up to me and shook hands, saying, "You have preached a noble sermon, and you have hit the nail right on the head." Rev. Ferguson said, "You spoke to the secret society people just right. There are a great many of them in this church. I have been a member of the Odd-fellows, but I have left them."

I distributed tracts to all in the church. The majority of the congregation, which was large and enthusiastic, heartily endorsed my sermon.. Press forward, brethren, the Lord is on our side.

F. J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LESSON FROM SOLOMON.

KINGSTON, Ill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I find in your columns of May 3rd that the matter of the American Prohibition candidates for office are in an unsettled state, which I think should be set in order as soon as possible. Our government without a Solomon type of ruling power is no better than an Absalom government, which the house of Israel was cursed with for a time, and we likewise have the Masonic; and now, since this Masonic or Absalom government is hung up between the heaven and the earth, that is, exposed to the public gaze, the better part of the people say, "Cursed be Masonry." But there is a failure to see who next is to take the reins of power. Roman Catholicism and Odd-fellowship combined will fill the place of Adonijah, the brother of Absalom.

Now, as God has promised the good time so long looked and hoped for, and has brought this nation into existence for this express purpose, why can we not dare to be right and be true to God and his government? Why not show our colors as Solomon's mother (i. e., the church) did? The church in America may enjoy the same blessings she then enjoyed, namely, a government of peace and prosperity, because the righteous rule. Yours for the glory of God,

M. L. WORCESTER.

PENNSYLVANIANS, FORWARD, MARCH!

DEAR FRIENDS:—You have seen our brother Chalfant's plans for a reorganization of this grand old State for Virtue, Liberty and Independence. Your hearts respond, Yes, it should be done. Now, what does the Lord Jesus ask of you? Are you ready for the sacrifice? You know the cause is a righteous one; that the infidelity of church and state call for a radical reform, and that at once; for the Lord "shall suddenly come to his temple....But who may abide the day of his coming?" "And behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man as his work shall be." What is our work? "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." The sword is in the land, and some souls once alive for God are so enveloped by the lodge octopus that they are in danger. Does their position affect you? Then warn them of the error of their way lest you be rebuked in the judgment. You are the Lord's stewards; then dispense freely of his gifts in warning his creatures (your brothers by nature) of the terrible opiate they have taken, and sound the alarm to those whose minds have been poisoned till they are almost persuaded to take the fatal step.

Come, brethren, "cast your bread upon the waters;" it may return to save your own child or your neighbor. We are not all called of God to go forth and "cry aloud and spare not," to lift up the voice like a trumpet, to "tell the house of Israel their sins," but we are told the laborer is worthy his hire. Two or three cannot find the means to equip the messengers of the Lord, publish tracts and pay incidentals, while others as well or better able, hoard up the Lord's money to their own avarice.

If you would see the Pennsylvania State Anti-secret organization resuscitate and do as the Lord Jesus would have (not start up spasmodically, to settle back into worse darkness than before), pray the Lord with single eye and heart, How much, O Lord, shall I send the treasurer in your name to lift the veil from off my brother's eyes.

I have been appointed treasurer of the State organization. Bro. Chalfant has printed some tracts, and been to other trouble and expense,—for himself? No, sir! but for his neighbor. I do not, neither do you, wish that he should be at his own charges in this matter. Men are ready to go into the field to enlighten the masses, but they must be fed and clothed; they can't live without sustenance for themselves and families; it must be supplied by the Lord's stewards.

Postoffice orders, postoffice notes, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s notes payable to me at Custer City. American exchange or U. S. exchange notes payable to me at Bradford. To all local checks please add the exchange or they will cost twenty-five cents here. Give us a hearty response and the good Lord will warm your souls. Now, brethren and sisters, remember this homely appeal is for Jesus's sake. Who is the Lord's steward?

J. C. YOUNG, Treasurer.

ELDER R. SMITH'S MISSION WORK.

CHICAGO, May 14, 1888.

To all God's Workers:—It is just a month to-day since wife and I left our home by divine appointment to do our part in securing the right of way for our God through this ungodly world. God has national rights; sure he has his way in his church. We find the devil is getting very uneasy in cities and in the hearts of men, where he has had his way for so long. "He knows his time is short." He is not going to retire without making all the trouble he can.

In this short month we have worked in three States, preached in eight cities and towns, with extra street meetings. We have preached the funeral sermon of one (a strong man), once a lawyer and preacher, whom the devil damned by strong drink. We preached in the cars on seven lines of railroad, where we received wonderful encouragement from strangers. In this time we helped close three saloons, and made many a drug-store man think of woe; have helped many a fallen one, men and women, to return to God, and let Jesus turn whisky and the devil out of them. I find the devil is so stirred in this city that he don't pretend to sleep day nor night, but works only as a devil can.

In our next letter we will mention a few of the means Satan employs in these last days to curse the world. We hope in the same letter to make plain that, though sin and the devil now abound, God and his grace shall much more abound. We can spend only one week in Chicago, then expect to go on to Ohio. We are having blessed meetings here; we find work for a life-time here, but must move on, as our King's business requires haste. Pray for us that God's Word may have free course, run and be glorified.

R. SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

LODGES INCREASING.

Last year the M. E. preacher at De Kalb, Ill., went to Sycamore on the first of the week and took some degrees in knighthood, and on the next Sunday night lectured to the Knights Templar, and then had a banquet to close with. The Sycamore Knights hired a railroad train to run to De Kalb and take them there. This looks to me like an outrage on our civil and religious institutions, and a gross violation of the Sabbath. And as the M. E. church takes advanced ground on Sabbath desecration, preachers that join in such anti-Christian flummery and deception ought to be called to an account for unchristian conduct. I learned a short time since that a Free Will Baptist preacher and son were going to join the Masons, and they are making great efforts to rope in all they can, and have some success. The Odd-fellows are making great efforts to fill up their ranks and have succeeded in duping a good number. With all the work of opposition and light given, these societies on the whole are increasing, and from present indications I fear they will capture the Prohibition party, and bring it to the aid of secretism or Romanism, directly or indirectly.

Ventilate the papal question thoroughly, as I think it is the most deadly foe to all our liberties and interests we have to contend with.—(Rev.) M. W. JORDAN, Cortland, Ill.

FOR THE LEAGUE.

To all whom it may concern: I, Joseph O. Risheill, pastor of Thomas county circuit or mission Free Methodist church, do depose and say that for fifteen years I have not voted for a lodge-tainted candidate, large or small, knowing them to be such, and propose never to do so. I am an anti-lodge prohibitionist, Anti-mason, anti rum, tobacco, opium, Mormon and all sin. Put my name down as a leaguer.—J. O. RISHIELL, Colby, Kans.

KANSAS CLIMATE.

In this part of Kansas we have rain enough, but the temperature is changeable. Some days the degree is 90 or 92, next day drops to 40 and even 30. The last morn of April we had our last ice; 3d of May last frost, though harmless. To-day is rainy and quite cool, 54, wind northerly. But human society throughout the State is far more disturbed; the outlook is bad. I entertain a hope that the Cynosure will survive the storm.—S, Talmage, Kans.

LITERATURE.

THE STORY OF THE EARTH AND MAN. By Sir John W. Dawson, LL. D., F. R. S. Pp. 195. Price 40 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

Sir John W. Dawson, better known as Principal Dawson of McGill University of Montreal, is one of the ablest of modern geologists, and one of the most attractive of writers on scientific subjects. He belongs to the school of Lyell, Agassiz, and Dana, rather than that of Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndall. In this work he deals with one of the most wonderful problems which have ever been presented to the human mind, and tells the story in a manner worthy of a theme so sublime. He supplies the knowledge which is sought for by the thorough student, and presents it in a manner that is fascinating even to the unscientific reader. This work has, therefore, a popular value not to be found in a college text-book, which the general reader can immediately appreciate. The geological discussions are conducted in a most reverent manner, and the constant superintending power of God is traced in the whole story of creative ages, and especially in the concluding work when man appeared. The writer refutes the evolutionists and maintains the simple statement of Scripture that man was created by God in his own image.

The American Copyright League of New York is endeavoring to educate public opinion on the subject of an international copyright, for which all American authors are besieging Congress. The pamphlet, "Cheap Books and Good Books," by Brander Mathews, is an excellent presentation of the case, and is, moreover, prepared by a writer of ability, for whose use an ample stock of varied and useful information has been supplied.

The recent international convention of women in Washington is the subject of a breezy article in the May Cosmopolitan, by Miss Ethel Ingalls, the brilliant daughter of the famous Senator. The portraits of the most celebrated delegates, and the flow of clever personal descriptions combine to form a most readable paper. Another of the journalistic strokes which distinguishes this young magazine from its older companions, is an interesting illustrated article on the New Consolidated Exchange of New York City. Apropos of the late floods which have devastated China, W. H. Gilder, the N. Y. Herald correspondent in China in the late Chinese war, contributes a valuable account of the Hoang-Ho and its destructive vagaries, illustrated by a picture of the river and a map of its nine different courses. Some idea may be gained of the enormous calamities indicated by this diagram when we learn that in the last overflow about three million lives were lost. The traveler, Wolf Von Schierbrand, furnishes a pleasing sketch about "Children in Persia," and Joel Benton gives many amusing specimens of "What Our Grandfathers Laughed at Two Hundred Years Ago." The colored pictures of the Faust legend, showing Mephistopheles with Margaret and in the witch's kitchen, and of the Japanese demons and Persian devils are the most finished and attractive color work that has yet appeared in this enterprising magazine. They illustrate Moncure D. Conway's article on the legends of the origin of the devil.

In the American Magazine for May, William Eleroy Curtis, a well known correspondent for the Chicago press, begins a series of illustrated articles on "The Oldest of American Cities." The first paper deals largely with Carthagena, which was the first city founded on the continent, although several colonies had previously been established on the nearby islands and a fortress had been built at Panama. The city became the rendezvous of the Spanish galleons that went to South America for treasure, and consequently a most tempting field for pirates. The second and concluding paper on "The Belles of Old Philadelphia," by Charlotte Adams, contains some charming descriptions of the grace and beauty that existed in that favored city about the time of the Revolution. Among them is a portrait and sketch of Mrs. Rush, wife of the celebrated Dr. Benjamin Rush, who old John Adams used to say was next to Washington in Revolutionary times. Her son Richard was the eminent statesman and Anti-masonic writer. A startling article entitled "My Dream of Anarchy and Dynamite" is by a gentleman of whom the editor states that "the author is a well-known writer who stands very high in military, social and political circles, but whose name is withheld at his request." The article itself professes to be an expose of the plottings of the Anarchists, and the avowed object of its publication is to so arouse the public sentiment that has been lulled to sleep by the delusive absence of open demonstrations, that the enactment will immediately be forced of laws for the suppression of both anarchy and dynamite. The utter inadequacy of the present laws, and of the police and military preventive measures, is forcibly shown, and effectual remedies are presented.

The Library Magazine for May reproduces George W. Cable's celebrated article on "The Negro Question in the United States" which first appeared in the Contemporary Review. It is the latest thought of this celebrated and eloquent writer whose articles, "The Silent South" and others in the Century some time since were among the most popular and powerful attacks ever made on the caste system in our Southern States. The second part of Minister Phelps's article on our Constitution also has a place. "The Chinese in Australia" is timely, since only last week the first official attempt to prevent the landing of Chinamen was made in Australia. Other articles are "Hans Sachs, the Bard of Nuremberg" and of the Lutheran Reformation, "A Model Factory," "The Education of the Emotions" by Frances Power Cobbe, "A Pleading for the Worthless" by Cardinal Manning.

The U. S. Indian Commissioner, Mr. Atkins, finds it necessary to make a strong defense against the popular attacks upon his order to teach the English language only in the Indian schools. He issues from the Indian office, Washington, a pamphlet entitled "Correspondence on the Subject of Teaching the Vernacular in Indian Schools," to answer all objectors and critics.

OBITUARY.

DELILAH CRALL was born in Crawford Co., Ohio, March 10th, 1834, and died at her home near Berrien Center, Mich., April 30th, 1888, aged 54 years, 1 month and 20 days.

She was the daughter of Andrew and Mary Hess, and was married to Jacob B. Crall, October 18th, 1855. To them were born four children, three daughters and one son, all living. The deceased sought and found the Saviour when quite young, and united with the Evangelical Lutheran church, of which her parents were members. In the year 1856, soon after she was married, she with her husband joined the United Brethren church, of which both were members for twenty-five years. During the last seven years of her life she has been a member of the Wesleyan Methodist connection. This church relationship was entered into by her and her husband, and part of the children, because they could endorse more fully the doctrinal views and rulings of this church, especially that part relating to the total exclusion from its pales, of all members of organized secret combinations. She died as she lived, and her life was a living witness that Christ has power on earth to save. Her light was not hid behind tyled doors, but always open to inspection—as a city set upon a hill. Her sun went down surrounded with a halo of glory.

J. B. CRALL.

AGRIPPA DOW, father of Roswell Dow, Sycamore, Ill., and grandfather of Miss Elsie S. Dow, lady principal of Wasioja Seminary, died on the 5th of April, 1888, at the age of 94 years.

He was born in Hanover, N. H., June 27, 1794. He was married on the 7th of January, 1823, to Polly Storrs, daughter of Augustus Storrs, of Hanover, N. H., she dying on the 6th of November, 1885; they living together nearly sixty-three years. They removed from New Hampshire to Sycamore, Ill., in 1847, forty-one years ago. Both retained full possession of their faculties and a happy cheerfulness of spirits to the last day of their lives. They lived to do good to others and "to lend a hand," and all who have ever known them arise and call them blessed.

Mr. Dow was never a strong man physically, but it is believed that he never was confined to his bed a single day by sickness till the second day before his death. Born when Washington was yet the first President of the United States, he has lived during nearly the whole of the first century of the existence of our nation under a constitutional government. Instead of living in the past as is so common with aged people, he has always lived in the present and took an interest in passing events to the last week of his life. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dow died as they had often wished they might die, without a protracted sickness, and both have left behind them none but pleasant recollections.

FARM NOTES.

ONION CULTURE—SEEDS AND SETS.

Even where onions can be readily raised from seeds, many prefer the sets. The crop is more sure, much of the early weeding is avoided, and, above all, the planting may be done in autumn when the work need not be hurried. The soil is made as rich as for seed, and thoroughly fine and mellow by the harrow and rake. Rows 12 inches apart are marked off, and the sets planted at three or four inches apart. They are thrust down into the mellow soil with the thumb and finger, taking care to get them right end up. Finish by passing a light roller or the back of a wooden rake over the rows. Each seventh mark is left unplanted; this leaves an alley from which the weeding may be done. If the sets are not planted in the fall, they should be as early in spring as the ground can be worked.

Onions differ from most other crops in not requiring a rotation. In some places the land has been in onions annually for half a century. If the crop is to be grown for the first time, newly cleared land is best, and next to that, soil which has been in corn or potatoes. A good, deep, rich loam, is essential, as is heavy manuring. Fifty loads of stable manure to the acre are an ordinary manuring, and may be supplemented by ashes, bone flour, or guano, as a top dressing. The seeds should be sown very early; should be of the previous year's growth, and from a reliable raiser. The rows are a foot apart, leaving every seventh for a path, and from three to six pounds of seed are sown to the acre. On land not before in onions, thin sowing is better than thick. After sowing, roll the surface. Some sow an ounce or two of radish seed with every pound of onion seed. The radishes come up in a few days and mark the rows so that a hand-cultivator or push-hoe can be run close to the rows even before the onions are up.—American Agriculturist.

IMPROVING OLD CURRANT BUSHES.

Two years ago, writes one of our correspondents from Wisconsin, I secured an old garden. Along one side of it there was a row of stunted currant bushes, the life of which had been nearly choked out by the grass in which they stood. The leaves were covered with worms, and they presented a sorry appearance. At first I thought I would dig them up and plant new ones. An examination of the roots convinced me that they were comparatively healthy, and I concluded to cut the tops back, clean out about them, and see what good cultivation would do towards reclaiming them. I had the ground spaded up, turning the sod under, and gave the soil a good top-dressing of manure, digging in a quantity about each plant. I cut off all the old tops and waited for developments. Very soon sprouts made their appearance from each bunch of roots, and of these I selected four or five of the best, and kept all others pinched off during the season. They made a vigorous growth. I allowed the hens to run among the bushes, and they proved better than hellebore in keeping the worms away. That fall I spread a lot of litter about the plants, and this spring I dug it in about them, and have given the ground among the bushes a liberal coating of chip-dirt from the wood yard. I allow the hens to wallow in it, believing that they will pick up all the larvæ that may be lurking there. The plants have blossomed wonderfully, and every stem was heavily set with fruit. Old bushes can be reclaimed, after years of neglect, by a little care and cultivation.—American Agriculturist.

THE TOMATO.—Tomato plants should be set out about the 1st of June; the ground should have been made very rich, and if it is kept free from weeds, no further attention will be required. Just before frost the vine may be taken up with all the earth that can be kept adhering to the root, and transferred to the cellar, where all the full grown tomatoes not already picked will ripen. The essayist has seen perfect ripe tomatoes of most excellent quality on the table at Thanksgiving, which had been ripened in this way. There are so many good varieties of this vegetable that it is hard to make a selection. Three or four dozen plants may be required in order to furnish a good supply all summer; they should be set eight feet apart, and will occupy about two rows such as described.—Vick's Magazine.

"Death has so many doors to let out life," sang an old time poet. In those days they had not discovered remedies that shut these doors. How different is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, from the old time doses. Consumption or lung-scrofula, is one wide door that it shuts, if taken in time. Don't waste a moment then, lest life slip through that open door.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D.D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M. MILLIGAN, D.D.:—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowery Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS. LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER AND THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 24, 1888

JOSEPH COOK, the Boston lecturer, spoke in the College Chapel, Wheaton, Monday evening of the present week. Our readers who have not had the great pleasure of hearing this wonderful man may expect to see his portrait and read some account of his life in our next number.

SECRETARY STODDARD continues to write thrilling letters of the encouragement he has at Washington, where Mrs. Stoddard is soon to join him; and if prevailing prayer is offered and "the Spirit poured upon us from on high," those stupendous revivals, which Albert Barnes says are what we are to pray for and expect, will sweep away those ancient idolatrous mysteries in their modern forms and names; and Prof. Bailey's "Central Union Mission" and Gospel wagon will be a part of the work at No. 215 4½ street, lit by the same fire from heaven.

REV. A. J. BAILEY of Ogden, Utah, writes that six Christian denominations have held a Christian Convention at Salt Lake and gives a vivid description of the evils of Mormonism and a cheering account of the labors of ministers and churches in Utah for its overthrow. Mr. Bailey was an active and ardent young member of the Aurora (Ill.) convention, Oct. 31st, 1867. We should have been glad if some notice had been taken of the fact that the prophet Joseph Smith was a Freemason in New York, where Mormonism started, and that a Mormon lodge existed at Nauvoo, but its charter was taken away by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, because Smith instituted a stop degree to keep out Masons from Mormon lodges while Mormons could go into theirs; and that the endowment houses are the Masonic temples of Utah. But the late ministerial convention at Salt Lake as reported by Mr. Bailey takes no note of Mormon Masonry. This gives us fear lest some of the Utah ministers are themselves Masons. The first Christian minister who preached at Salt Lake was a Congregationalist, Norman McLeod, a Royal Arch Mason. Of course Mormons despise a minister who preaches against Mormonism and practices Masonry. They are the same thing with different names and forms; and, what is more, God and angels abhor him. Will our good brother Bailey give us some light on this subject?

SOURCE OF FREEMASONRY.

The Christian Conservator has an interesting and able letter from Rev. H. J. Becker, who writes from Egypt, March 24th last, and gives the following graphic description of the state of society there, from facts of many years of which he was an eye-witness:

"Polygamy is in practice everywhere in Egypt. Four wives is the limit. When the man becomes tired of one, he casts her off, and buys another. The four favorites are often seen riding together on a two-wheeled cart, and the poor cast off creature, barefooted and but half clad, with head uncovered (chastity no longer protected) walking in the rear to serve the younger wives. "Four," say they, "Mohammed taught is all they can love at one time." The woman has no choice. The man and the father of the woman consummate the contract, and at midnight she is carried to his "harem," not knowing who it is till she enters the den in which every vestige of womanhood is hopelessly destroyed."

Our readers know that all standard Masonic writers derive "the mysteries" from Egypt through Greece and Rome down to the Freemasonry of the present day. Its baptism particularly, the Scottish Rite vaunts, is derived from the religion which existed before the pyramids. The above quotation from Rev. Mr. Becker's letter to the Conservator shows how foul the fountain from which Freemasonry flows; and the stream is not clearer than its fountain. The present deluge of secretism now flooding the United States is a moral copy and transcript of the mysteries in the time of our Saviour and his apostles, named Eleusinian from Eleusis, a town some thirty miles from Athens, where was a temple of Ceres. They had spread over the world and constituted most of the worship of their gods, each one of whom had a secret worship known only to the initiated. (Mackey's Lexicon, p. 315.) Once a year almost all Greece marched in procession to Eleusis. They marched, they danced, they sung, they initiated; in short, the processions and nightly picnics now covering the South, making night hideous, are exactly copied by the Negroes of the South; and now, as in Paul's day, "it is a shame even to speak of the things which are done of them in secret." And all these abominations and frivolities are pompously practiced in the name of religion. Now when the Pentecost revivals started the apostles met these secret mysteries in open, square antagonism: at Mars Hill, they denounced them; at Lystra, where Barnabas was to be Jupiter and Paul Mercury, they told them to "turn from these vanities." Acts 14: 15. Paul commanded to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Eph. 5: 11. And in 1 Cor. 10: 20, Paul told the disciples their cups and tables used in their picnics were cups and tables of devils.
